recommendation to assist in preventing that death in the future, an inquest is usually held.

In saying that, I must say it is not the responsibility of the coroner to enact safety legislation in Ontario. That is the responsibility of the Minister of Labour. Many of the recommendations that come out of a coroner's inquest result in certain actions and steps being taken to avoid that type of accident in the future.

The honourable member referred to figures in supporting the amendment that there should be inquests in all work places.

All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, according to the figures of last year, as already has been said, there were 26,985 investigations and out of that there were 282 inquests.

All I am saying is, the information I have from the coroner is that if we have inquests in every accidental death, instead of 282 inquests you are talking about 5,000 or 6,000 inquests. That is the difference.

Mr. Lupusella: That's impossible.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is the coroner's feeling that many of these inquests would be unnecessary.

Now, the honourable member referred, I believe, to 226, Workmen's Compensation Board injuries—

Mr. Bounsall: And work place deaths.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —and work place deaths. I would suggest if not all, nearly all of those would have been subject to an inquest. Certainly, with the amendment proposed by the member for York Centre, I would think just about 100 per cent of those would be subject to an inquest.

When the honourable member is talking about the work place, he is talking about a cab driver, he is talking about a store clerk and he is talking about somebody working in a restaurant. If a doctor or coroner attending that investigation said, "Well, I know how this woman or this man died. There is no question, from the information I have, as to how that woman died," regardless of that, you are asking that there be a mandatory inquest, and there be a jury and panel and all the structure of an inquest for three or four or five days.

As the member for York Centre suggests, people will be getting sick and tired of hearing about inquests. You won't get the coverage and the importance attached to an inquest that you get today with the selective procedure that is applied by the chief coroner.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What about the factories?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Certainly, where you want recommendations, valid recommendations to prevent a recurrence, prevent that type of accident, those inquests will be held. But you are saying all work places. When you say that I think you are going to undermine what very positive objectives you may be trying to achieve.

All I am saying is rather than double the staff of the coroner's office and have inquests 365 days a year, the amendment proposed by the member for York Centre covers those areas where the member for Dovercourt expressed some concern to me after we have finished the debate on the second reading.

The provisions, the criteria and the legislation at the present time, in my opinion, coupled with the fact of the minister's option and the option of the next of kin, provides that where inquests should be held, they are held.

Mr. Bounsell: Let me just reply very briefly to the minister on that.

I am still a little confused as to why the minister is taking such a hard line on this. He reports 282 inquests took place this past year. He says that of those 226 deaths which did occur in the work place, the vast majority of them would have been investigated and, therefore, would have been part of that 282.

Mr. Lupusella: Where is the problem?

Mr. Bounsell: Where is this doubling of staff? Where is this great loss in press coverage which is going to occur if we require it in this bill, when he says it is his very good guess that most of those 226 deaths will in fact be part of the 282?

We are not talking of a very big additional number, if any, that haven't been investigated.

We have asked the minister, from the second reading debate right on, including today, why doesn't he build in a discretionary phrase for the coroner? We are quite willing to accept that.

[5:00]

In that very obvious case—and I am not sure what it would be—that needs no inquest after the investigation, the coroner can, right in this bill, be granted the discretion not to continue with an inquest. Very few would fall into that category because the minister himself makes a very good guess that most of those 226 deaths are included in the 282 figure of last year. He's consulted with his staff several times this afternoon, and that must have been one of the questions being transferred back. If this committee stage were taking place outside the House in committee, we would no doubt be asking the staff and the chief coroner just exactly how many of those 226 deaths which occurred in the work place are included in the 282. That is an easily obtainable answer. It wouldn't be a good educated guess by the minister but an exact number. We would know whether we're talking about eight, 10 or 12 as that difference, which I would guess is the number we're talking about.

Does the minister have the exact number difference? He said he is sure most of the 226 deaths are encompassed in the 282 already done. Does he have the actual figure? It should be very easily obtainable.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I'm not sure if we have that. I can get that for the honourable member, but that isn't the point. I'm not concerned if that figure of 282 was 300. That isn't what is concerning me about the amendment proposed by the NDP. I'm looking at the figure of 26,985. That's the number of investigations.

It is my information that of that figure, about 5,000 to 6,000 could have been accidental death investigations. If your amendment carries you'll have to have 6,000 inquests. That's what I'm saying.

Mr. Lupusella: What you are talking about is impossible.

Mr. Stong: Nonsense.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Let's see the statistics. Why don't you table these statistics?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. M. Davidson: The amendment relates to a work place.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The amendment very clearly says in the work place. Your figure of 5,000 or 6,000 accidental deaths is not the figure we should be talking about. The only figure we should have in mind today is the number of accidental deaths in the work place.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Right.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If you have some statistics from 1977, or from this year, that show that figure is substantially higher than 226, please table them and then it may well be that this party might reconsider its position. But if all you can offer is a set of statistics, 5,000 or 6,000 accidental deaths which have no relevance whatsoever to the point at stake today, I think you should accept the amendment.

Mr. Foulds: If I could help clarify the minister's fuzzy thinking, I think his worry is that maybe someone should accidentally die in a shopping mall, for example, which is a work place, who is not a worker in that work place.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, no; I am talking about a clerk working in the work place.

Mr. Foulds: A clerk is a worker, who is working in the work place; but you are worried we will have to have an investigation if there is a customer involved.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, there has to be an investigation now; it is the inquest that you clarify. It is investigated, most investigations are mandatory now; you want an inquest in each case.

Mr. Foulds: Okay. You are worried there will have to be full inquest for every accidental death that takes place in the work place, whether it is a worker or not.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, only if it is a worker.

Mr. Foulds: Okay; what you are saying is you don't want workers' deaths investigated. Is that what you're saying? You don't want an inquest.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, I'm not saying that. They are all investigated. That is what you can't seem to clarify in your thinking.

Mr. Foulds: You do not want an inquest into all workers' deaths in the work place, is that what you're saying?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That's right.

Mr. Bounsall: It isn't though.

Mr. Foulds: Then I'm saying to you, you are using false and misleading statistics, because in the definition my colleague is using—he's using the word "worker" and "in the work place," and because they are both used in the same clause his figure of 226 is the sound and correct figure. Your figure of 5,000 is highly and erroneously inflated.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Dovercourt.

Mr. Lupusella: If I may, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Before you speak, might I caution the members that the debate is getting somewhat repetitive and the rules indicate that when persons speak again—

Mr. Walker: Totally repetitive.

Mr. Deputy Chairman:—they must have new information.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, with respect, it seems that the Solicitor General is trying to confuse the issue using the wrong figures.

Mr. Walker: Totally repetitive, you are right.

Mr. Lupusella: The 226 deaths taking place every year in the province of Ontario is the figure that has been released by the Workmen's Compensation Board so we are not inventing this total number of industrial deaths.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is only the Workmen's Compensation Board, not a dolly in a store.

Mr. Foulds: The what in a store?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Not a worker in the store.

Mr. Foulds: Dolly, did you say?

Mr. Lupusella: We didn't invent those numbers, and if you want a breakdown on those accidents, those industrial deaths—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Stick to your figures, stick to your statistics.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, if the Solicitor General would like to have a breakdown about those industrial deaths: in 1977 we had just 35 mining deaths, 35; let's see what other people died on the job. Seven people died in farming; 41 people died in construction and 67 died in manufacturing industries, industrial accidents. We are not talking about the small store or a plaza where people do their shopping. We are talking about the work place.

I am sure in a little store you will never find people usually—and I want to underline the word "usually"—dying as a result of an accident. That is understandable. I don't see why you should appear really up tight about this particular situation.

On the figure released by the Solicitor General on the previous estimates—that 26,900 cases had been investigated by coroners—I am sure the 226 people dying on the job which we are now talking about had been investigated in 1977 anyway.

The only difference, the principle which is incorporated in our amendment, is that we are calling for an inquest to find out the cause of the death so that those particular recommendations coming forward from that inquest will serve this government to implement regulations so that no further deaths will take place in the work place.

Why should you feel uneasy about it? It is really important, because the Coroners Act speaks to the principle that we have to investigate deaths to preserve people's lives. Our amendment, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Solicitor General reflects the principle by which the coroner operates in the province of Ontario.

How can you preserve people's lives when you don't want to call an inquest or you don't want to investigate these deaths? It's against the principle in which the coroner is acting, and that's why our amendment speaks to the principle. I really do not understand why the Solicitor General feels uneasy about this particular situation.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. Warner: It's a filibuster.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Could the Solicitor General please—I am sorry, it's not meant to be a filibuster to whoever it was over there; this is a serious issue.

It's a serious issue and when in a few moments we take the vote, there should be no doubts about the statistics that have been flying around this room today. I would just like to clarify with the Solicitor General exactly what the statistics are. When you use the statistic, which was about 26,000, what kinds of deaths are those?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I don't know. I'm just saying that of the figure of approximately 27,000 investigations, it is my opinion—borne out by some professional opinion within the chief coroner's office—that with the amendment you are proposing—

Mr. Lupusella: You are investigating these cases?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Of those 27,000 investigations, you could have 5,000 or 6,000 inquests under your legislation.

Mr. Lupusella: Which is not true.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I cannot for the life of me understand that a—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: When I am saying that—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I suspect I have the floor at this moment.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —there is no reason to include the 226, I am including the 226.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I am not talking about the 226.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Right, so don't mix these up.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I don't understand how it is that the Solicitor General can come into this House today, in committee, and toss out the figures of 26,000 deaths per year in the province and not know what that means. What kind of deaths? Are they deaths into which you had an investigation? Do you investigate every death in the province?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No; they were accidental deaths for the most part.

Mr. M. N. Davison: So we can assume that this figure 26,900, refers to accidental deaths. You're quite sure that's what it means? For the most part they are accidental deaths?

Mr. Lupusella: No. They are investigating even industrial accidents, they are included in that number.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Some, but not all of those, I take it, are deaths by natural causes. So the figure 26,900 refers to deaths into which the coroner's office has launched an investigation and all accidental deaths were in that group; and some of that group are deaths from natural causes. That, then, is a portion of the total number of deaths in the province.

Then you toss out a figure, approximately 5,000 to 6,000 deaths in the province into which there is an investigation but no inquest. They are part of the 26,900 and are dealt with, as are the majority of the 26,900. You suspect, perhaps, that those are deaths in the work place, in your definition of whatever a work place may be. Is that correct? Then from the statistics of the compensation board we find out there are indeed 226 deaths per year in the province, which are cases where a workman dies from an accident in the work place.

I would assume the Solicitor General would have some vague idea of what work places are covered by the Workmen's Compensation Act before he comes in here and gives all these sets of statistics to which he isn't at all sure what meaning to give.

I think if the government party votes against the amendment put forward by my colleague from Dovercourt, based on statistics put forward by the Solicitor General which are so meaningless that he doesn't even understand what they represent, they would be doing so blindly; and I think that would be a travesty.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Stong has moved that section 3(3) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"3. The said section 9 is amended by adding thereto the following subsection 4(a): When a worker dies as a result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a construction project or mine, including a pit or quarry, the person in charge of such project or mine shall immediately give notice of the death to a coroner and the coroner shall issue his warrant to hold an inquest upon the body."

Mr. Lupusella has moved an amendment to the amendment, that the words "at or in a construction project or mine including a pit or quarry" in the amendment be deleted and replaced by the following words "in any work place"; and the words "such project or mine" be deleted and the words "such work place" be substituted therefor.

The committee divided on Mr. Lupusella's amendment to Mr. Stong's amendment to section 3(3) which was negated on the following vote:

Ayes 28; nays 55.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Bounsall moves that the amendment to section 3(3) be amended by adding the words "in a factory or shop" after "quarry" in line three.

Mr. Bounsall: Again I draw to the attention of the minister and the official opposition that I hope they will be able to accept this amendment. The minister has indicated he would be willing to accept the amendment to which this amendment is attached. This would require that a coroner's inquest be held in those accidents which occur in the construction industry—in 1977, 41 in all.

In the industrial sector as covered by the words "factory or shop" there was an even greater number, 67. It seems to me that if one is willing to expand the section according to work place, by where in the work place if there is an industrial accident resulting in death, a coroner should hold an inquest, it would surely be in that group in which there has been the largest number of deaths.

Mr. Martel: That's common sense.

Mr. Bounsall: In 1977, there were 67 deaths in the industrial sector, as defined by the term "factory or work place" and only 41 in the construction industry. I say particularly to the critic for the Liberal Party, that if for some reason he felt justified in covering a situation in which there were 41 deaths, surely he would feel even more justified to cover a work place in which there were 67 deaths in the year 1977.

Mr. Bradley: Their leader is not listening to you.

Mr. Bounsall: I do not see the logic that would require you to do anything else when it's the same kind of death. You can't differentiate between the type of death which occurs in the construction industry and the type of death which occurs in an industrial accident, they are very similar. Those 67 deaths are all traumatic deaths, not deaths resulting from an industrial disease or an industrial illness. They are clear cut traumatic deaths, as the Solicitor General is willing to accept in the initial part of the amendment by agreeing to the words "construction industry."

I will not make the argument which we have made again and again in—

Mr. Chairman: Order. There are a number of private conversations which make it very difficult to hear.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, but we've heard this before.

Mr. Bounsall: You weren't even here, you didn't get the sense of the subdivision. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk did not hear the number 67 until I got up to speak. This encourages me to go on longer; we'll stay until 10:30 tonight.

I don't quite understand why the Solicitor General is being so stubborn on this issue. He is willing to accept 41 deaths in the construction industry. Hopefully, he will accept 67 in the industrial sector as defined by "factory or shop." The work place is very clear cut and defined. There should be absolutely no problem in the minister's mind, nor in the chief coroner's mind, as to exactly what kind of work place we are talking about.

Mr. Martel: Come on, George, accept it.

Mr. Bounsall: There should be no difficulty with that whatsoever. If there is, to make it very clear we are talking about those 67 industrial work places in which deaths occurred and which the Workmen's Compensation Board accepted as fatalities for which they would compensate.

If that's the only hangup, to make it exactly clear as to what work place, so there is no disagreement whatsoever, we would be quite willing to make it that clear by placing that amendment.

When we are all finished discussing the very valid reasons on this side as to why this amendment should be included, I would like to hear the minister's reasons why this is not reasonable to include. I would also like to hear from his staff or from the chief coroner any problems or difficulties he is having with the definition of work place as it relates to the exact wording of the amendment, "factory or shop." There should be absolutely no problem whatsoever with that definition and the clarity of that wording.

Mr. Lupusella: He doesn't know the definition, that's the problem.

Mr. M. N. Davison: During the debate on the first subamendment, which was defeated and which spoke to a similar principle, the Solicitor General engaged in an outpouring of statistics. The statistics he used, as I recall them, were 26,900 investigations into deaths; and I believe he said most of which were accidental and some were natural, but I would wait until I saw Hansard before I make that statement with great certainty. He then went on to suggest there were 5,000 to 6,000 accidental deaths in the work place which were investigated.

I would like to offer to the Solicitor General some real statistics from this government and from the federal government. Perhaps he could benefit from understanding the real statistics and would no longer engage in putting out fuzzy, ill-defined statistics, meant, apparently, to suggest something other than what the statistics really indicate.

I would like to tell the Solicitor General that in terms of total deaths in the province of Ontario, in 1975 there were 60,604 deaths; in 1976, 60,710 deaths; and in 1977, 61,380 deaths. I offer those statistics to the minister so he has some idea of the way in which the death rate climbed generally and specifically.

I would then like to hear a comment from him about the 1974 death rate in Ontario, which was as follows: In 1974 in Ontario there were 5,217 deaths. That is very similar to the number the minister referenced as accidental deaths in the work place. There were 5,217 deaths that resulted, Mr. Solicitor General, from all accidents, poisoning and violence.

Can you tell me, sir, how you could purport that that figure has anything to do with the debate we have been engaged in today? I would really like to know, because I believe at least 1,200 of those deaths were the result of automobile accidents. We saw a very shameful exhibition earlier on today when those statistics were thrown out with such reckless abandon. I would urge that the Solicitor General be more careful in the future.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments?

Mr. Foulds: Accept it, George.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the amendment carry? All those in favour of Mr. Bounsall's amendment to the amendment please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

An hon. member: Same vote.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Wait a minute. There may have been some members who have left. Could we not assume that the bell has rung and have a vote on this before 6 o'clock? Would that not be reasonable? May we vote?

We could have either the same vote as previously, or have a five-minute bell.

Mr. Nixon: Just have it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be satisfied with the same vote.

Mr. Nixon: I must say it is a strange alteration.

Mr. Chairman: It is the duty of the chair, I believe, to call in the members and when the whips appear at the door—it can be a very short bell.

[6:00]

An hon. member: A 30-second bell.

The committee divided on Mr. Bounsall's amendment to the amendment to section 3(3), which was negative on the following vote:

Ayes 18; nays 40.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Another vote?

Mr. Chairman: There is an amendment before the committee. Do members wish to continue? It's 6 o'clock.

An hon. member: The amendment is carried.

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Stong: Why not?

Mr. Bounsall: I have yet a further sub-amendment to the amendment which is before us, which will be placed at the appropriate time.

Mr. Havrot: Grow up.

Mr. Bounsall: What's the matter over there? You don't believe in amendments being made to bills? You don't believe in it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: In view of the further surgery that some want to do on this bill, we perhaps should indicate that it was our intention at 8 o'clock to go to Bills 85 and 95, because that was the agreed upon time.

Mr. Hodgson: What about Bill 66?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes. We will have to adjourn consideration of this bill, and at 8 o'clock we'd like to start with Bill 85, followed by Bill 95. Then perhaps there is time to come back to Bill 86 and Bill 66. It's that order starting at 8 o'clock—Bills 85, 95, 86 and 66. If there is time, we start the municipal bills.

Mr. Hodgson: On a point of privilege. The order paper says we call 66 as the next bill. I wonder why—

Mr. Eaton: That was this afternoon; we're in the evening now.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If I could speak to my colleague: it was made quite clear last Thursday night that at 8 o'clock, no matter where we were in the order, we would go to Bills 85 and 95.

An hon. member: That's what it says.

The House recessed at 6:02 p.m.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

REVENUE FROM ALCOHOL

62. Mr. S. Conway (Renfrew South): Including figures derived from the price increases of May 23, 1978, what are the latest estimates of revenue to be obtained from the sale of alcohol in the current year? How do these figures compare with the figures in the Ontario Budget 1978? What is the most recent estimate of the increase in alcohol revenue for 1978 over the revenues collected in 1977, including the latest series of price increases? [Tabled May 24, 1978.]

Hon. L. Grossman (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): Liquor Control

Board of Ontario latest estimates of revenue to be obtained from the sale of alcohol in the current year: The latest figures of revenue to be obtained from the sale of alcohol in the current year remains at $350,000,000, which is the figure contained in the 1978/1979 Ontario budget. This projection partly included the effects of price increases during the year.

The effects of more frequently increasing selling prices, such as the price increases of May 23, 1978, will be analysed as quickly as possible and the government will be kept informed as to any change in our 1978/1979 estimates.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 6, 1978

The House resumed at 8:05 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

Mr. Warner: Perhaps the Chairman could tell us how we can proceed with the bills without any cabinet ministers?

Mr. Kerrio: Did everybody who was late bring a note?

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, there doesn't appear to be a quorum.

Clerk of the House: There is not a quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might make some explanation to the committee. It was our plan at the commencement of the evening sitting to start with Bill 85. It is my understanding that the minister is somewhat held up in traffic trying to get here.

Mr. McClellan: You don't know where he is. You don't have the slightest idea where he is.

Hon. Mr. Welch: With the permission of the committee, we might start with Bill 95, since the minister concerned is here. Hopefully, when the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) arrives, we could go to his bill and then carry on for the balance of the evening.

Mr. Lupusella: Is this a reasonable explanation?

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Chairman, we would willingly agree to that procedure. We only hope that the Minister of Correctional Services has not been detained in one of his own facilities.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'm sure, in keeping with the spirit of the minister, he may well have been inspecting one.

Mr. Warner: The government is totally confused.

Mr. Haggerty: I hurried back too.

Mr. Warner: The government is confused, totally confused.

CHILDREN'S PROBATION ACT

Consideration of Bill 95, An Act to provide Probation Services to Young Offenders.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. McClellan moves that section 2(2) of the bill be deleted.

Mr. McClellan: I spoke at some length during the debate on second reading and I don't intend to take a great deal of time on the amendment. I think I made our objections to this section fairly clear. If I may, I'll recap those objections.

We feel very strongly about the inappropriateness of section 2(2) of this bill. Make no mistake about it, section 2(2) gives to the minister an extraordinary power, a power the minister did not possess under the old Probation Act which is being replaced. It is a power which the minister does not possess under the new Ministry of Correctional Services Act, the companion bill to this one, with respect to adult probation services. I stress again that the Minister of Correctional Services has adopted the language of the original Probation Act in re-enacting this section for adult probation services. The Minister of Community and Social Services has chosen to give to himself the power to designate and to appoint—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm not on any personal quest for power. You know that.

Mr. Foulds: You are on the biggest power trip around here.

Mr. McClellan:—for whatever vainglorious reasons, probation officers, apart from the original provisions to appoint under the Public Service Act.

I say again this gives to the minister a power which is undesirable. It gives to the minister the power to appoint to contract positions on the basis of equality with his power to appoint under the existing provisions of the Public Service Act. The minister has given us a rationale that he needs to have the flexibility—I think that was his word—to deal with particular situations. He mentioned the instance of an isolated community, wherein he may want to appoint, on a special basis, somebody to provide probation services.

I'd point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that the minister has this power under section 4(2) of the Community and Social Services Act which is a catch-all clause. I don't have the section with me, but it states, in effect, that he can do whatever he needs to do in order to accomplish the purposes of the ministry. Under that section, he has the power to do what he is asking for in section 2(2) of this act.

However, as we know, it is very difficult, and as I think the minister said to me in a conversation, it is cumbersome to act under section 4(2) of the Community and Social Services Act. That is well and good, because that is the power we aren't anxious to give to any minister, regardless of the merits of the incumbent. It is a power which bypasses the Civil Service Commission. It is a measure that restores to politicians the power to appoint to jobs. We thought we had moved a long way from that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You make it sound like patronage or something.

Mr. McClellan: I may well make it sound like patronage. Make no mistake about it, it is part of the concern and the concern is not directed to the incumbent or any other individual minister. It is a power that represents a retrograde step. It is a power that represents—

Mr. Foulds: When your former deputy ran the ministry over the bodies of the last three ministers, there was abuse of power.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. McClellan: It is a measure which gives sanction to the rights to contract out service; to bypass the Civil Service Commission; to reduce the career status of probation officers; and to set up, at least theoretically, a counter organization based on the tenuous relationship of contract employment. That's not suitable. That's not adequate.

If there are very rare and exceptional circumstances where the minister, for whatever reason, hopefully for clinical reasons, has the need to appoint a probation officer and regular employment procedures don't work in these extraordinary circumstances let him then use the provisions of the Community and Social Services Act. Let him not come before us and ask for legislation which grants an equal right of appointment to the traditional route which is enacted in section 2(1) under the Public Service Act, and the extraordinary and wholly inappropriate route which is enacted in section 2(2) in this bill.

I made the case on second reading debate, and I don't feel the need to belabour it. And despite the fact that the Minister of Correctional Services is no more visible than he was 15 minutes ago, I have no intention of filibustering on this section in order to save the Minister of Correctional Services' face.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Somebody else might want to say something.

Mr. McClellan: I will, out of courtesy, Mr. Chairman, ask a question of the minister. It has been brought to my attention that there has been representation made to the minister on this issue by representatives of a liaison committee which is composed of representatives of the probation officers' association and an association of judges. I don't know if this is correct.

I would like to ask the minister whether he has had communication formally, in a written sense, either from the probation officers' association or from representatives of the judiciary, or through some kind of a liaison body on this matter. It is my understanding that it is a matter that is viewed with alarm, not just by probation officers, but also by members of the judiciary. I'd appreciate some clarification on that from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would like to respond to the specific question the honourable member has raised. I have had no direct communication from the groups to whom the honourable member refers and if I am able to read the head-shaking of some of my staff who are in the House this evening, they have not had any formal communication either. I understand there has been some telephone communication between the president of the probation officers' association and one of the members of the ministry staff. I have at no time had any direct communication from them during the course of the time this legislation has been before the House.

Mrs. Campbell: As I understand the position, it seemed to me to be most reasonable, particularly when one was dealing with a child, that one should be able to improve a relationship if it were in the best interests of the child was what we were seeking to do, and to me the welfare of a child comes before any other consideration. Could the minister answer that question for me?

Mr. McClellan: May I make a comment on that before the minister replies and then he can reply to both of us. Speaking to the matter raised by the member for St. George, it is my understanding that the minister has a twofold power without the additional powers of section 2(2), which he is trying to persuade us to approve here tonight.

First, under section 2(1) it says "probation officers as are considered necessary for the purposes of this act may be appointed under the Public Service Act." There are ways and means for the minister to make appointments under 2(1) which are not appointments to the civil service, but appointments to the public service. That is one set of powers the minister already has. But there is a check and balance built into the powers under section 2(1) and that is the sense of propriety on the part of the Civil Service Commission. The Civil Service Commission is not happy to see ministers abusing the powers to appoint to the public service apart from appointments to the civil service. There is a check and balance built into that appointment system of which I am sure the member is aware.

In addition to that, the minister has the power under section 4(2) of the Ministry of Community and Social Services Act to make such appointments as he may see necessary.

Now with those kinds of legislative powers already, I can't see for the life of me why the minister needs the additional powers of 2(2). In view of our concerns in the opposition around the integrity of the Civil Service Commission, I am very reluctant—in fact unwilling—to grant the additional powers under 2(2).

Hon. Mr. Norton: I can assure the honourable members that the intent of this provision within the legislation is not to undermine the integrity of the civil service in this province. The member for St. George in fact has zeroed in on our principal concern. The advice from my legal staff is that under the provisions of the ministry act, which are not as broad in this narrow sense, if you wish—that seems contradictory, but what I am trying to say is that the provisions of the ministry act, as I understand it, do not authorize the minister to appoint a person with the full authority of a probation officer.

We are attempting to provide continuity of service to children—in many cases in remote communities across this province. Take, as an example, some of the remote Indian communities in the northern part of the province, where the opportunities for a regular full-time probation officer to visit might be at the most once a month or even less frequent than that. If a child or a juvenile is to be under the supervision of a probation officer or under the supervision of anyone with any of the authority of a probation officer during that period of time, it surely is essential there be someone closer to the child on a continuing basis. It often happens in a setting where, because of the numbers of young people involved, it would simply not be possible to provide a full-time probation officer. I am sure the member for Bellwoods would not advocate, nor would he want us to act in such a manner as to provide, that kind of inadequate supervision.

One of the reasons it's important to have the authority of a probation officer in those kinds of situations is that if a child should require the intervention of the officer, be it the volunteer on the reservation or in the remote community or someone with whom we have contracted for a service, if they do not have the authority of a probation officer it is my opinion that they would not have the authority to, say, apprehend a juvenile when it became necessary for the safety of the child. In some cases that would be necessary if they were to be returned to the court because the court itself could be somewhat remote from the community.

I think if we are to meet the needs of the children, even in the remote communities of this province, we must have this kind of flexibility. I don't know what more I can say to assure the member for Bellwoods and those of his colleagues who may share his concern that it is certainly not my intention that we undermine the professionalism of our probation service or the civil service of this province. But surely he can recognize the need for this kind of flexibility in those situations.

The other night in our debate on the second reading of this, I used the example where a child might be in need of professional family services and counselling services. It might in some cases be appropriate that the person charged with the responsibility of the supervision of that child's probation be a member of that agency in a given situation. Once again with some umbrella supervision from a professional probation officer. But in terms of the therapeutic setting, there are circumstances under which it might well make more sense that those two roles be combined. Without this flexibility, that would not be possible.

I think the authority the honourable member is attributing to the ministry act is more limited than he and even I assumed when I was talking to him in the conversation that he made reference to earlier. I think that without this we would be seriously handicapped.

Mrs. Campbell: I know my colleagues want to speak to this matter, but to me it is essential to bring the very best of services to a child in these circumstances. We have many children who require far more intensive care. I am not talking about the north, although I can understand the point. In a place like Metropolitan Toronto, there are children who need very highly specialized care which really would go beyond the normal probation officer's function or would certainly eat into his or her case load.

I would like to see us with adequate probation services. Nevertheless, I am inclined to feel that if we believe that the welfare of a child is paramount in our discussions—and I am very free to say that is my choice and my position—then it seems to me there has to be an opportunity to make use of those who may have special skills for a special situation, but still have that kind of court relationship which can enable them to deal with the court in bringing forward a child.

I go back to my often-expressed concerns over the child we see in our society today who is potentially suicidal. This is not something that a probation officer in the course of his or her duties can adequately deal with. It needs to be someone who can work very closely on a one-to-one basis, both with the child and with the family. I would hate to see us boxed into the position where we couldn't bring the necessary support to a child. On the other hand, I would be the very first to criticize if the minister were to deem that this gave him power to contract out in any case.

Mr. Foulds: That's exactly what it is.

Mrs. Campbell: I believe that we have to have a flexibility. I would watch this very closely and I would like to warn the minister that if it were used other than in that sort of very close kind of relationship case, then I would want to see us review the matter. At the moment, I just don't think the probation officer could perform that function adequately on all occasions.

Mr. Foulds: I would be more willing to accept the minister's explanation of the need for the power he has outlined in section 2(2), if he had that power clearly defined and curtailed within the act to allow him to use that power in the special situation that he gave us in his illustration. What I would like to put to the member for St. George and to the rest of the House is that if this section as it is presently written passes tonight, then the minister, whoever he or she may be, has sweeping powers to do exactly the kinds of things my colleague, the member for Bellwoods, indicated he would have.

Mr. Martel: We might get another Taylor or Scrivener.

Mr. Foulds: I think it is incumbent upon us as legislators, to consider that, because with all great respect to the member for St. George we won't have the right to recall on this subsection of this bill in the future, even in a minority parliament situation. Once the legislation and the inclusive clause pass, it is passed, and the minister has the authority to act under it, whoever he or she may be.

I would like to put to the minister that he should look at the situation he describes. If we agree that the probation officer system we have developed under the Public Service Act is a good one, and I think by and large we do agree, then it should be a service that is available to all the people of this province.

To put it in harsh terms, I don't think we should be thinking of a second-class service for people in remote communities in northern Ontario. I am saying to the minister that we should make them an integral part of the public service. It may well be that they would not have a full case load. It may well be that they would not be full-time employees; I'm sure that could be worked out on a pro rata basis with the individual and with the civil service union. I'm sure that in those special circumstances, because the need is apparent and great, it is not beyond the wit of the minister, the Civil Service Commission and the union involved to work out a sensible and reasonable arrangement.

I draw to the minister's attention, although I don't like all the parallels, that under the Solicitor General's office we have developed the special band constable on many northern reserves. There are some inequities in that system but it is a kind of parallel situation that the minister could look at as a possibility, as a model, always paying attention, I would hope, to the safeguards I indicated earlier in my remarks.

I am very worried—I want to put it in those terms; I do not want to put it harshly—about the sweeping powers outlined in this section. It is not limited in terms of time. It is not limited in terms of the appointment. It is not limited in terms of qualification of any person. It is not even limited in terms of the person this minister wishes to designate being responsible to a probation officer.

Mr. McClellan: The minister is not going to be there for ever.

Mr. Foulds: For those reasons, with good conscience, at this time I would have to wholly support the suggestion—

Mr. McClellan: What if the member for Mississauga South (Mr. Kennedy) or the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. Taylor) became minister?

Mr. Foulds: —put forward by my colleague from Bellwoods whom I'm trying to help, and if he would stop heckling while I'm speaking I could assist his argument more fully. I would have to support it at the present time unless the minister were willing to stand down this particular section and bring back to us more specific details along the lines of the illustration that he gave. At that point I think we might be willing to be considerate. But if he is determined to push ahead with this particular section, I think that we, as legislators, have no option but to vote against it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support section 2 of the bill. I am quite surprised that my friend from Port Arthur and other northern friends in the NDP would vote against this particular section.

Mr. McClellan: You just found out which way to vote a minute ago.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I wonder if I might beg your indulgence for a moment, Mr. Chairman. In the gallery opposite me are grade eight students from the Marks Street School in Atikokan, the school I attended when I was a few years younger—

Mr. Foulds: We won't hold that against you.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It has a certain nostalgia for me, and I'd like to welcome them here tonight.

Mr. Warner: You shouldn't malign the school that way.

Mr. McClellan: Let's just leave it at that; you've made your point.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Would the member for Rainy River please stick to the bill?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I support this particular action for two reasons in particular.

Mr. G. Taylor: Did you graduate or drop out, Pat?

Mr. T. P. Reid: There's a third one that my friend from Port Arthur seems to be particularly concerned about, and I'll bring that to his attention.

First of all, it's obvious that in northern Ontario we suffer from a lack of all social services, probation officers included. It's necessary that the minister have the flexibility within his ministry to be able to appoint people, and I would presume that he's going to be appointing people from the children's aid society and other social services who have some kind of expertise in the problems in which he's dealing. I would think those of us from the northern areas know it's sometimes necessary to bring in other people to handle some of the problems the courts have to deal with in regard to probation services for children and the special problems associated with them because of the work load of the people in the northern areas.

I hope that problem will be solved when the economics are such we can have the staffing that's required. This leads me to my second problem: Obviously, under the present restrictions in place by the government, there is a freeze on civil service hiring. We're not going to get any more probation officers of any kind in southern Ontario, let alone in northern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: If you are willing to accept it, that's a sellout argument.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister has to have the ability to appoint these people who, I would hope, have the qualifications to deal with these particular problems.

Mr. Foulds: But you don't enshrine it in legislation to meet the current crisis in northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'm not happy about giving the minister these kinds of powers either. I'm not happy that he doesn't say in the bill at a certain stage, these particular powers will be done away with. But I would also bring to the attention of my friend from Port Arthur—and here's where I also have a special problem with all the legislation we pass—under section 7 of the bill, the minister and the Lieutenant Governor in Council, which is the cabinet, may make regulations respecting the qualifications, duties and powers of probation officers and proscribing the reports and returns to be made by probation officers. I would hope that before this bill receives third reading and royal assent the minister would be able to come to the House and provide us with those regulations so we can feel more secure in our minds that he's not going out there—

Mr. McClellan: You'll get them in the Gazette.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —and grabbing somebody, but that in fact they will have some qualifications to deal with these particular and peculiar problems.

I come back to the argument that particularly in northern Ontario, there must be this flexibility. Otherwise we will have no service at all. For that reason I support section 2 of the bill, not because I particularly want to, but because it's the only way we're going to get any service.

Mr. Foulds: You are willing to accept second-class service.

Mr. Warner: I listened very closely to the arguments put forward by my good colleague from Bellwoods, whom I think most members in this assembly would recognize as being an extremely knowledgeable person in this area.

I also listened very closely to the comments from the minister, and I fully understand what he is saying. Part of the difficulty, however, is that I take the comments he made to mean there's a certain amount of good faith dependent upon his retaining his present position.

But we're passing legislation that's going to be on the books for who knows how many years, and this present government may not be here, let alone the present minister.

An hon. member: Could be a Liberal one.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's something to look forward to.

Mr. Martel: The only argument we hear—just stick around.

Mr. Warner: So his argument is a bit weak. The truth of the matter is, as has been stated by my colleague from Bellwoods, this is a threat to the public service of this province. That's really what it is. Call it for what it is. Aside from the member for St. George, I understand what is afoot with the Liberal caucus.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I am surprised at you.

Mr. Warner: I understand fully what their intentions are.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

[8:45]

Mr. Warner: We went through a similar circumstance on Thursday night. We are going through it again today. We saw it before the dinner break and again this evening.

Mr. Eakins: We are warming up.

Mr. Warner: The strategy here is that the Liberal caucus will not support any initiative put forward by the New Democratic Party. It doesn't matter what the merits are; they are simply not going to support any initiative put forward by this caucus.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We have yet to hear it.

Mr. Blundy: It isn't planned.

Mr. Martel: It shows how right we are.

Mr. Eakins: Resign.

Mr. Warner: The unfortunate part about it was that prior to the comments of the member for Rainy River we had a reasonable debate.

Mr. McClellan: I will bet the member for Rainy River is going to leave now.

Mr. Warner: I say that deliberately because I listened carefully to the concerns of the member for St. George, who has always understood the difficulties of young offenders and who has always tried to assist them to the best of her capacity.

We had a reasonable debate on the merits of the legislation and on the merits of our proposal. Then intruded nothing short of crass political motivation on the part of the member for Rainy River, who is the spokesman of the remainder of the Liberal caucus. That bothers me very much because I think what we have in front of us is something—

Mr. T. P. Reid: We always save the best line for the last.

Mr. Warner: —that is above whatever political situation happens to exist in this chamber. I would ask the Liberal members, particularly the member for St. George and other members who aren't given to the crass political motives that have been expounded since last Thursday night by the member for York Centre and others—

Mr. Stong: Nonsense. That's garbage.

Mr. Warner: —that they consider the problem that exists in section 2 for the public service of this province as well as for the children of this province who are to be served. Let's just not hope that the good intentions of the present minister are sufficient because he may be a victim of the revolving door on the cabinet room.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Have you heard what the alternative is yet?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Have you heard something I haven't?

Mr. Blundy: I stand to speak against the amendment that is before us and in support of the bill.

Mr. Ruston: Just tell them the truth; that's all.

Mr. Blundy: I don't think our friends over in the third party are the only people who have sincere understanding and so forth of the public service employees. We all have that concern for their continuing welfare. Here we are dealing with an act that has to do with providing probation services for young offenders. In my book, our first responsibility and our major concern must be to the children of the province who are going to be handled in the facility set up by this act. That is my first responsibility.

I have talked to a number of people who are in the service and a number of people in social work. I have found that it is not uncommon and that in certain cases it is found to be advisable to have a probation officer appointed who has a particular quality or training.

I talked to the family counselling services in my own municipality today. They said that on at least two occasions recently they are aware of one of the counsellors was appointed as a probation officer for a child because this person had been dealing previously with the child and with the child's family. There were certain areas that this person was very conversant with in which he could be of greater help.

We are not saying we do not support the appointment of probation officers from the public service under the Public Service Act. That is natural. But, as the minister has pointed out, there are certain times and certain locations where it would not only be helpful but wise to appoint someone outside the public service who is particularly able to assist in this counselling as a probation officer.

I have been assured by the minister that this is not any great plan to usurp the duties of the probation officers of Ontario, hired under the Public Service Act, but it gives the flexibility he needs to handle, as well as can be handled, the various eventualities that may turn up in probation services in Ontario. Therefore, I will support the inclusion of section 2(2).

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I am really surprised at what is going on tonight.

Mr. Conway: No!

Mr. Martel: I listened last Thursday—

Mr. Haggerty: Were you here last Thursday?

Mr. Martel: —as my friend to the right said, "We want a bill but we can't have it so we'll let it go." Blackmail, I think, was the term they were trying to use. Tonight we have the same proposition being put to us.

Mr. Conway: Never has the truth been so blatantly abused.

Mr. Martel: Sean, you would well know it.

Mr. Breagh: It's not your turn to speak yet, Sean. Wait until it is.

Mr. Conway: Having watched you, Elie, for these few years—

Mr. Martel: I want to go back, Mr. Chairman, if I might. Back in 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, as a critic of this particular ministry, it became obvious to me that the number of people employed in northern Ontario to meet the needs of those in northern Ontario with problems, the case workers had far larger case loads than anyone in southern Ontario had. Not only did they have bigger case loads, I say to the minister, they also had greater distances to travel.

The minister gets up tonight and says, "I need this flexibility because there aren't enough qualified people," or, "I need this flexibility because there aren't enough cases maybe for a full-time probation officer to be held in full-time work." If he wants them, based on the fact we have officers across the north with bigger case loads, then he might have a case worker doing some probation work and easing the burden for those people who are full-time rehabilitation officers with bigger case loads than in Metro Toronto, where there are opportunities for jobs. If you check the statistics, you'll find I'm right. I think they were almost double.

Hon. Mr. Norton: This may well allow us to do that.

Mr. Martel: No, this might not, because you will end up getting people who are unskilled.

The minister himself is a lovely fellow. He's just a lovely fellow.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Aw, thanks.

Mr. Kennedy: Are you feeling okay, Elie?

Mr. Martel: I know from my past experience, having dealt with this ministry, that all the ministers haven't been lovely fellows who deal with people who are in need. I remind you of the former minister who wanted to get at the mothers. He was the fellow who said all women who were on welfare wanted to send their kids out at 9 in the morning and then go back to bed. Can you imagine an individual like that having the power—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Have you never gone back to bed, Elie?

Mr. Martel: —having the power to appoint every Tory flunky in northern Ontario to a job? It boggles the mind. It really does.

Mr. Conway: I wouldn't even give that power to Cardinal Drea.

Mr. Martel: Then you're voting for it tonight.

Mr. Conway: Oh, no.

Mr. Martel: In fact, that's what you're doing.

Mr. Conway: No, no, Elie.

Mr. Martel: That's in fact what you're doing.

Mr. Makarchuk: We haven't even got Cardinal Drea yet.

Mr. Martel: You are going to—

Mr. Conway: Finish appointing those enumerators in York North, then talk to us about it.

Mr. Ruston: Then you make them pay back—

An hon. member: Cardinal Drea. Nice.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully to my friends the Liberals, who said—

Mr. Conway: Having once been one.

Mr. Martel:—"We don't agree with it, but we'll vote for it anyway."

Mr. Conway: Now, now.

Mr. Martel: What a lot of nonsense. If you don't agree with it you don't support it. Surely it's as simple as that.

Mr. Conway: Oh, now Elie.

Mr. Stong: Don't twist the truth. Give all the facts.

Mr. McClellan: It's almost as simple as they are.

Mr. Martel: I tried to put it in the proper dimension for my friends to understand.

Mr. Conway: You have no friends here, Elie.

Mr. Martel: You're right.

Mr. Conway: You left this party 15 years ago.

Mr. Martel: I use the word loosely.

Mr. Conway: Too loosely.

An hon. member: My loose friends.

Mr. Conway: The question is how many friends are seated to your immediate behind?

Mr. McClellan: Lots.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I want the minister to tell us what the case loads are for probation officers in northern Ontario—

Mr. McClellan: Or anywhere else.

Mr. Martel:—as opposed to Metro Toronto. Then I want him to tell me what the distances are that these probation officers have to cover. In fact, probation officers or rehabilitation officers who are under the rehab section of your ministry have had double the case work in the north. Rather than that we should probably have had half. You have to take into consideration the great distances—there are areas where it could well be that a case worker has 1,200, 1,400 or 3,500 square miles to cover—even more. Yet they're expected to have the same case load or greater, unless things have changed dramatically since 1975. I suspect they haven't because money has been tight since then.

So the case workers and probation officers in the north—because of distances, because of climatic factors in winter—should have a reduced number of people under their care than would be the case in southern Ontario. The minister has to document statistically for me what those case loads are and the areas that those probation officers have to cover before I'm even prepared to listen to his other nonsensical arguments about flexibility. I wrote the word down.

He put it in reverse, a thing he does well: "If I wanted a specialist to deal with children"—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Nice guys never put things in reverse. You have got to be consistent.

Mr. Martel: You lost your nice guy image when you came to this point.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You are the one who changed his mind.

Mr. Martel: No, no, you said if a child needs special care then we should have that child obtaining the special care, and you needed that flexibility to ensure that. Surely, it takes a full-time probation officer who has some training to determine whether that child needs special care. That probation officer then, in his wisdom, says: "I need someone else to assist. I need someone who has more expertise in the field, or in the field that the child needs, in order to look after the child."

How do you know what the child needs? How do you know the child needs help right away, unless you have a skilled person working with the child? Don't tell me that a part-time probation officer will be able to determine that. In fact, as a teacher, one of the complaints I've always had about teacher training is that there has never been enough training in dealing with the psychological aspect of children. There's very little.

You tell me how you're going to get some part-time probation officer to understand the complexity of children and determine that some child needs some special assistance. I would ask my friends to my right to vote this down—

Mr. Makarchuk: How right?

Mr. Martel:—because what you're condemning us to is part-time probation officers who don't have the skills necessary to detect the things a child might need.

I don't really want to get into the argument about whether some other minister takes this minister's place, because that's really irrelevant—except if you have another Taylor, with his attitudes; that could be most detrimental because he can go out and pick anyone he wants. The act really gives him that discretion. You might not use it, but there is someone down the road who might. I really believe the minister on his own, has to withdraw that.

The minister can't tell me that part-time probation officers, without proper training, without proper courses, can in fact determine those things a child might need. They don't have the skills; they don't do it on a full-time basis. I am sure they won't be brought to Toronto and to other areas where one might want them to take the upgrading courses that constantly go on in this sort of endeavour.

Again I implore the Liberals to alter their position, not to allow part-time probation officers.

You might well say, "It is better than nothing." I suggest to you it would be more detrimental. It would be more detrimental because we have to force the government to hire the necessary people to meet the needs of these people. We will not meet it with part-time people, we simply won't.

All kidding aside, I am asking the Liberals to support us. Kill this thing, so this minister in fact has to hire the necessary personnel. He reduces the caseload in northern Ontario to fit in with the climatic conditions, to fit in with distances, to make sure we have trained personnel to do the job.

I say to the minister, I ask the minister on his own to withdraw this sector. As well meaning as he might be, I ask the minister not to get involved with hiring part-time people. If you want someone who has the flexibility to determine whether a child needs special help, it should be the probation officer who says—and he does it in that order—"I need the assistance of a psychologist in this case" maybe; or "I need the assistance of a psychiatrist in this case. I can't handle it on my own. Maybe I need someone from Big Brother to give me a hand to look after this child." if it is a boy, "to give him a part-time Big Brother to do things that boys need assistance on."

I just say to you, Mr. Minister, that if you carry this, or attempt to carry it, you are inviting disaster. You really and truly are.

I understand what you are attempting to do. I have worked with children as long as you, my friend, in fact probably longer.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Probably longer. You are older than I am.

Mr. Martel: Well not that much, and I also have four of my own.

Mrs. Campbell: Compete with that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not going to respond to that one.

Mr. Martel: I say to the minister, having dealt with children as a teacher, I know full well the difficulty of detecting problems; you can't do it on an ad hoc basis, you can't get untrained, unskilled people to do it, and with this sort of thing that will happen. Maybe not under your jurisdiction but somewhere down the road.

If it is an economic measure, you didn't put them in place when you had the bundle in 1971 to 1975, in northern Ontario. If you check back in the record—and my friend the member for St. George recalls when I documented the number—the minister of the day was from northern Ontario—and we documented that the rehabilitation officers in Toronto and in southern Ontario had far less arduous caseloads than those in northern Ontario, despite the fact that in northern Ontario they had distance to contend with and they had less opportunities to place people for rehabilitation than was the case here.

Even though the minister was from northern Ontario, he couldn't get an adequate staff, even to be on an equal footing with what the caseload was in southern Ontario; when it should have been reversed, it should have been less because of the other factors.

You try travelling the 300 miles from Sudbury to Chapleau in winter which is the distance my colleague the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) travels regularly. That's typical of the expanse of territory one has to get across. That is never taken into consideration by your ministry. You send rehab officers from Sudbury to Chapleau in the field of rehabilitation, and yet they have a bigger caseload than in southern Ontario. I believe the last time I checked with them they had an average of 90 cases each.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Both rehab?

Mr. Martel: Yes, rehab. It is really ridiculous. I am saying to you, it should have been reversed. They should have had the smaller caseload because of distances, climatic conditions and the lack of opportunities to place those they are assisting.

That didn't apply and it should have. It should in this bill, Mr. Minister, that's why I say it to you. Give me the statistics. Tell me what the caseloads are in northern Ontario for a probation officer as opposed to in the south. I suspect they are greater and I believe it should be reversed. It should be less and you would have the type of staff you need to do the job we want.

I say to you, as I stand here, we will come down if you go through with this. My friends over here do not support me. We in fact will have case after case, in the long run, where children or people with problems will not get the proper supervision. The proper assistance will not be called in because the people will not have the skills necessary to make that determination. I ask the minister himself to withdraw that section, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stong: I would like to share with my colleagues in the House some experience I have had with respect to the employment of voluntary probation officers. Prior to becoming a member of the Legislative Assembly, in my own practice as a criminal lawyer, I worked fairly closely with the probation officers in York county in setting up a system of voluntary probation officers. I must say one of the reasons the program came about arose out of the very fact there were insufficient probation officers to carry the caseload in this area. I was very impressed, and I am continually impressed, Mr. Chairman, with the calibre of individual who takes up the responsibility to look after a probationer, especially those who come from families, family people who are involved not only with their own children but have decided to accept responsibility toward other people in society, and particularly those who are less fortunate and do not come from strong family backgrounds.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this point, I found out all about it the year before I got elected. I had 287 brand new cases of juvenile delinquency come across my desk. Of that total, 285 of those young people ended up in my office, and subsequently before the court systems, without the benefit of a father. There was no father in sight coming with those children for interviews in my office to defend them, or subsequently in court before the court.

Now those statistics don't mean very much except it did point out to me that juvenile delinquents are perhaps the result of the broken home in more cases than we are willing to admit. The volunteer probation officer is a person who is basically and genuinely interested in the individual who is his or her charge. I am very impressed with their ability. They may not have the training in psychology, but they have got training in family background. They have an interest, and that's first and foremost in my mind, their interest in their fellow human beings, and particularly the young.

As I listen to this debate tonight, Mr. Chairman, I am impressed with one thing, and that is, as has been pointed out, that the volunteer probation officers, although they are not trained the same as a probation officer who would be designated under the act, perhaps the problem could be best solved by having written into legislation the requirement that our volunteer probation officers be subject to and under the supervision and guidance of the regular probation officer. Perhaps that would satisfy the inquiries and the concerns that are raised by the members of the third party who have spoken to this bill.

I am not concerned with the calibre of the individual who volunteers his or her service, or their interest. It's there; it's genuine and it's important. They are willing to make a one-to-one contact the basis in their relationships, which is most important. I am also impressed with our own project and our own experiment in York county, the regional municipality of York as it's called now, wherein this program is working very successfully. The volunteer probation officers are in very close association with the regular probation officers and lift the load.

Perhaps the problem could very well be resolved if it were written into legislation, as I indicated earlier, that the volunteer probation officer be subject to the constant supervision, and answerable to and accountable to a regular probation officer. If we could have that written into this legislation perhaps we could meet all of the concerns expressed by the party on my left.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I won't yield to the temptation, especially since a number of the previous speakers have now seen fit to leave the House, I would not have tried to participate in the baiting that has been going on across the House, but I can't miss at least commenting on the hounding of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner), who is no longer here, who was suggesting that members of the Liberal caucus were perhaps speaking out of some kind of political—

Mr. Sweeney: I think he resigned.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, perhaps he resigned tonight, I am not sure.

He implied some kind of political motivation while they were making reference to the primacy of the concern for the child in the system; and at the same time the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere was making reference principally to the protection of the public service.

I am not drawing any invidious comparison there, but as the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere was suggesting that to make reference to the public service—

Mr. McClellan: You should have a little more respect for your own staff.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have great respect for my staff.

Mr. McClellan: You show it all the time.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am just suggesting I do not see, in that kind of situation that it is necessarily more charitable and higher minded to be talking in terms of concern for the protection of the public service than it is to be talking about the concern for the primacy of children. I am sure, though, that was the case, certainly with the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel)—

Mr. McClellan: You should go up north sometime, you might learn something.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —who referred to his concern about children. I think we all recognize it is really what we are most centrally concerned about; not that we are not concerned about the excellence of the public service that we have in this province.

I think it is important to remember that in dealing with children and children's probation, we are not dealing with quite the same situation as we are with adults. We are dealing with a situation where the needs are often quite different. The kinds of service that must be delivered to the children in these situations, given in some cases the greater tenderness of their years and the fact that they are in need of highly specialized care for a short period of time, are not necessarily at this point in time provided within the probation service itself.

Mr. Martel: I didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I know you didn't say that. I am not specifically responding to your remarks at this point. But recognizing that, I think it is not an unreasonable extension to recognize that we really must have some flexibility in this area.

I guess it was the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) who suggested it was important there be an assurance of supervision. I noted earlier in the evening, but did not have occasion to mention when I rose to respond, one of the reasons for the designation provision is to ensure a chain of accountability; to ensure that in those specific cases where there is a contractual relationship there is accountability and supervision.

We seem to be focusing almost exclusively on northern Ontario this evening; but that's not the only situation, as we discussed earlier, in which this might be applicable.

Mr. Martel: That is what you were using to hang your hat on.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Sure I used it.

Mr. Martel: You hung your case on it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Not entirely. I made reference to other circumstances which perhaps will be more relevant when we get talking about section 3.

Mr. Martel: I want to talk about section 2—caseloads.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In those communities where a person might well be designated, while he would be under the supervision of a full-time probation officer in areas where services would be delivered, it would not be possible in some cases for a person to be constantly under supervision if it were a remote community.

One of the honourable members opposite made reference to the fact that in remote communities they would be treated as second class citizens in terms of the level of service they would be receiving. I don't accept that argument and I don't think if they think about it for a moment the honourable members opposite would either.

It is highly preferable that a young person have regular and ongoing supervision rather than intermittent supervision. In terms of appointing a full-time public servant as was suggested by one of the honourable members, with an adjustment for something less than a full caseload, it might well work in some communities. But you must remember there are still other communities where the numbers of young people requiring probation supervision—

Mr. Martel: That was the argument today.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —may at times be none at all in a remote community. At other times there may be a requirement for supervision of one or two or three children in that community. I don't know how you're going to get a full-time public servant with no caseload at times to function in that kind of community. I just don't think that is a reasonable expectation. I don't have the data the member for Sudbury East requested with me this evening but I will undertake to get that data and review it with him personally.

Mr. McClellan: Your staff do not have the data with them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: They do not have the particular breakdown the honourable member was requesting.

Mr. Martel: We can't vote on the bill then.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's quite understandable that they might not.

Mr. McClellan: You have half the ministry here. Don't they have any information?

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, not half the ministry—we'll actually thank you very much, I know we do have a very modestly staffed ministry, but they're very competent people. There are three or four of them here tonight, if you think that's half—

Mr. Martel: No one disputes that. I don't know how they stay working for that ministry in the conditions under which they work.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Most members accuse us of having too many members of staff.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The rest are mine.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Are they all with you, Keith?

Hon. Mr. Norton: They're all contract staff, yes.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The big, heavy set ones are mine.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In any event, perhaps in conclusion I could reiterate that surely in looking at this aspect of services to children in this province, our primary concern must be to provide a reasonable level of service to children in all communities of the province; including, in some cases, the special services that might be required by young people in more heavily populated areas of southern Ontario.

It's a responsibility that I and the staff of the ministry take very seriously; and in order to do that, I really must have the support of the members of this House to allow us the flexibility necessary to adapt the service we deliver to the children whom we serve, regardless of the geographical location of the community in which they may live and regardless of the kinds of specific needs they may have and that we have a responsibility to meet.

I thought the member was finished.

Mr. Martel: No, I wasn't, being the minister provoked me.

Hon. Mr. Norton: There is one more section.

Mr. Martel: I'm not worried about the next section, I'm worried about this one. I'm worried that the minister can stand in his place and suggest to us we should vote on this, because he hung his case on northern Ontario.

Mr. Warner: Yes; yes, you did.

Mr. Martel: When I entered the chamber and as I listened on the squawk box upstairs, you in fact hung your case on the necessity to have flexibility and in communities where you didn't have a big enough caseload you couldn't have a full-time worker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That was the example I used and the honourable member for St. George used the other example.

Mr. Martel: You in fact were attempting to make the case for contracting out on that particular angle, and you can't weasel out of it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is not contracting out, it is bringing in needed services.

Mr. Martel: If you want to bring in needed services—

Mr. Warner: Darcy McKeough wrote this, Darcy wrote this section.

Mr. Martel: If you want to do that—

Mr. Bradley: He's the boss.

Mr. Martel:—then you hire the personnel you need to do the job.

Mr. Warner: He's in charge.

Mr. Bradley: He's the real Premier.

Mr. Martel: Because the costs will be greater two years down the road, if people don't have the proper care now, than it would be to meet the present needs.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I agree.

Mr. Martel: That's right.

Mr. M. N. Davison: When are you going to quit being Darcy's boy?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: I think what you have to do before we vote on this section, before we pass this section is give me some comparison of what the caseloads are. Don't ask me in blind faith to support this.

Hon. Mr. Norton: How would it affect your vote?

Mr. Martel: Probably not at all, probably not at all—

Hon. Mr. Norton: What's the cutoff point?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Would the honourable minister refrain from interjecting?

Mr. Martel:—probably not. I'll speak to you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Please, would you just address the chair and address the clause in question.

Mr. Martel: My friend the minister hung his case on needing this because in northern Ontario there were communities where there were insufficient numbers of cases to have a full-time probation officer. He then hung it on the necessity to have flexibility. You would have to send children out, or if it be young people they would have to go to someone other than a probation officer to get the treatment they needed.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You have tunnel vision.

Mr. Martel: I turned it around. I said that surely it's a case of a probation officer who is meeting with the child on a regular basis who detects what the child needs in the form of assistance. The probation officer in fact then makes the recommendation on the type of personnel that should be called in.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Tell him how many times it is the probation officer has to fly into the reservation.

Mr. Martel: I'm saying an untrained person—and you haven't answered this—I'm saying an untrained person will not have the skills to detect that in many instances.

Mr. Cooke: They've got to know what they're doing.

Mr. Martel: Look, I have seen it. My friend shakes his head.

Mr. Warner: That's only because he's dozing off.

Hon. Mr. Norton: They're not assessors.

Mr. Cooke: They don't do anything and that's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You don't have to be a psychologist to help a person.

Mr. Martel: I'm saying that in many instances one doesn't know that the child is having a problem.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You're saying our probation officers don't do anything.

Mr. Cooke: With caseloads so huge, they can't.

Mr. Martel: One doesn't always know. Having taught a good number of years, I recognize that. I'm sure your colleagues who are teachers would admit you can't always determine what the child's needs are, and you're trained to some degree to do that.

Mr. Stong: They can provide that.

Mr. Martel: Do you want to tell me you can bring someone in off the street who has had no training and that individual is going to tell you what kind of assistance a child needs?

Come on, what are you trying to do, con the troops? Don't tell me that type of individual whom you call in on a case once in a while will be able to determine what type of assistance a child needs. Part-time probation officers, who have no training—

Mr. Stong: Have you scrapped common sense?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It could be fathers or mothers.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. Would the members please refrain from interjecting and allow the member for Sudbury East to complete his remarks?

Mr. Martel: I say to my friend—

Mr. Stong: He's not making sense.

Mr. Martel:—it isn't just a case of common sense, and if he knew anything about children he wouldn't make that statement.

Mrs. Campbell: He has enough of his own.

Mr. Martel: He wouldn't make that statement, because there are many instances—

Mr. Ashe: Got 33.

Mr. Martel: If one looks at the whole realm of children with learning disabilities, one of the problems is that teachers can't detect it in many instances.

Mr. Stong: That's right.

Mr. Martel: Those are the very people, if you read the book put out by the federal government called, Those Poor Kids; those, in fact, are the kids in many instances who end up in our institutions.

Mr. Stong: That's right, that's right.

Mr. Martel: Teachers can't detect they have a learning disability. Tell me how you're going to get someone who has no skill, no training whatsoever, to detect it—

Mr. Stong: Why don't you support what we're doing?

Mr. Martel: That's where your argument falls flat on its face, because teachers can't detect it.

Mr. Stong: Nonsense.

An hon. member: If you want a Big Brother, why don't you say it?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: The report put out by the federal government—and I suggest you read it, it is only about 50 pages long and called Those Poor Kids—says that the majority of people who are in our institutions are kids with learning disabilities or low IQs. Yet you want unskilled, untrained people to detect what their problems are. It just doesn't wash. If my friend protests from now until doomsday he can't convince anyone who's been in the teaching profession that you can detect it all.

An hon. member: You want to appoint Big Brother.

Mr. Martel: In fact that's one of our problems, we can't detect it. We don't have the training and the skill, even as teachers, to do it.

Mr. M. N. Davison: This makes as much sense as a Liberal government.

Mr. Martel: That's why we need more psychologists in the school system, rather than cutting them back as we're doing at the present time. For my friend to sit in his place and say, "It just takes common sense," well, that's crap.

Mr. Stong: It takes interest too, and concern.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: No, it isn't just interest. Someone might have all the concern in the world but if they don't understand what they're looking for or don't know what they're looking for—

Hon. Mr. Norton: A little love goes a long way.

Mr. Stong: So you're against the volunteer probation officers.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Will the member for York Centre refrain from interjecting please?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Will you throw him out?

Mr. Martel: No, he is actually helping me.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Hamilton Centre will also refrain.

Mr. Martel: He shows me how little he really knows about it.

Mr. Warner: What about?

Mr. Stong: To the guys who went to school.

Mr. McClellan: What about abolishing lawyers?

Mr. Cooke: Let's have volunteer lawyers.

Mr. Martel: Now there's an area. In fact it might help Ontario if we abolished all lawyers for five years. The Minister of Correctional Services agrees with me. If we got rid of the lawyers for five years, Frank, we might be better off.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That might be a good idea.

Mr. Martel: There would be a lot of guys on welfare.

Mr. Cooke: Do I hear any volunteers?

Mr. Martel: The minister in his reply also said that—

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: The minister also said you couldn't divide the work and have someone act part time as a probation officer and maybe do something else as well. I will take my chances on a probation officer who is trained doing something else rather than the reverse. I will take my chances on getting a probation officer who has no skills.

Hon. Mr. Norton: What specific training do you recommend?

Mr. Martel: What are the qualifications they must have now in order to look after the needs?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am asking you.

Mr. Martel: What about the ongoing courses they can take? You are saying to me accept somebody off the street, virtually, and I say to you that is total nonsense. I prefer that we take our chances with someone whose main role is as a probation officer. If he has to pick up a little extra work within the ministry in some other jurisdiction you should give that individual some extra work there rather than try to bring someone in.

Can you imagine someone in—how do you pronounce that—Attawapiskat, looking after a child's needs away up there?

Hon. Mr. Drea: My guys do it.

Mr. Martel: Your guy is up there? I trust him because you are in charge of him.

Mr. McClellan: You don't need this extra power, do you, Frank?

Mr. Martel: You wouldn't want to be appointing people part-time?

Hon. Mr. Drea: He is a part-time man there.

An hon. member: That will fix you. Go get him, Elie.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order: Would the member for Sudbury East stick to the bill and the Minister of Correctional Services refrain from interjecting?

Mr. Martel: As I said earlier, I would prefer the minister to do it in reverse. If you can't get a full-time probation officer because there isn't a sufficient caseload you find something else for him to do in the ministry to fill up his spare time.

I suggest that with the statistics, though we could indicate to you that in the north—because of distance, because of climatic factors—the work load has to be that much less in order to get around to visit with the people under their charge. You can't convince me that you can take someone off the street, without the skills necessary—at the tender age, I believe the minister said, where it is more necessary.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We do not take them off the street.

Mr. Martel: No, you can't take someone off the street and have them looking after children. In the minister's own words—at that tender age, I think he said—where they need extra loving care you are going to haul somebody off the street to do it part-time. I want to tell you that is a lot of nonsense.

I hope the member for St. George gets back into this battle. Maybe she will bring some sense to her colleague from York Centre. The former member from there had more sense than the present member. I would urge the member for St. George to get involved.

My friend the minister doesn't want to put statistics on caseload on the record tonight. He says he hasn't got them. There is a whole staff there to deal with this sort of thing and he can't tell us what the caseloads are.

Mr. McClellan: They don't know. There is no use asking them. I put a question on the order paper.

Mr. Warner: Please don't put a question on the order paper, a question of the minister.

Mr. Martel: I find that difficult to believe, that you have a bill dealing with something like this and the minister and his staff can't tell me what the caseloads are. That is really stretching the point.

I hope the member for St. George has been able to convince her colleagues to change their minds. Maybe in the interim my friend from York Centre could go up and read the book entitled Those Poor Kids and come back a little more enlightened.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussions that have gone on this evening, and in view of the fact that the minister has said, although it is not a part of the bill, that anyone appointed under this section would be under the supervision of a trained probation officer—

Mr. Martel: In Attawapiskat.

Mrs. Campbell: —and I would assume, and I hope correctly, that this would indicate a full-time trained probation officer—

Mr. McClellan: There's no requirement.

Mrs. Campbell: —would the minister accept the amendment put by my colleague from York Centre or, in the alternative, agree to stand this subsection down so that we might incorporate within this bill the position which the minister has taken in this debate?

I believe the minister means exactly what he says. If he means what he says, it seems to me there is no harm, from his point of view, in incorporating within the bill the very statements that he made to this House tonight. It would give me a greater sense of the importance in his mind of the welfare of the children in the north, because I am not familiar with the situation in the north, even though I have sat on this committee now for some years.

If we assured ourselves that any person designated for a specific purpose would only function under the aegis of a trained full-time probation officer, as my colleague suggests, that should give assurance to the member for Sudbury East and others that the minister means what he says in providing the proper probation services in the north.

I would suggest that either we accept that amendment this evening or the minister gives his consent to standing down this section so that we can all look at an appropriate amendment to incorporate within the legislation the statement which the minister has made and which, properly, in my view—and I hope the minister agrees—ought to be incorporated when we look at the Hansard report of tonight's debate.

Mr. McClellan: We seem to be getting somewhere. We seem to be making some progress here tonight. I would like to make a suggestion to my colleague in the Liberal Party. The logical way to proceed is to support my amendment to have section 2(2)—

Interjection.

Mr. McClellan: Let me finish. Let me make this point before the member judges. The logical way is to support my amendment that section 2(2) be deleted and to add their amendment to section 3 so that persons with whom the minister enters into agreements to provide probation services will act under the supervision of a probation officer, properly appointed. I don't have any particular objections to section 3, except if section 2(2) is allowed to stand and the minister retains—

Mr. Stong: Section 2(2) is required.

Mr. McClellan: No, it's not required.

Mr. Stong: Yes, to designate. That's the life-giving section.

Mr. McClellan: With respect, it's not required because section 3 empowers the minister to enter into an agreement with respect to the provision of probation services. The concern is that probation services be provided by competent, qualified probation officers who are properly appointed and who have the opportunity for career service. You don't develop quality services on a contract basis. You simply don't.

You don't develop a cadre of highly competent, trained, qualified people who are doing an arduous, difficult job, one of the most difficult jobs that our society asks anybody to do, on an interim basis, on an ad hoc basis without opportunities for career advancement, without job security and without full protection of career status.

Mr. Stong: Don't give me that stuff.

Mr. McClellan: It happens to be true. If you don't provide the normal decencies to people who are doing the most difficult human service jobs in this society, you run into enormous morale problems. You run into enormous problems of turnover of staff. The quality of the service suffers. People can sneer all they want, but it happens to be the truth. Those who scoff at it and those who say that the job of providing human services on a one-to-one basis with people in the society who are troubled or disturbed or who have enormous difficulties can be farmed out—

Mr. Martel: On a part-time basis.

Mr. McClellan: —on a part-time basis or an ad hoc basis or an interim basis or a volunteer basis are wrong.

Mr. Stong: Define "part-time basis."

Hon. Mr. Norton: You people would like to destroy volunteerism.

Mr. McClellan: Don't you lecture me about the volunteer sector. I spent my entire life working in the volunteer sector. I know the volunteer sector.

Mr. Stong: Did you do any good?

Mr. McClellan: I'll be going back to the volunteer sector at some point in my career. I don't need any lectures from you about what the volunteer sector is all about because I know.

Mr. Stong: Did you do any good as a volunteer?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The member for St. George made a most eloquent speech on the value of volunteerism tonight and you shoot it down.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. May I ask the members not to interject? Would the member for Bellwoods proceed and speak to the section before us?

Mr. Warner: Would you ask the barrack room lawyers to keep out of it?

Mr. Mackenzie: Will you ask them to leave the red herrings alone?

Mr. McClellan: I don't intend to belabour the point. I had thought we had reached the point where some accommodation could be made. I still believe that to be true. I've listened very carefully to the debate, particularly to the people who have spoken on this side of the House from the two opposition parties. I think there is ground for an accommodation.

I would hope we could reach it.

I think that the basis for the accommodation is to proceed as I have suggested and not to give the power to the minister to appoint probation officers on a personal basis, on a contract-out basis, but rather to retain the wording of the original Probation Act which is good enough for the Minister of Correctional Services under his new act. It gives him the powers that he needs to be flexible. Let's give the same powers to the Minister of Community and Social Services. Let's not give him additional powers.

Let us add the amendment that the member for St. George and the member for York Centre are suggesting to section 3 that would provide the flexibility to ensure probation services to isolated communities, but would ensure that those services are properly supervised. That's the concern. We want to ensure quality service.

Mr. Stong: You weren't here when I made my speech.

Mr. McClellan: The way you ensure quality service is to make sure that if you don't have fully qualified staff on your front line, you have fully qualified staff in supervisory positions.

Mr. Stong: We'd have support over there.

Mr. McClellan: I'd be interested in hearing from the member for St. George as to whether she would be prepared to move in that direction. I would also be interested in hearing from the minister whether that makes sense to him.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I happen to be a member of one of three parties who is interested in this and I do have something I would like to say at this point, if I may. Perhaps the most reasonable suggestion that has been made in the course of the debate is that of the member for St. George. I concur with her suggestion that section 2(2) might be more explicit. I am not sure of the best wording at this point, but section 2(2), which says "the minister may designate any person, other than a person who is appointed a probation officer under subsection 1, as a probation officer" might be made more explicit with some wording such as "to carry out duties under the supervision of a probation officer appointed under section 1 for the purposes of this act." Wording such as that would be quite adequate. I believe that would meet her concern, and would still allow for the kind of flexibility that I am concerned about in a situation in a remote community that we have been talking about tonight—

Mr. Martel: Attawapiskat with kids.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—where the regular visits of a full-time probation officer might be separated by several weeks because of distances that have to be flown in small aircraft and so on, using that as an example. Then someone in that community—if it were a native community, it might well be a native person—could act in this capacity, under the supervision of and accounting to a full-time probation officer who would then pay them and the probationer a regular visit; but there would be someone there on an ongoing basis.

Likewise, in the case of the special services that the honourable member referred to earlier in her remarks, presumably it would not be a cumbersome thing for someone who may be with a professional family counselling service, for example, to relate—

Interjection.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—to accountability, if they were so designated in a specific case, with a full-time probation officer who would act as a supervisor in that case. I could accept that quite readily, I believe. I think I have some proposed wording here from my staff, but I will just have a look at it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the minister have a proposed amendment?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perhaps we could hear the honourable member, Mr. Chairman, as I haven't had a chance to really look at it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right.

Mr. Sweeney: While the minister is doing that, Mr. Chairman, I was just going to make the observation that if the probation person—and I will use those words—under section 2 is going to be accountable to a probation officer as defined under subsection 1, perhaps it would be more appropriate to call such a person an acting probation officer or some other designation. Otherwise I can see great difficulty in distinguishing between the person that the minister appoints under subsection 2, compared with the person he appoints under subsection 1. I think there needs to be a change in designation there.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Chairman, my only concern there would be that I am not sure there is any such legal status as that of acting probation officer. One of the reasons

I think the designation is important as well is that in a situation where that relationship of probation officer and probationer exists, there may well be times when that person would have to act in the interests of the child, perhaps to apprehend the child if there had been a serious breach or the threat of a serious breach. If they did not have the authority of a probation officer—and I don't know of any legal entity as an acting probation officer—it would be questionable in my mind, and before this evening's discussion I checked with my legal staff, who concur that we know of no legal authority they might have to apprehend and bring the child before the court or take what other measures might be necessary.

If the member envisages a situation where this person under the supervision of a full-time probation officer might be in a more or less remote community without the full-time probation officer immediately on site, they might have to act in their absence at some time to bring the child or the juvenile before the court. If they didn't have the full legal status of a probation officer as a result of the designation, I think they might well be subject to civil action if they were to interfere or to take a child before the court.

I think that it's important that they have this legal status in order to be able to act in those kinds of emergency situations.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the minister have a suggested amendment that he wishes to put?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, I have, Mr. Chairman. I would move that subsection 2 of section 2 of the Act be amended by adding at the end thereof "that every such designated probation officer shall exercise the powers and perform the duties assigned to the probation officer under the supervision and the direction of a probation officer appointed under subsection 1."

Mrs. Campbell: Does that mean a full-time probation officer?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, it would be someone appointed under the Public Service Act. That is the amendment I would propose, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Stong: We could support that.

Mr. Martel: That is lovely.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You are kidding.

An hon. member: No, my friends to the left have seen the light of the night.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would ask the member for Bellwoods, in light of the amendment by the minister, would he withdraw his amendment to delete the subsection?

Mr. Stong: Yes, be a man.

Mr. Warner: We rescued you.

Mr. McClellan: I am quite pleased with the course of this evening's debate and I think—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would ask the member—I am not giving you the floor; I simply ask you yes or no.

Mr. McClellan: I can do it in my own way in my own time, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Norton: He is telling you the state of his mind.

Mr. McClellan: We have debated for—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Too long.

Mr. McClellan: —a long time and it's been very fruitful. We have reached an accommodation and I will withdraw—

An hon. member: He's really trying to take credit. He can't do it.

Mr. McClellan: —my amendment on section 2(2) and I withdraw my amendment on section 3.

It's clear that our amendments would not carry and that the amendment that the minister has proposed—

Mr. Warner: Talk about reasonable.

Mr. Cooke: He cracked under pressure.

Mr. McClellan: —is useful because it has served to move the Liberal Party away from their intransigent—

An hon. member: That's right.

Mr. McClellan: —and slavish support of the minister.

Mrs. Campbell: Now you are trying to make me mad.

Mr. McClellan: The process of debate on legislation in this House is always a fascinating thing to behold and it justifies itself. It is really worth while putting up speaker after speaker to batter away at foolish laws and foolish measures because in the process laws are changed and laws are improved so I withdraw my amendment and am pleased to support the amendment proposed by the minister.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. Mr. Norton has moved that subsection 2 of section 2 of the Act be amended by adding at the end thereof " that every such designated probation officer shall exercise the powers and perform the duties assigned to the probation officer under the supervision and direction of a probation officer appointed under subsection 1."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall the balance of the bill carry?

Mr. McClellan: I have a question, not an amendment. I did want to make sure that—

An hon. member: The miracle of minority government.

Mr. McClellan: —I understood the act really well before it carries. I want to ask the minister whether there are any changes in the duties of a probation officer between the original Probation Act and the duties of a probation officer as spelled out in section 5 of Bill 95.

In other words, has Bill 95 changed the duties or the function of a juvenile probation officer in any way? Or do you know?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, do you have an answer to the question?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. There is some abbreviation from the previous Probation Act—

Mr. Martel: The answer is on your arm. That is how you passed exams.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Basically, those provisions which related primarily and more clearly to adult probationers have been removed since this is applicable only to juveniles. Would you like me to read to you the portions which do not—

Mr. McClellan: I have all the sections here. I want—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I mean of the previous act?

Mr. McClellan: I have that too.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You have that too. Then presumably you know the answer to the question.

Mr. McClellan: No. That was not a trick question.

Mr. Martel: No. He didn't ask you if you would agree.

Mr. McClellan: I'll phrase it another way—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. McClellan: —just so that I may try to understand. It remains the function of a probation officer under the new bill to make a report after a conviction has been made. Is that correct? But not before a conviction has been made.

Mrs. Campbell: The equivalent of a conviction.

Mr. McClellan: Right. The equivalent of a conviction.

Mrs. Campbell: A finding.

Mr. McClellan: A finding has been made by the court. But there is no intention of a report to be made by the probation officer until a finding has been made by the court. Is that a correct understanding?

Hon. Mr. Norton: There would be no role that I know of for the involvement of a probation officer until such time as there had been a finding. That is, unless it happened to be in a situation where there might be a charge resulting from a breach of the probation. In that case there may well be some role—but only of an evidentiary nature, surely, going to some finding by the judge. Otherwise the probation officer's role would effectively materialize at the time of a finding.

Bill 95, as amended, reported.

MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES ACT

Consideration of Bill 85, An Act to revise the Ministry of Correctional Services Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Ziembra: This section outlines all the functions of the ministry and the rights of inmates. I wonder whether the minister is prepared somewhere in this section to bring in either an amendment or provide a regulation regarding the right to vote for inmates who are on remand or are awaiting trial, and who in fact are innocent. That provision doesn't exist now. I wonder whether the minister has thought about that at all.

Hon. Mr. Drea: This was first proposed, rather a short form of it, by the Ombudsman. I support the concept of inmates in the provincial system being allowed to vote provincially, that's what he asked. Municipally, it would be very difficult because of address.

It is not within my power. It has to come within another act. But I have supported it publicly and not just for remand inmates. Actually, with a remand inmate it is a double standard, because one may be charged and remanded outside of custody and the person is perfectly free to vote. But if a person is remanded in custody, the only thing preventing that person from voting is the fact that the person can't be enumerated or visit a poll.

There is also a double standard with the intermittent person because he only serves Friday night, Saturday and Sunday and is usually available at home to be enumerated. Since provincial elections are on Thursdays, he does have the right to vote, notwithstanding the fact that he is under sentence. While I support it and I have been urging my cabinet colleagues to move in that direction, it is beyond my authority within either legislation or in a regulatory way to amend the particular provincial status covering elections.

Section 4 agreed to.

Sections 5 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Bradley: The minister has had representations made to him, as have the opposition critics, concerning the worries of the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Society particularly, as two groups working with people within our institutions, about serving under the direction of an employee of the ministry.

I think they are hopeful that perhaps an amendment of some sort could be brought forward, recognizing that the ministry probably does not see either of these organizations as being a problem in this area, but may see other problems. I would ask the minister to comment on that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I understand the John Howard Society has been in touch with our solicitor. They have not been in touch with me and neither has the Elizabeth Fry Society, notwithstanding the fact that I was with the Elizabeth Fry Society as late as late last week. The difficulty is almost the same as was expressed in the debate on the previous bill. It is a matter of supervision.

There is no quarrel or no question about volunteers. One of the reasons I was late tonight was that I was honouring volunteers. We depend upon volunteers and also on private social agencies for a great deal of our work. There is an overriding matter of security. The security arrangements mean supervision inside, although you're quite right with organizations such as that it is so nominal that it really isn't apparent sometimes. Nonetheless, the aspect of security is one concern.

Also, from time to time groups come in for a particular reason, not as all-encompassing as the John Howard or the Elizabeth Fry, or Fortune or the Salvation Army. They come in for a specific purpose. What we are saying in essence in this is that we want them to be under the supervision of the person in charge of the institution at that time. If it's at night time, generally it's not the superintendent.

It would be very difficult to set up a scale of certain organizations which were not under the supervision. Another group I should mention too is Alcoholics Anonymous. I'm not talking about them as being in a very narrow area; they're in a very broad area. It would be very difficult to set up a sliding scale that some have qualified and that others hadn't. Frankly, I think their concerns are not warranted. The fact of the matter is that both are signing contracts with us to run CRCs when they are under specific direction of the superintendent of the institution to which they are attached.

When we're dealing with sentenced inmates, I don't think we would want to be in a position where we were delegating our total authority to groups which were not within the ministry. Then we'd be beginning to come perilously close to altering the particular sentence of the court. It's one thing to have them doing 99.9 per cent of our work, if we can still argue legally that we have retained effective control of the particular sentenced inmate. On those grounds it would be extremely difficult. I don't think any minister and I don't think any ministry has ever met as much in the past few months with volunteer groups, and we have set up very specific lines of communication.

If there is a particular difficulty or some kind of impediment we can get it straightened out very rapidly. That certainly has been very fruitful. I think that at the moment is a much more practical way of approaching it than trying to get into a sliding scale of who needs supervision and who doesn't.

Mr. Ziemba: I would like to amend section 9 by adding at the end, "non-governmental agencies shall direct and be accountable for persons serving as volunteers with them in programs in partnership with the ministry"; and further, "MPPs continue to enjoy unlimited access to all provincial detention centres."

I don't see that spelled out anywhere in the bill, and I may as well put that in there now that we have the opportunity. I think the amendment speaks for itself.

Mr. Chairman: Would the honourable member send a copy to the chair?

Mr. Ziemba: There's no one here. I don't see why the ministry should have total control over inmates. The people like the John Howard Society and the Elizabeth Fry Society have a very credible record in dealing with—

Mr. Ruston: On a point of order, I wonder if the member could supply a copy of his amendment, please.

Mr. Ziemba: I'm sorry.

Mr. Haggerty: Within 24 hours.

Mr. Chairman: I will read the amendment.

An hon. member: Do you have any more copies?

Mr. Ziemba: Mr. Chairman, I had assumed the minister was going to move that amendment. That was the information I had received, and I was disappointed—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not from me, you didn't.

Mr. Ziemba: No, not from you, but I am disappointed that you didn't introduce this—because certainly we have to have confidence in these two very progressive organizations, Elizabeth Fry and John Howard.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What are you going to do with the Salvation Army?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I think it might be helpful, and could I make this suggestion to the committee, that we stand this section down for a few moments and have copies made?

Mr. Ziemba: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Drea: May I say before you stand that down, it was in the time of Mr. Grossman as minister that the extension was given that all MPPs could visit institutions at any time. That has never been changed. I don't think anybody's ever going to change it. I'm perfectly willing to put it in the act, but I would prefer it to be a privilege of the House and to leave it out of there. It's just automatically a privilege of being an elected member of the House that you automatically have the right to visit an institution at any time.

Mr. Warner: Spell it out.

Mr. M. Davidson: Let's enshrine it in the legislation.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's enshrined in the tradition of the House by now. I would prefer to leave it there. If you're so worried about it, I mean, you've never tried to visit an institution. You never asked me. Nobody ever bothers. Mr. Ziemba and Mr. Bradley and a couple of others are the only people who ever go. I don't know why you want it in here.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Ziemba's was involuntary confinement.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Ziemba's a professional.

Mr. Chairman: I see there are copies arriving. Would the members of the committee still wish to have a little time to consider it?

Mr. Stong: I don't think it is necessary.

Mr. Chairman: All right, just for the information of the committee, Mr. Ziemba moves that the following be added to section

9: the words, "non-governmental agencies shall direct and be accountable for persons serving as volunteers with them in programs in partnership with the ministry"; and further, "MPPs continue to enjoy unlimited access to all provincial detention centres."

Mr. Ziemba: I have one more question of the minister. That's the business of receiving mail from inmates. A number of us—

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is not in the amendment.

Mr. Ziemba: I'm sorry?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Do you want to stay with the amendment?

Mr. Chairman: I placed the amendment. The hon. member should speak to the amendment.

Mr. Ziemba: I was wondering whether I should expand on the amendment to cover the opening of mail that MPPs receive.

Mr. Stong: What does that have to do with volunteering?

Mr. Ziemba: Seeing as we are on that one point, Mr. Chairman, would that be in order?

Mr. Chairman: That matter really isn't before the committee nor is it in the amendment. I would ask the hon. member to speak to his amendment.

Mr. Ziemba: I think the amendment speaks for itself. It establishes and suggests confidence in the John Howard Society and Elizabeth Fry Society. It suggests that we should continue our relationship with them and trust them to serve the needs of inmates and not to be answerable to or under the control of some official.

Mr. Germa: I am interested in the access to jails and institutions by MPPs. I fully concur that every elected member should have the right at his will to go in and take a look at these institutions. To this point in time, I certainly have not had any trouble gaining access, but I was a little perturbed by the minister's statement that no one had approached him and asked for permission. I don't think that as elected members of the House we should have to go to the minister prior to our visit and seek his permission to gain access. If that is what he is implying—

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, I'm not.

Mr. Germa: —that we have to do, then it is important that it is enshrined in legislation. I am going to ask the minister to get up on his back legs again and say it as he means it, that we have absolute access to these institutions without reference to the minister at any point in time that we see fit to enter into those places. I don't know whether the minister meant to say that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I didn't say it and you know it. You are just being the usual wise guy again.

Mr. Germa: You did imply that no one had made a complaint to you. I certainly have not made a complaint to you because I have had access. I am perturbed by your statement.

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, members don't have to come to me to go in.

Mr. Foulds: You don't interrupt the speaker while he is speaking.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I said that. The reason I raised the point was that it seemed to me there was no need to put it into words in legislation since there was no problem. Nobody had ever talked to me about it or asked my permission or anything else.

Mr. Samis: Why should they have to?

Hon. Mr. Drea: They shouldn't have to. The only reason I raised it was to show that no one had any difficulty. Since the member for Sudbury wants to be a little bit aggressive tonight, the only time I know you have ever been denied anything is when you made a phone call and they said they wanted to see you in person. That was reported to me by you. I accept that as a reasonable security precaution by the staff there. They don't recognize your voice. They will recognize your face.

Mr. Ashe: Heaven forbid.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have a question of the minister also involving this amendment and this general field. I am especially concerned about the minister's comments. I am not sure if I have an exact quote from the minister, but I think he used a phrase such as the traditional privileges of members of the House in regard to the amendment by the member for High Park-Swansea as to the right of members to enter these institutions. Then he touched by way of tangent on the question of mail coming to MPPs from people who are incarcerated. Are you considering that that falls in the same category in terms of traditional privilege of members of the House that we MPPs should receive our mail in an unopened state from inmates?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, I don't even receive mail that is unopened nor is what I send back unopened. It is not a traditional thing in the House. As a matter of fact, it is so untraditional that when the Ombudsman Act was written, that was specifically put into the Ombudsman Act, both the coming out and the going in.

If you want it, I am perfectly prepared to introduce an amendment myself. This one is faulty in its language. I know the member didn't mean to make it faulty, but it says "unlimited access to all provincial detention centres." I think the member would want "provincial correctional centres"; I think the member wants all of them, and not just the number designated as DCs. If it is the will of the House, certainly I am willing to put it in here.

My only problem is that I don't like to put into a specific piece of ministry legislation what is a tradition—mind you, the tradition isn't that old; I guess 15 years. Nonetheless, it is a tradition and it's a member's privilege. I would far rather, as a member, have it reside automatically with the privileges of members of the House, without even having to be written into legislation. I feel it's stronger when it has that automatic connotation by virtue of the office the member holds rather than specifically putting it into this act. However, I'll be guided by the House if the members want that. Frankly, I think it should be in another section.

I would also like to talk to this amendment. This amendment would be extremely difficult for us; as a matter of fact, it would be impossible. It says "nongovernmental agencies"—that means everybody; anybody can have an agency—"shall direct and be accountable for persons serving as volunteers with them in programs in partnership with the ministry." They're talking about a lot of people; for instance, the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies, the Salvation Army, the Fortune Society, the St. Leonard's Society. There are some rather obscure groups that may not be household names, because they happen to be in a particular geographic area or a particular religious denomination, or an offshoot. For instance, do we put in the Church Army? It's very difficult.

At the other extreme, in terms of nongovernmental agencies, four people can start one up tonight and come down very calmly and say, "We've got two volunteers. We want to come in. We will direct and be responsible." With a sentenced inmate, there is no partnership with the ministry. We fund, in a block manner, the John Howard and Elizabeth Fry societies and the other organizations for their institutional work, exactly the same as does the federal government. It's just a catch-all term, "institutional work." Whether it's the Salvation Army, which encompasses both pastoral and temporal care and social work, or the John Howard Society, which isn't in the pastoral field, it allows them a great deal of flexibility.

They're not in partnership with us. Where we have a specific written agreement or a contract in the CRC or for a particular social work program, specifically in that contract is the designation and delineation that in the CRC, for instance, the superintendent is in charge. He has to be, because they're sentenced inmates. They're not on parole. They're still sentenced. They're still in jail, even though the jail is physically separated and doesn't have bars.

Also, if they really thought about some of the implications of taking full responsibility for a volunteer—if they happened to get a volunteer who wasn't up to scratch, which happens from time to time, or if somebody under pressure or, for very obscure reasons, did something—frankly, I wouldn't want to be able to not only pass the buck but probably to get somebody involved in a great deal of proceedings on the basis that they were totally accountable.

The protection is that once we let them in, since they are operating under our direction, the social agency isn't going to incur any liability and isn't going to get into any difficulty. If something happens inside, they are not going to be in a position where an inmate might choose to enter into litigation against one of their people. The buck stops here. We have authorized the agency and its people. Indeed, what do we do with an ad hoc group that only exists because it has a partial board but it wants to do some work and very good work? I think it's much better for them to accept the titular direction and supervision from us and then we are responsible for the whole proceedings.

As a matter of fact, one of the things we have now is an indoctrination or a breaking-in course for new volunteers, regardless of who they are affiliated with, because of the fact that people who aren't familiar with correctional institutions quite often don't understand many of the restrictions which are based upon security. Quite frankly, to a layman, sometimes they appear to be very obtuse restrictions.

When they go through an indoctrination course and so on, all of the reasons these restrictions are there become very clear to them and they're able to plan their particular program and so forth around it. So, on the basis that this is so all-encompassing we don't have any partnerships for many of these things, we would virtually have to let everybody in; and at that point everybody would take responsibility for themselves.

If this was restricted to parole or to outside, after you have ceased being an offender and you have become an ex-offender, then I wouldn't see too much wrong with it. But when you are a sentenced inmate, bear in mind that we have an obligation to the court. They have imposed the sentence; you are still under that sentence. You haven't been released from it even partially. Therefore, whatever program we get you into, whether it's run by government or not, or in conjunction or what have you, we must accept responsibility for it in the same way as we accept responsibility for institutions.

The reason the superintendent of the institution to which the CRC is connected is responsible is how could we allow a sentenced inmate out to a private group? You can't release a sentenced inmate under the care and custody of somebody. The superintendent has to be responsible until the person passes the legal demarcation line from offender to ex-offender.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, I'm not exactly sure that I got the answer I was looking for from the minister. I was hoping that he might expand a bit more on the particular question I was interested in—

Hon. Mr. Drea: The mail?

Mr. M. N. Davison: —which is the mail. Could you expand, Mr. Minister, in this field?

First of all, do you think it would be a good idea if we members of the provincial parliament were able to receive unopened mail from inmates within your jurisdiction?

Second, I was a bit puzzled about a letter I received from your ministry a short time ago, which was a letter written to me from a former constituent who was currently within your broader constituency. He was writing about something that had nothing to do with the reason for his being in jail. He was writing to express a concern about a community problem.

I opened the letter from your ministry, in your ministry's envelope, and on a piece of ministerial stationery was an explanation as to why this poor soul happened to be incarcerated. Then there was the opened envelope that the inmate sent to me with his little note on the community concern he had raised. I really had a lot of trouble, frankly, connecting the two: Why the ministry would tell me why this person happened to be in jail. Frankly, I am not all sure that I really liked the idea of that mail coming to me in that fashion at all.

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, the second one was in error. I had asked for some documents and part of what was to come to me went to you in error.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Oh, you are familiar with the particulars?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, I get these. I read every one of them.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Oh, so it was simply an error?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, oh yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That answers the second question.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Now, the reason for the mail being opened, mail going both ways with the exception of the Ombudsman's, is the question of contraband; it's a question of security. Who knows where an envelope bearing either the signature or the letterhead of an MPP came from? Quite frankly, it's opened—not for reading, nobody cares about the reading—they are glanced at from time to time; just a glance to make sure that it really is from an MPP.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I am concerned the other way around.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The other way around is to make sure that there isn't contraband coming out.

Mr. M. N. Davison: To the MPP?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It may very well be that they're writing to an MPP and there's another envelope inside, et cetera, that contains contraband. The letter to the MPP says: "Would you please forward this letter to so and so?" Even the letters that come to me are opened—I shouldn't say opened, they are pre-censored or whatever you want to call it; however, they are read. It is a question of security and a question of contraband. The inmate is made aware of that.

The general practice, if you want to get into looking at mail from a sentenced inmate, is that once you get on the list and they know your wife's name or they know to whom you are writing, after you have written them a couple of times, they just look at the letter to make sure there is nothing in the envelope that shouldn't be there and let it go ahead. When another name comes on, they want to establish who it is. It is a security measure that I am not prepared to take off.

They write to me and there is no question that they have every right in the world to write to me. I read it and I write them back. At both ends, it is read before it goes out, or at least the envelope is opened and maybe the letter is scanned. That doesn't bother me one whit. It didn't bother me one whit when I was a private member.

The Legislature and the inmates are fully aware of it. The Legislature has said there is a special category that even the bounds of security don't touch, that is, the Ombudsman. I agree with it. If they want to write a letter of complaint, quite frankly, I would rather they write to the Ombudsman than to me. I eminently prefer they go to the Ombudsman. Then it is totally impartial and they are satisfied in their own minds. I think that is very important. The Ombudsman does an excellent job with those letters.

When it goes to him, they are handed the paper and the envelope. The envelope is sealed and is delivered to the Ombudsman untouched. When the Ombudsman sends back a reply, it is delivered to the inmate untouched.

In terms of the security arrangement for letters to MPPs, I wouldn't be prepared to alter things. I know to an MPP this seems an infringement. We have a number of people on the inside who are remarkably clever about how they get out particular types of communications. They are not complaints about conditions, they are not complaints about the system, they are generally setting up what is tomorrow's score and telling you where to be on certain occasions. We are going to continue to do it in the name of security.

Mr. Warner: On complaints about the minister.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I just have a final comment, if I may. I understand what the minister is saying. I think he has a reasonable point, although personally, as an individual member of this House, I disagree with him quite strongly on that point. I suspect, however, I am in a minority or that would not be.

Mr. MacBeth: You sure are.

Mr. Ashe: Hopefully.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Fair enough. I find it an abuse of my privileges, if only a mild one, that any of my mail is opened. I accept being in a minority on that and I accept the will of the majority.

Mr. MacBeth: You should think less of your privileges and a little more of your responsibilities over there.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Did you have a liquid supper tonight?

Mr. Warner: When you wake him up he gets grouchy.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I understand the minister's sensitivity on the issue and I thank him for his careful response to my concern.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I just want to make it very clear that there is no question about trusting you. I trust you; I just don't trust the other end. Also, I will be honest with you. If we didn't have the Ombudsman and the Ombudsman legislation, I think I might be prepared to take another look at it. That is there and I think that is the proper vehicle for the inmate to use rather than the members of this House.

First of all, the Ombudsman has a full-time correctional staff. They investigate most fully and most promptly. The situation in Ottawa, for instance, was settled to everybody's satisfaction. Those charges were not true. If we were still on the old system, it probably would have taken us many months with a great deal of impact upon the community. I think, through Mr. Patterson in the Ombudsman's office and his correctional investigators right across the province, that the present system works very well.

Mr. Ziemia: I am not prepared to surrender my authority to the Ombudsman. I haven't had mail opened. I assumed that whenever an inmate wrote to me that it would come sealed, that this was the normal course of events. I know for a fact it is the case with federal institutions. Why should your officials be opening our mail? Surely to God prisoners can confide in their MPPs. That's what we are here for. I am not prepared to surrender that authority to the Ombudsman. If we have to put that into an amendment, we darn well will, but I don't believe the member for—where are you from?—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Hamilton Centre.

An hon. member: From nowhere.

Mr. Ziemia:—Hamilton Centre is in a minority at all. I think I speak for all members on this side of this House when it comes to our mail privileges. We don't want our mail opened and we are not afraid of receiving contraband from prisoners; but we are interested in their comments on the institutions and any complaints they might have.

Mr. Ashe: Did you write when you were on the other side?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't find it offensive. I want to make it very clear the letter isn't stopped. In many cases the letter is just scanned and the envelope goes out. I am going to state my case that I regard it as very fundamental to the security in our institutions.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't care two whits what the federal government does. They run a second-class system as far as I am concerned. It's going to remain, I want to put it to you, on the basis of security.

An hon. member: A cheap shot, Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is needed.

An hon. member: You have enough trouble with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) now.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I am a little reluctant to rise to my feet again after the rebuff I got from the minister on my first presentation when he charged me with being aggressive. Little does he know—

An hon. member: Never.

Mr. Germa: —that I am one of his greatest supporters. I don't know how many times I have—

An hon. member: You are in trouble, Frank.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Foulds: There goes his credibility with the rest of his colleagues in the cabinet, right down the drain.

Mr. Germa: This is right from the heart. I don't know how many times I have supported this minister in his recent activities since he has taken over this very important portfolio.

An hon. member: He's trying to think of one.

Mr. Germa: All of those progressive things he's done—they know that in my riding of Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'll never be able to do another one.

Mr. Germa: Yes. The guys come to me and say that Frank Drea is really doing good. I say "yes, sir; that's one of the best ministers we have in Ontario." Then for him to attack me and accuse me of being aggressive—

Mr. Bounsall: He doesn't read your press releases.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is going to lose his nomination if you keep this up.

Mr. Germa: —I just can't understand it.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Germa: As long as we have this minister in Correctional Services I can accept his word that precedent will prevail and we will have access to institutions. But is it written any place in his manual of administration or his manual of operation, so that when we lose this very good minister, this 100 per cent minister, and we get some other irrational person in his portfolio—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For example, a new government.

Mr. Germa: —is our access going to be denied?

Let me tell you how some other ministers operate. The Burwash Correctional Institution, which closed down some three and a half years ago—I had been used to going through that gate when—

Mr. Stong: Every day or on the weekends?

Mr. Germa: Not every day. When that institution was—

Mr. Stong: It was called intermittent serving of sentence.

Mr. Germa: —under Correctional Services there was no problem. I used to go in and out of that place, and then they closed it down—

Mr. Walker: Probably had a day pass.

Mr. Germa: —and it fell into the control of the Ministry of Government Services. You know who it was at that time, eh? It was the member for St. David (Mrs. Scrivener).

Mr. Samis: Oh, oh.

Mr. Germa: So here is this deserted institution—35,000 acres of empty land. I had reason again to go into the institution. By one means or another I had got through the gate and the word got back to Toronto here to the member for St. David's, who was the Minister of Government Services—

Mr. Rotenberg: There isn't a St. David's in this House.

Mr. Germa: She found out half an hour after I had entered the property that I was on her property and she made a public statement she's going to charge me with trespass; and the place is empty.

You see, we can't depend on ministerial words. I have no doubt that, as long as this minister is in that post, I will have unrestricted access.

Mr. Stong: To Burwash.

Mr. Samis: And there could be another Scrv!

Mr. Germa: I know the minister is an honourable man; I agree with him and I believe him; but what I am afraid of is that at some point in time we might get another minister like the one we had in the member for St. David (Mrs. Scrivener), and I might go into the Sudbury jail and be a trespasser—

Mr. Foulds: And he would be incarcerated and watched by the member for St. David.

Mr. Germa: Is it written in regulations, in operations, or where is it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I understand that it is now in our manual of administration, which is binding upon superintendents. It has been there for some time. I would be very glad to file that with the Clerk of the House. That might take care of it.

However, as I said before—and we will obviously be coming back on this—if it is the feeling of the honourable members that they would prefer to see it in the ministry act, it will probably be the simplest amendment we will ever have put through. I can understand the feelings of the member for Sudbury—not completely, but I can understand his concerns.

Mr. Bounsall: He wants to be your friend.

Mr. Germa: I want to be your friend.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oddly enough—and I know we're late—I thought it was in legislation myself until I found out it was strictly an order by Mr. Allan Grossman when he was the minister and it had carried on. So it is up to the member. It is filed in the manual of administration, which is binding upon superintendents. We would be prepared to file a copy with the Clerk of the House; that might satisfy everybody.

Mr. Chairman: I would remind the committee, it is now past 10:30 p.m. Will there be further comments on this amendment?

Some hon. members: Yes.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment, and reported progress on two others.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:33 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

MEMBER'S ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, before the proceedings this afternoon, I'd like to draw to all honourable members' attention something I don't think should go unnoticed, that is, that yesterday was the 30th anniversary of the election to this assembly of the very distinguished and hard-working member for Stormont-Dundas-Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve). I think we should take due note of that this afternoon and congratulate him for that.

Mr. Martel: He must be due for pension.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I have a rather lengthy statement today. Since my statement was prepared, I understand there are a number of other statements from ministries as well. I shall attempt to abbreviate my oral statement, assuring members that there will be copies of it available to every member of the House as well as the members of the press gallery.

Later today, I will be introducing for first reading a set of amendments to reform nine acts dealing with children's services in the province of Ontario.

These proposed changes result from the Consultation Paper on Short-Term Legislative Amendments, which was released last December, and the province-wide consultation process which followed.

The amendments demonstrate my determination to honour a commitment made to this House last year when a wide range of services to children were transferred into the children's services division of my ministry, effective July 1. At that time I stated that the long-term task of the ministry, to develop an integrated and co-ordinated approach to the delivery of services to children and families, would not be done at the expense of those pressing issues which must be faced in the interim.

Mrs. Campbell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: We can't hear what the minister is saying. Could we turn up the volume?

An hon. member: All he does is mumble. He should speak up.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker; I normally don't have that problem in the House. I don't know whether it's some faulty electronic equipment or not.

Mr. Warner: There's nothing wrong with the sound system. It's a faulty minister.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We always have trouble understanding the minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's not uncommon.

An hon. member: When you have nothing to say, it's hard to be heard.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the console operator could turn on another microphone.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I now have two microphones on, Mr. Speaker; perhaps that's better.

Mr. Nixon: It makes it twice as sensible.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Thank you very much.

In a number of areas, such as child abuse, training school closures and program priorities, those interim issues are now being addressed.

The legislative changes contained in the bills I will introduce today indicate our continuing commitment to change, when and where it is required.

The acts to be affected by the amendments are the Child Welfare Act; the Day Nurseries Act; the Children's Boarding Homes Act, to be renamed the Children's Residential Services Act; the Children's Institutions Act; the Training Schools Act; the Provincial Courts Act; the Unified Family Court Act; the Children's Mental Health Centres Act and the Children's Mental Hospitals Act, the last two to be renamed the Children's Mental Health Services Act.

The most extensive legislative amendments relate to the field of child welfare and involve a substantial redrafting of the Child Welfare Act.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you write a new one?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Foulds: Have you lost the place?

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, I haven't; I have got it. I am just trying to relieve members from about 10 pages of statement.

A summary of the full package has been prepared and is part of the background documentation which will be tabled in the House and delivered to all members of the House.

Some additional points should be made. First, the ministry's commitment to public consultation on proposed changes has proved to be very valuable. Not only was the response to the green paper extensive and wide-ranging—we received 226 written submissions and ministry staff held 40 meetings with interested groups across the province—but it also had a clear effect on the policy decisions that were made within the ministry.

Included in the background documentation is a paper discussing the changes that were made as a result of the consultation process.

In addition, I would like to advise that a great deal of work is proceeding within the ministry to complement the changes contained in the legislation introduced today.

In the area of children's rights, a paper on advocacy is to be released which will deal with such issues as a child's rights in residential care, outside the parental home.

Regulations, rules of practice and procedure, and program guidelines are now being prepared to enable implementation of both the legislative changes and their underlying principles.

Residential care standards are also being developed which will set standards for the organization, management, funding, programs and the facilities' responsibility to the community. These proposed standards will be released later this summer.

Finally, work has begun on omnibus legislation which will bring together all the laws relating to children's services and will establish one co-ordinated approach to the provision of assistance to children and families with special needs.

I am asking for the co-operation of the members of this House to agree to have these bills receive second reading before the House rises for the summer recess. I do this so that these important bills may be referred to the standing committee on social development for members' scrutiny before the House reconvenes in the fall. It is my hope that these bills will receive third reading during the early part of the fall session.

In conclusion, I would like to acknowledge the tremendous amount of work that has gone into the preparation of this legislation over the last eight months or so on the part both of my ministry staff and the legislative counsel. It represents many months of long days of work. On many occasions staff literally worked throughout the night in order to meet deadlines we had established. I would like to acknowledge the tremendous effort they put into it to make it possible for me to meet the commitment I made to this House to bring in the legislation during this session.

Mr. Nixon: It should have been in by May 1.

DISCRIMINATORY BUSINESS PRACTICES BILL

Hon. Mr. Davis: Last fall I introduced into this House An Act to prohibit Discrimination in Business Relationships. This legislation, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, was intended to "make it clear, in so far as Ontario was concerned, economic boycotts which prejudiced citizens of this province by virtue of their ethnic background, religious affiliation or freely expressed views will not be tolerated by this Legislature and the people of Ontario." Today I wish to reintroduce that bill in a slightly amended form.

Mr. Roy: I thought that had been vetoed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: While it is not necessary for me to repeat all I said upon introduction of the bill on the previous occasion, I do believe there are two major points that could stand repetition for purposes of emphasis.

First, there is no question that the desired objectives of this bill would be more directly attained by legislation aimed at trade and commerce, foreign trade, shipping, money and banking or criminal law. These areas are, however, within the competence of the government of Canada, and it is only at that level that legislation in this form could emanate. Since, however, the federal government does not seem willing to undertake a legislative approach to the issue and since this House may deal with matters of property and civil rights, we have attempted to address the problem from that particular point of view.

Secondly, I indicated at the time of original introduction that the legislation such as has been introduced would have impact upon and create concern within the business community. It is for that reason we tabled the bill, prior to the House proroguing, so as to give members of the business world and others who might be interested ample time to put forward constructive suggestions.

With the passage of time and the opportunity to reflect upon the comments we have received, I am again introducing this legislation in a form very similar to that which you saw last fall, Mr. Speaker, but with a number of changes that reflect the discussions that have been held and the opinions that have been forthcoming. In saying that, however, I do not want to deceive anyone in this Legislature into believing that the concerns of the business community have been answered or even diminished.

Many people see the expansion of wealth and the demands of goods and services in the Middle East as creating a large potential market for Canadian industry which may be adversely affected by legislation of this kind. We are fully aware of these circumstances. Nevertheless, it is my belief that Ontario cannot allow fears of this kind to stand in the way of our offering a clear indication of our abhorrence of discriminatory practices in business that are related to the ethnic origins or religious affiliations or particular views of people who live and work within our province.

In fairness to the business community, however, it is my belief that those who have concerns should have an opportunity to discuss them with members of this Legislature before any legislation is finally approved. For this reason I would suggest that when this bill is given second reading, going back to the observations made by the members opposite at that time, on the assumption that it is approved by this House, I think this bill should be referred to a committee of the Legislature where an adequate exchange of views and a full hearing of concerns can be conducted.

Finally, despite what I regard as a sound and appropriate effort by this province, to deal directly with this situation, it must surely be obvious to all concerned that the matter would be more properly and more adequately handled if the federal government were to follow our lead and introduce legislation that would apply on a national scale.

The Prime Minister and other members of his cabinet have already indicated their concern about discriminatory business practices of the kind we are trying to overcome. I have no reason to doubt the sincerity of their convictions. On the other hand, the measures they have taken to date which fall short of the introduction of legislation, are clearly not satisfactory to those who wish Canada to take a firm stand on this position. I would, therefore, once again commend to the Prime Minister and the government of Canada the notion that federal legislation would be a much better approach if Canadians are to show a truly national concern in regard to this matter.

Last fall when I brought forward the original bill, I said I was proud of what it represented and of the leadership by this province that it reflected. I remain of that mind, and I trust that that feeling is shared by all members and all parties in this House. [2:15]

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. Conway: Here it is.

Mr. Bradley: Here it is.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I hope the members of the opposition have received a copy of this statement. I know there was a last-minute delay because of a typographical error which has been corrected. I gather the members have received a copy.

Mr. Deans: It just arrived.

An hon. member: You made a ministerial error.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Later today, in accordance with my promise to the Legislature, I will be tabling a statement on heavy water production and marketing and the urgent need for a national heavy water policy.

Mr. Bradley: Passing the buck.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would, however, in the interests of brevity, mention the key points of this statement now to the Legislature. The essential facts are these:

1. Ontario Hydro's forecast of demand for heavy water is based upon its forecast of the growth in demand for electricity. Hydro's annual electricity demand forecasts were reviewed and accepted by the Ontario Energy Board in 1974 and by the select committee and the Legislature in 1976.

2. Up to the end of 1977, Ontario Hydro's annual reviews of its demand for heavy water confirmed the necessity of the Bruce heavy water plants now owned or under construction by Ontario Hydro and, until 1976, of one additional heavy water plant. This fourth plant, known as Bruce heavy water plant C, was cancelled when the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough) capital constraint program in January 1976 led to a reduced need for heavy water for Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Conway: That's an interesting statement.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: 3. There has been an unexpected sharp reduction in the forecast growth in demand for electricity in Ontario for the period 1978 to the end of the century which has implications for Ontario Hydro's own demand for heavy water and its ability to sell heavy water to the rest of Canada and abroad.

4. In January 1978, the federal government announced it was proceeding with the construction of the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited La Prade heavy water plant to meet Quebec and export market requirements.

5. Ontario Hydro advised me in April of this year that its sharply lower load forecast for electricity would involve considerable revision to the amount of heavy water Hydro would require. Even though Hydro's analysis of the implications was not complete and Hydro had not made any recommendations to me, I immediately initiated a review of the implications of the lower load forecast and the reduced need for heavy water. I felt this was particularly important in light of the federal government's decision to continue the construction of the La Prade heavy water plant.

6. My ministry's preliminary—and I should stress "preliminary"—assessment suggests that Canada has committed heavy water plant capacity which exceeds the current domestic and export forecast demand.

7. The Ontario Hydro Bruce heavy water plant D will be able to meet all of the demand that the La Prade plant is designed to supply and will do it more reliably and at a much lower cost.

8. The AECL La Prade plant is estimated to cost $1.5 billion, which is more than twice as much as the Bruce heavy water plant D even though the La Prade plant has an expected capacity of 22 per cent less than Bruce D. The D plant is expected to cost $650 million, as compared with $1.5 billion for La Prade.

An hon. member: What's that got to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: 9. I have on several occasions discussed this matter with the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Conway: This is the domino theory.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I also wrote a letter to him on May 29 calling for a comprehensive, integrated federal-provincial program for the future production and marketing of heavy water.

Mr. Bolan: Trouble, Reuben.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In summary, I have urged the federal government:—

Mr. Bradley: You're the greatest buck-passer when you don't know.

Mr. Mancini: Same old line.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —1. that there is a clear and urgent need for a comprehensive, integrated federal-provincial program for the future production and marketing of heavy water;—

Mr. Bolan: Why do you have to run to them to bail you out?

Mr. Kerrio: Your country cousins.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —2. that an early start be made by federal and Ontario officials to verify the status of the heavy water supply/demand situation;

3. that the federal government, on an urgent basis, reconsider its decision to proceed with the construction of La Prade, since Bruce D will be able to meet all of the demand that La Prade could satisfy and will do so more reliably and at much lower cost;

4. that in any event the considerably cheaper heavy water expected to be produced by Ontario Hydro should not be excluded from either domestic or export markets as a result of a monopoly supply situation which might be assumed by AECL or conferred on it by the federal government.

The federal minister has not yet responded officially to my May 29 letter. But he has indicated to me informally at least, as late as of last Saturday, that he agrees that our officials should get together as quickly as possible to co-ordinate heavy water production and marketing in Canada. I intend vigorously to follow up this matter with him.

This change in Ontario Hydro's heavy water supply situation, given the very attractive cost advantages which Ontario Hydro has over AECL plants provides it with an opportunity to market any surplus production it may have, thus providing a savings to the Ontario electrical consumer. Also, to the extent that this cheaper cost will lower the selling price of the Candu reactor in the export market and thereby enhance its sales potential, it will benefit all Canadians.

I should also like to assure this House and the public generally that our government has no intention of allowing the federal government's decision to continue with respect to the construction of its expensive La Prade heavy water plant to jeopardize not only the more than 4,000 man years of employment involved in the construction of heavy water plant D at Bruce but also to jeopardize Ontario's heavy water industry.

We will not rest until this country embarks upon a sound, rational federal-provincial program encompassing the production—

An hon. member: You will be resting after the next election.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and marketing of heavy water in Canada and abroad.

Mr. Nixon: Even though you are the one who overbuilt.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And if the result is a choice between cancelling Bruce D or La Prade, we believe it will be in the best interest of all Canadians to continue Bruce D.

Mr. Nixon: The attitude of this statement is certainly designed to get agreement.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister must be gratified with the letter to the editor in the Star today.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would anticipate, and do urge, that on this position we stand as one in this House.

Mr. Breithaupt: You have given them 10 days to clean it up. You are very good.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: By the time the select committee begins its hearings this July, I would expect that Ontario Hydro's analysis will be complete, that the Hydro board will have considered this matter—

An hon. member: Same old story.

Mr. Nixon: Your great planning of the last decade.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and will have advised me of its views, and that further discussions will have been held with the federal government.

Mr. Foulds: We will fight them on the beaches. We will fight them in the heavy water.

Mr. Nixon: Monumental debacle of Ontario Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In the meantime, I shall advise the House of any significant developments as they occur.

Mr. Lewis: What an unnecessarily belligerent statement this is.

Mr. Nixon: What a paper tiger the minister is.

Mr. Foulds: Why is he so full of bombast?

Mr. Nixon: The minister is a phoney.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An hon. member: Must be private members' afternoon.

Mr. Lewis: How can you get a promise with a statement like this?

Mr. Foulds: And you wrote the letter only seven days ago. You don't even answer your letters in seven days.

An hon. member: We've got a jerk for a minister.

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I made a statement in the Legislature concerning the extensive participation by employers in the 1978 Ontario Youth Employment Program. A projection of the number of participants and jobs was also provided and the cost in 1978-79, if the program remained open-ended, was estimated to amount to $55 million, some $38 million over the 1978 budget figure. Reluctantly, I announced that the government could not afford this large increase and, therefore, was placing a lid on the OYEP funding by establishing that applications postmarked after midnight that day, June 1, would not be processed.

It has been brought to our attention that the enforcement of this immediate cutoff date would deprive unfairly a number of employers of participation in the program who had requested application forms, particularly during the latter part of May. To alleviate this unfavourable situation I am pleased to advise that the government has decided to change the June 1 deadline date as follows:

An hon. member: A flip-flop.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: First, for those employers—approximately 3,500—who in the latter part of May had officially requested application forms but had not been sent them, such forms will be forwarded by mail on or before next Monday.

An hon. member: That's a great come around.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Completed applications in this group which are received by the ministry or postmarked on or before June 26 will be scrutinized and if approved, funds will be committed.

Second, for all other employers, and in particular to accommodate those to whom applications were forwarded in the latter part of May but would have had no reasonable time to complete and mail them by the cutoff date of June 1, the deadline has been extended three more days. Applications from employers in these categories received in the ministry or postmarked June 4 or prior will be scrutinized and, if approved, funds will be committed.

We believe this will provide an opportunity for participation to those who have indicated a sincere desire to take advantage of this program to provide meaningful jobs for our youth but through unfortunate time constraints were deprived of this opportunity. The estimated additional funding requirements to accommodate these changes will be approximately $5 million.

Full implementation of the Ontario Youth Employment Program will now cost approximately $25 million and will create well over 40,000 new jobs, an increase of more than 10,000 over what was originally planned for in my budget of March 7.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, members will recall that in January of this year I laid out a series of proposals for reforms of the property tax system to take effect with the introduction of market value assessments.

These proposals were subsequently reviewed by a committee of local government elected officials which reported in mid-April. The committee recommended implementation of market value assessment and property tax reform, along substantially the same lines as proposed in January, to take effect in 1979.

The government has now reviewed the committee's report, as well as the public response to both the report and the January proposals. After due consideration of all the issues involved, the government has decided not to present tax reform legislation to this House in the current session. This means that property tax—

Mr. Laughren: Darcy backs off again.

Mr. Swart: The fourth postponement.

Mr. Conway: Is your name Jarvis?

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—this means that property tax reform will not be implemented in 1979.

Mr. Breaugh: Twice in one session. Three times in one session.

Mr. Laughren: California scaring you? Did California spook you, Darcy?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Honourable members are just wasting time by interjecting.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In coming to this decision, the government has taken three factors in particular into consideration.

First, notwithstanding extensive documentation of the gross inequities of the existing property tax system, support for tax reform has been less than overwhelming. The 15 elected local government representatives who reported to cabinet in April—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Including you people.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—produced between them not only a consensus report but also 10 dissenting opinions. While many local governments and local government associations have supported reform, others have been opposed.

A large number of school boards, as well as some municipalities, are calling for more data and analysis before any changes are made.

Mr. Bradley: What we need is another committee.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In Metropolitan Toronto a number of boroughs have requested new data, while the city has gone on record as opposing market value assessment. In light of the substantial amount of data and analyses generated, and particularly that supplied to Metro municipalities, I cannot agree more analyses are needed. Instead, I believe many local politicians have not yet realized the need for moving on reform. For them, tax equity may be something devoutly to be wished for, but perhaps not worthwhile if the cost is decreased grants, or an increased portion of shared costs, or incurring the wrath of those taxpayers who are presently paying less than their fair share in taxes.

While local governments have been ambivalent in their reaction to tax reform, very few taxpayers have made their response to the January proposals known.

Mr. S. Smith: Government has come to a halt.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Doubtless this reflects in part the complexity of the property tax system. But even allowing for that factor, I am left with the impression that many taxpayers are more concerned about the possible impact of reform than they are about existing inequities.

Mr. Laughren: You don't have the courage, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The second factor in the government's consideration of the committee's report was the number of areas in which more work is required before a fully equitable system can be implemented.

Mr. Laughren: Ten years isn't enough.

Mr. Swart: Paper tiger.

Mr. Martel: How long, O Lord, how long?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would like to take this opportunity to compliment the local government politicians who reviewed the January proposals on doing a very good job within the time available. Having said that, I must also note that they left some of the more difficult problems to be resolved by the province. I am referring to the impact of reform on vacant land, on small businesses and on land-intensive recreational properties. The committee was not able to come up with complete answers in these areas, and neither have we in the time since the committee reported.

I must also say I do not find the committee's proposed treatment of Metro Toronto entirely satisfactory. A phase-in of up to 10 years appears inordinately long—

Mr. Martel: It is going to take three more decades, Bill, three more decades.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—and the proposed treatment of commercial properties could add to the current uncertain business outlook. This is therefore another area in which more work is required.

Mr. Cassidy: That's a flip-flop. You promised to protect the property taxpayers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The third reason I am not prepared to proceed with property tax reform legislation at this time, is simply because the province cannot afford it on the terms suggested by some people. Under the committee's proposals, the province would pay an additional $330 million in payments in lieu of property taxes at 1977 mill rates.

The committee did not support the idea of a dollar for dollar reduction in grants to finance this increase; although it agreed with budget paper B which outlined additional tax credit relief for senior citizens for 1979. Moreover, the committee called for additional provincial outlays for tax credits for businesses and in respect of land-intensive property. The overall 1979 cost of reform to the province would therefore be over $400 million if there were no reduction in grants. Given the goal of a balanced provincial budget by 1981—

Interjections.

An hon. member: Dream on, dream on; it's getting closer.

Mr. Laughren: You are being provocative again.

Mr. Breithaupt: 1984 is more like it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—I could not support such an outlay of over and above our normal transfers to local government unless there was a more solid commitment to reform. This is especially the case since the very process of reform could conceivably weaken business and investor confidence in Ontario.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: You won't be here then, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: While I do not intend to introduce property tax legislation in this session—

Mr. Laughren: No courage Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—my ministry will continue to work on the issues I have referred to today.

Mr. Cassidy: You are the Howard Jarvis of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Specifically, we will be trying to find solutions to the most critical property tax inequities in a number of municipalities.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REVIEWS

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Upon releasing the government's white paper on the review of local government in Metropolitan Toronto, I invited all councils and interested persons to submit their response by the end of May. While there was a limited time to examine and comment, the issues and proposals in the white paper were not new and had been debated many times previously.

I felt then, as well as now, that something could be done to provide necessary reform to the system of local government in Metropolitan Toronto, particularly to improve the system of representation and accountability in time for the elections this November.

Mr. S. Smith: You need help from Joe Clark.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It will be of interest to the members opposite that the reactions to both the Roberts report and the white paper indicate a much larger consensus exists in favour of direct election to Metro council than I expected there would be.

It is obvious, however, that the municipalities wish more time to study the proposals and their implications.

Mr. Nixon: We are not going to do anything about that either.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In fact, only two municipalities have thus far advised me that they have entertained the possibility of providing for new wards and electoral arrangements for use this fall. I might add that my hope that reforms to the representation system could be done now was confirmed at least by the borough of Etobicoke, which sent me last week a number of alternate ward revisions under consideration by the council.

Nevertheless, the government will not be introducing legislation to provide for these changes at this time. We are proposing instead to extend the deadline for submitting comments on the white paper to December 31, after the municipal elections this fall. After that time, we will undertake to discuss the proposals and the municipal reactions with each of the councils before proceeding with the appropriate legislation.

Mr. Laughren: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: The Treasurer, when he made his announcement, did not send copies to this party. We would appreciate that.

Mr. Speaker: Can that be attended to in keeping with the provisional orders?

Mr. Martel: Is it the Treasurer's intention to send copies of his statements to this side of the House so that we can see what's in them in the event we want to ask a question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I apologize that they were not sent. I believe they are being sent now and the members will have them in about 30 seconds. The attention paid by the members in not listening to the statements indicated to me their high degree of interest.

Mr. Martel: Maybe the Treasurer would like us to reply verbatim to what he said in his statement.

Mr. Hennessy: Good idea.

Mr. Martel: We were listening as he opted for his second decade in bringing in tax reform.

Mr. Mackenzie: The Treasurer is brave only with the wisecracks.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Education.

Mr. Warner: More delaying tactics.

METRO SCHOOL BOARD

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, coincident with the release of the government's white paper on local government in Metropolitan Toronto in early May, to which the Treasurer has just referred, there was also released a second white paper dealing specifically with matters related to the structure and organization of education systems within Metro.

Members will recall that the essential thrust of this paper was that a two-tier system ought to be retained, consisting of six area school boards and the Metropolitan Toronto School Board. In addition, there were proposals intended to strengthen the powers and authority of the Metro board.

As I said at the time, there is no doubt that the Metropolitan Toronto School Board has served education extremely well over the past 25 years. It has ensured Metro-wide equity in taxation for education, and it has ensured equality of educational opportunity throughout the Metropolitan Toronto area.

There have been some concerns expressed that the Metro school board is rather remote from the citizens of the Metro area. However, while I do not doubt the sincerity of those expressing such views, and while I fully acknowledge that certain steps could possibly be taken to make the board somewhat more directly accountable to taxpayers, my own view is that the two-tier system represents the best structure upon which to build improvements.

Mr. McClellan: You're wrong.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We originally asked for reaction to the white paper to be in our hands by the end of May. But clearly there is a need for an extension of this deadline. To date we have received briefs from only two area boards, while several others have requested that they be given more time to respond to our proposals.

Mr. Warner: You knew that was going to happen.

Mr. Foulds: How about December 31?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Similarly, while we have heard from some of the teacher organizations, others have yet to submit their reaction.

The government will not be introducing any legislative changes at this time. This means that the election of school trustees will proceed in November on precisely the same basis as in the past, and the Metro school board will continue to exist in its present form.

We are extending the deadline for submitting comments on the education white paper to December 31, 1978. This will allow us to have the full views of elected school trustees, including those who may be newly elected in November, as well as teachers, interested parents' groups and other citizens who may have views to present.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Conway: It being 6 o'clock—

Mr. Breaugh: Thursday again!

LIQUOR LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, since the announcement two weeks ago about raising the drinking age to 19, I have had an opportunity to receive extensive input from educators, parents and students. These responses, though generally supportive, have had one constant theme; that is, concern about the effective date of September 1, 1978.

Mr. Conway: Clean up the high schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has been pointed out that the key date for school—

Mr. Conway: You didn't know that before, eh?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —enrolment is December 31 each year the object being that all children born in the same year would pass through the school system as a group. A September 1 date then would have the effect of splitting and dividing the group of students born in 1960 into two categories, although they generally as a group have gone through the system together and are for the most part in the same grade.

Upon reflection, we think this point is well taken and in order to accommodate a reasonable and sensible phase-in of the change in the drinking age, I would like to inform the House that I will be moving an amendment to section 2 of Bill 96 to change the effective date of the new legislation for drinking age purposes to December 31, 1978.

All persons aged 18 on or before December 31, 1978, will maintain their right to consume alcohol. Those turning 18 in 1979 will not.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Energy: Accepting the fact that it would make common sense for the federal government not to proceed with the La Prade matter at this time—and we can support the minister in that—let's look at the matter of how we ended up with this so-called unforeseen surplus of heavy water in Ontario.

First of all, can the minister back up his statement—number four of his key points—which suggests that a sharp reduction in the forecast growth in demand for electricity is the reason for the diminution in the demand for heavy water. Surely the minister must realize that the diminution in growth and demand can only result in a need for less heavy water if fewer nuclear reactors are to be built. The need is per reactor.

That being the case, will the minister, realizing there has not been a single nuclear reactor cancelled since the plan of 1975-76, explain to us why it wasn't perfectly obvious then that we would have a surplus of heavy water now? Why did it take until 1978 for him to be able to find out that we have too much heavy water—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. S. Smith: —coming on stream for the number of nuclear reactors that we have?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Thank you very much for the speech.

Mr. Roy: Oh God forbid; don't give us one back.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I indicated in my statement, I made it clear that Ontario Hydro, in its submission of April 12, in its letter to us at that time, simply stated there were likely implications for the use and future use of heavy water in light of the revised forecasts. Ontario Hydro, at that time, did not make specific recommendations. They are now undertaking a detailed study of this. We will, in due course, be having the results of that study, and I suspect of the recommendations. This is not the time to get in-involved in the nitty-gritty details of hair-splitting.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Three quarters of a billion dollars?

Mr. Nixon: It's not a detail.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have acted—

Mr. T. P. Reid: What's a billion dollars?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Do members want me to answer this?

Mr. Riddell: Not unless you are doing better than you are now.

Mr. Martel: The Premier should replace some of those fellows. They're getting him in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have acted in a prudent fashion—

Mr. Breithaupt: Poppycock.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —on the basis of the possible implications coming out of that realized forecast.

Mr. Nixon: Thoroughly incompetent.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We do not, and you do not, have the details of that forecast, and therefore there is no argument on it at this particular point.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have simply taken some necessary, prudent steps—

Mr. Roy: You make statements, then studies.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —for the future production and the future use of heavy water both in Ontario and abroad. That's all we can do at this particular time. We cannot become engaged here in a detailed argument on data which is, as yet, nonexistent. Members don't have it. I don't have it.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Does the minister not recognize there are two basic matters that are at question here, apart from federal government policy, that have to do with the planning that has gone on in the offices of Ontario Hydro?

The first question, by way of supplementary, is this: Is the minister prepared to recognize that the need for heavy water is directly proportionate to the number of reactors planned between now and, let's say 1990? Is he prepared to accept that, since that number has not changed, in point of fact the imminent surplus must have been known to officials at Hydro, or should have been known to them, as far back as 1975-76? That being the case, will the minister explain to us by what reasoning he is able to accept that the surplus was unknown until just this past April?

The second point is, does the minister not recognize that the agreement between Hydro and AECL is absolutely crucial to these matters? Would he, therefore table this agreement; and would he confirm the fact that getting out of the pool arrangement was a mutual decision of Hydro and AECL; and would he table the reasons Hydro recently got out of that pool arrangement?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: To answer the second question first: The reason Ontario Hydro was in agreement to have the pooled agreement terminated at the end of December was that under that agreement both the cost and the price of heavy water production and marketing here in this country was pooled. Ontario Hydro was able to produce heavy water on a far more economical basis than the other partners—

Mr. Nixon: You wanted out when it was to your advantage.

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'll just give you a record of some bummers. The AECL Glace Bay heavy water plant was originally designed to have 54 kilograms of heavy water per hour. Glace Bay has never produced at more than 11 per cent of its capacity over all the years.

Mr. Nixon: You are blaming Trudeau for that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In 1977 it produced 14 per cent. In other words the cost of heavy water produced by Glace Bay is very expensive in comparison to the cost of the heavy water produced by Ontario Hydro.

Mr. S. Smith: Tell us all about the problems at Glace Bay.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: For example the Port Hawkesbury heavy water plant—another bumper—in 1971 produced at 15 per cent of its capacity; in 1976 it produced at 26 per cent.

Mr. Bradley: Is that parliamentary language?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If members compare these figures of production percentage of capacity with Ontario Hydro we are a winner here. We were very efficient, very efficient in spite of all—

Mr. S. Smith: The government is jeopardizing a $600 million plant.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —the ridicule members try to heap on Ontario Hydro. We have in this country the finest, most efficient heavy water plant in the world. Why aren't members proud of it for a change?

Mr. Laughren: Masters of propaganda.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: So there was no point at all for Ontario Hydro to continue in a situation where it was a partner with two losers.

Mr. Roy: It's the minister who is incompetent.

Ms. Gigantes: There isn't any heavy water at the AECL plant.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It was for their own benefit that on December 30, 1977, they terminated this agreement. But we're saying that's the past, let look at the future and develop an integrated, comprehensive federal-provincial heavy water program. That's what we're doing; we're being positive here, looking forward, not carping about the past.

Mr. S. Smith: What about the first part of the question?

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Would the Minister of Energy not agree that what Ontario Hydro may be winning on the drafting table with its engineering, it is losing on the negotiating table? Can he explain why it is that he is making this statement today, five months after the AECL decided to resume work on the La Prade plant; and why Ontario was not making these representations to the federal government in view of the fact that the surplus capacity for heavy water would and should have been anticipated long before that decision to recommission the La Prade plant?

Mr. S. Smith: Two and a half years ago.

Mr. Breithaupt: Not 10 days ago.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We were not advised by Ontario Hydro there were possible implications for heavy water production until April 12, not December 31.

Mr. Gaunt: They've done it to you too.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The decision by the federal government to embark and to continue, or resume or whatever you want to call it, at the La Prade plant—

Mr. Warner: Why don't you bring Ontario Hydro under public control?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —was a unilateral decision taken by the federal government. They did not come to us and ask us about what we were doing here in the way of heavy water in Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: How can you accept that behaviour from Ontario Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: No consultation; they simply go ahead spending $1.5 billion of Canadian taxpayers' dollars to build a plant we are convinced is not necessary.

Mr. S. Smith: Of course it's not necessary, that's not the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There was no consultation; it was only after we had heard and only after we knew there were some implications for this that we took the steps required, and that's what we're doing today.

Mr. Cassidy: There's sure a lot of sawdust down at Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Warner: Who's in charge over there?

Mr. Kennedy: Go ask Trudeau.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before I recognize the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed) with a supplementary, surely when you take the time of the House to put a question to a minister, you should be courteous enough to allow him to reply. You may disagree with it and you can express that disagreement when you next get the floor, but to continually barrack and interrupt while he's trying to make a statement and give a response to a legitimate question is an abuse of the question period, and it's a waste of time.

Mr. Warner: Listen to that; listen to that over there.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could tell us how his ministry could be so irretrievably incompetent—

Mr. Nixon: Nice phrase.

Mr. J. Reed: —as to allow a totally uncoordinated building program to take place between reactors committed and heavy water plants committed?

Mr. S. Smith: He doesn't even know what you mean.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, may I first of all thank you, sir, for asking for some—

Mr. S. Smith: Protection.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —sanity and just a little decorum.

Mr. Warner: Answer the question. Quit trying to be so provocative.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There they go again, you see.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: First of all, I do not accept the fact we were—irretrievably, I believe was the suggestion—incompetent. We were totally competent. We have done exactly—

Mr. S. Smith: It may yet be retrievable.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —what we set out to do. As soon as we had the slightest indication there might be a surplus of heavy water we did the prudent thing, we began negotiations with the federal government. We have done all we can until we get the final statistics from Ontario Hydro; then we shall see, and the select committee can see. The statistics will all be available to you when the select committee meets this summer.

In the meantime, what we have tried to do is at least get on course a rational plan, a federal-provincial plan, for heavy water marketing and production both in Canada and abroad. That is what we think we have to do and that is what we are doing. I realize that perhaps the Leader of the Opposition is more interested in casting scorn here. I wish he would support us in our approach to the federal government. Will he do that?

An hon. member: Did you ever talk to Trudeau?

Mr. S. Smith: Oh come on. You are so incompetent.

An hon. member: You blew your cool.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are doing what we have to do; we have taken the prudent step.

Mr. Lewis: Get rid of him, bring Elgie in. Try another, give us a shift.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In response to that interjection from the member for Scarborough West, I would only say that you people made a change and look where it has led you.

Mr. Lewis: That finishes the member for York East. I was afraid he would get into the cabinet.

Mr. Martel: We didn't have enough money to lead in 115 ridings, Bill. We didn't have enough money. You spent $50,000 per riding.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Deans: I would like to ask the minister a supplementary question too, if I may. I don't want to dwell on the incompetence of the minister or of Hydro. I have thought they were incompetent for years. I want to ask something else.

Mr. Peterson: There is the whole matter right there.

Mr. Lewis: That's right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You ask one, Stephen.

Mr. Deans: Since Hydro obviously knew enough to get out of the pool in 1977 surely it must have become clear to the minister in the interim, between I think February of 1977 and this date, that there was going to be overproduction of heavy water. What does the minister propose to do now aside from bleating at the federal government? What does he propose to do now with the $409 million additional dollars, at least—

Mr. Bolan: Join Jim Taylor.

Mr. Deans: —that he intends to spend completing a project for which there is no need, neither now nor in the projected future? Does he not believe that in Ontario there are other projects which are much more worthwhile and which would create an answer to many social needs? Perhaps, he could talk to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman) about housing and find that $409 million used on that would be a better expenditure.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is making the same mistake that has been made about three or four times across the road. He is making assumptions that there is data available. This is not yet the case.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure it is.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The studies, the analyses have not yet been completed by Hydro. I have said this three or four times, we are waiting.

Mr. S. Smith: How can you be so stupid?

Mr. Deans: I don't believe that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The member may not believe it, but he must—

Mr. Deans: Hydro hasn't told the truth in years.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —at least wait until the data has come and then we can debate that.

Interjection.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the member for Wentworth doesn't have the floor.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Until such time, there is no way members can make any conclusions, they can only do what we have done so far—

Mr. Lewis: Sure, and look where it leads you.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and that is to begin our negotiations with the federal government. That's a reply to one other aspect of the member's question, which is simply what are we going to do with the heavy water.

Mr. Foulds: Why didn't you start those earlier?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are being positive on this side of the House. We are saying there is an export market, and we want it on the export market; but that side is so defeatist.

Mr. Deans: There is not an export market.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Members opposite say there is no market at all for heavy water. Why not try to export some heavy water? That is what we think we can do. There is an export market, and we are saying here in Ontario we want Bruce D to participate in the export of heavy water.

Mr. Deans: What are you going to use it for—irrigation in Saudi Arabia?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We don't want La Prade to corner the market on heavy water going out of this country, can't members see that?

Mr. Deans: No.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: No; they don't want to see it, that's why. Why don't they turn their guns; why don't they support us in going to the federal government instead of harping here all afternoon?

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary; the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: A two-part supplementary; and would the minister please try to respond to it.

First of all, will the minister table the agreement between AECL and Hydro? Would he table, in writing, any of the reasons the pool agreement has been terminated and any documents and correspondence related thereto? That is the first part; will the minister table the agreement and the subsequent correspondence? Has he got that now? Okay.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I don't need the member to turn on the sarcasm.

Mr. S. Smith: The second part: Since the minister missed it before, I'll take him through this one slowly. Since he knows there have been no reactors subtracted from the plan since 1976—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Leader of the Opposition doesn't have to adopt that manner. Get off his sarcasm.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the minister knows there are the same number of reactors anticipated now as there were in 1976, on what new information does he imagine Hydro was able to calculate a reduced need for heavy water now? And on what information that was not available to them two years ago does the minister think they could have done that? What conceivable information could they have now, in 1978, that they didn't have in 1976? Has the minister called them on the carpet to find out why they didn't tell the ministry this at the proper time, two years ago?

Mr. Deans: They are incompetent.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In response to the first question—are we ready to table the agreement—of course we are prepared to table the agreement any time the member wants it, he was after it last night.

Mr. Nixon: Why couldn't we get it then?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Leader of the Opposition and his supporters tried to filch it out of Hydro last night in a clandestine manner.

Mr. Nixon: The minister wouldn't give it to us last night.

Mr. J. Reed: We couldn't get it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Members opposite can have it; there is nothing in the agreement that is secret.

The other part as to why we allowed an agreement to terminate, if the Leader of the Opposition had only been listening instead of talking—he should listen with his ears instead of his mouth—

Mrs. Campbell: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If he had only been listening, I told him before why it was in the best interest of Hydro to allow that agreement to terminate.

Mr. Warner: They should export you.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: They were in with people who could not produce heavy water as efficiently as Hydro could, that was the simple reason for it.

Mr. S. Smith: What new information could Hydro possibly have had in 1978 they didn't have in 1976; that is the second part.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Has the member forgotten that in 1978 Hydro came up with the revised long range forecast? Has he forgotten that simple fact? That is what started this whole thing.

Mr. Wildman: You are in heavy water over your head.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's when we took the action, that is what we are basing our action on.

Mr. S. Smith: But no nuclear reactors were cancelled; it was a thermal plant in Wesleyville, no nuclear plant has been cancelled.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This exchange is getting nowhere. The Leader of the Opposition with his second question.

Mr. Lewis: Keep after that scoundrel.

Mr. S. Smith: I will switch ministers for the benefit of the House and my own health.

Mr. Lewis: Oh don't do that.

Mr. S. Smith: My blood pressure can stand just so much; you understand, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Leader of the Opposition needs rest, that's all.

DOW CHEMICAL

Mr. S. Smith: I'll direct a question to that far more competent minister, a man with whom I am very friendly, the Attorney General.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. S. Smith: Fresh from his most recent victory against Dow Chemical, can the Attorney General tell this House how he could conceivably settle a so-called $35 million suit against Dow Chemical for a so-called $250,000, which averages out to $5,000 a year for every year these fishermen were out of business? How could he settle for that?

What were the legal costs of pursuing that particular suit to that marvellous outcome, and how can he face the fishermen? What is he going to do for them now, since it was this government that persuaded them to go in with the government on this famous polluter-must-pay lawsuit.

Mr. Peterson: You sold them out.

Mr. Nixon: And what to do you think about the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr)?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I shall be making a complete statement tomorrow morning.

Mr. Nixon: That sounds like last Thursday. [3:00]

Mr. S. Smith: We look forward to the statement, of course.

By way of supplementary, can the Attorney General tell us if it is a fact that these fishermen now have no other recourse; and also if the government is prepared to do anything to help support these fishermen whose source of livelihood has obviously been destroyed by the mercury dumped into Lake St. Clair, since the settlement itself obviously comes nowhere close to providing a reasonable compensation for what happened to them?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As I said a moment ago, I'll be making a complete statement tomorrow morning. Perhaps, as a result, the Leader of the Opposition will learn something. I appreciate this is a very difficult process for him, but perhaps it will occur.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You certainly learn by your mistakes, Roy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the member for Lakeshore have a supplementary? Final supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Not a final supplementary.

Mr. Lawlor: As part of the minister's statement tomorrow morning, is it his intention to table for the perusal of this House the memorandum of settlement involved here?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have nothing to add to what I have already said here this afternoon.

Interjections.

Mr. T. P. Reid: At least you admit you don't know.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Why not? It relates to his intended statement.

Mr. Roy: Will the Attorney General not undertake in his statement tomorrow to respond to the questions of my leader and the member for Lakeshore?

Mr. Eaton: You won't be here tomorrow, will you, Albert?

Mr. Roy: Sure, I will.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He'll be here on a Friday? That's wonderful, wonderful.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What happened?

Mr. Roy: I'll be making notes of his statement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The courts are closed tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is there a holiday in Ottawa tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We sit at 10 o'clock on Fridays.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I expect that my statement tomorrow will be an adequate response to any of the questions that have been asked here.

Mr. S. Smith: The polluter must pay.

Mr. Nixon: The Solicitor General will resign.

NORTH BAY PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. Can the Minister of Health make a statement on what happened at the North Bay psychiatric hospital on Tuesday night? One of the attendants has subsequently died as a result of an attack on attendants by a patient who had previously been at Penetanguishene.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, an investigation is under way under the auspices of the administrator of North Bay's psychiatric hospital. I can only tell the member that the patient in question had previously been a patient at Penetanguishene and had been—as far as I know, and this will be confirmed by the full report I will get—sent to North Bay on a loosened warrant. That day, in fact, he had been reviewed by the review board which had decided to send him back to Penetanguishene. Before that could be carried out, he had, as it were, absconded from the building, and in the attempt to recover him, so to speak, two attendants were injured, one very seriously.

I was not aware at the time I came into the House today that he had passed away. If that is the case, it grieves me very, very much. Once I have a complete report from the administrator, Mr. MacLean, I will report back to the House.

Mr. Bounsall: Would the minister speak to his colleagues, and in particular the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson), and urge them and her to bring Bill 70 into this House so that our civil servants in Ontario can be protected by that health and safety legislation?

Mr. Pope: That is nonsense, utter nonsense.

Mr. Bounsall: Will he also urge the Minister of Labour to immediately appoint, under Bill 139, in existence since 1976, health and safety committees in our psychiatric hospitals and correctional institutions in this province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I know full well the views of that member and that party on that particular subject. May I say it strikes me as something a little beneath the dignity of this House to try to ride such an issue on the back of a gentleman who just passed away in the service of the province.

Mr. Pope: It sure is, it's sickening.

Mr. Laughren: That is what you are doing.

Mr. Mackenzie: What do you want, another death?

Mr. McClellan: How many deaths do you want?

Mr. Mackenzie: You ought to be ashamed.

Mr. Laughren: Pretty cheap shot, Dennis.

Mr. Mackenzie: Damn cheap.

Mr. Cooke: We're interested in prevention.

Mr. Pope: You ought to be ashamed of yourselves.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The question of the safety of employees in psychiatric hospitals is one which pervades all elements of the psychiatric hospitals' branch in the ministry. It is something which is drilled into staff all the time in terms of procedures to be followed. It is something which is emphasized regularly and thoroughly.

Mr. Warner: What about the one I gave you—Scarborough Centenary? You never solved that one.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: These incidents are not only regrettable but sometimes very tragic.

Mr. Swart: Perhaps preventable.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think it would be a gross distortion to try to suggest to this House, and through this House to the public, that any particular bill or any particular procedure will ensure that there will never be any incidents.

Mr. Laughren: It might help.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In fact, the rate of incidents is very low. We try to ensure that every possible procedure is taken to ensure we keep the incident rate as low as possible.

Mr. Mackenzie: Employees keep asking for it. Doesn't the minister consider them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I said in answering the original question, when I've got a complete report I'll report back to the members.

Mr. Bolan: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of the fact that this particular patient had been a patient at the Penetanguishene maximum security institution on a Lieutenant Governor's warrant for some period of time? When he is conducting his investigation into this matter, will he look into the question of why he was released from Penetanguishene and transferred to North Bay as well as what procedure and what steps are involved?

When he is looking at the question, and whether or not a person is on a Lieutenant Governor's warrant, which as he knows is issued when somebody either has committed a crime or is awaiting a charge, will the minister say what the person was doing being transferred to a loose security hospital like North Bay? In fact, on that particular day in question he had been given a pass to go downtown in North Bay. Can he investigate that as well?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In my answer to the original question, I already acknowledged that the person in question here is, in fact, a Lieutenant Governor's warrant patient. Once one becomes a Lieutenant Governor's warrant patient, though, that does not mean one is locked away for life in Penetanguishene. It is possible, depending upon the progress in treatment, to have one's warrant loosened in various ways, even to the extent of being in and living in the community under regular surveillance and keeping contact with a psychiatric unit or with a physician. All of these things will be taken into account in compiling information about this most unfortunate incident.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister not agree that the cut-backs taking place in the ministry now are having the effect of ensuring that maximum security patients are being transferred from Penetanguishene to psychiatric hospitals across the province and that facilities like the forensic ward at the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital are having to be closed, so that the maximum security patients are being scattered around the rest of the institutions; and that is, therefore, putting attendants and staff who work there at very substantial risk for reasons of cost cutbacks and not for therapeutic reasons?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I wouldn't agree. In fact, we've added, I think, seven psychiatric nurses to Penetanguishene in the last few months; we have not cut back. In the case of the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital, the member is quite right in saying that the forensic unit was distributed through the hospital but in a manner that was consistent with our standards of safety and quality of the program.

Mr. Mackenzie: That's not what the employees say.

[Later]

Mr. Cassidy: On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I regret that the information I gave to the Legislature about the death of one of the attendants at the North Bay Psychiatric Hospital was in error. Fortunately, the attendant was not killed although he is in critical condition. I don't believe that fact, which we welcome, changes the very serious nature of the situation which was raised previously in the question period.

RENT REVIEW

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Now that it is clear the general government committee will be recommending an extension of the current rent review program for at least two years, and in view of the fact that there has been no concrete alternative put forward by the ministry as an interim measure since this question was asked in the House about two weeks ago, will the minister now undertake to introduce as an interim measure a one-line or short bill that can be adopted before June 23 which would provide for the period of interim extension needed into 1979 in order that we not have chaos for landlords and tenants in the fall because of the gap which the ministry now proposes to leave before rent review is continued?

Mr. Conway: How are the roller skates, Mike?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will wait until I receive the report of the standing committee that is studying the matter.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister undertake to introduce that kind of legislation, which can, and I want to assure him will, be adopted on an interim basis very quickly after June 15, in order that the recommendations of the committee can then be considered and implemented in full in the fall? Will he bring in a one-line or short bill now, as soon as the committee reports, given the way in which it intends to report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can only repeat that, unlike now both opposition parties, I refuse to undermine the work of the committee. I will wait until the committee reports.

Mr. Breithaupt: We waited until the facts were in.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are suspicious that their federal colleagues brought a little pressure on the Liberal members.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier's level of self-righteousness rises as he declines.

Mrs. Campbell: Would the minister at least give this sort of undertaking to the House, that he will, should that report indicate that extension, in view of the time constraints between June 15 and June 23, introduce that legislation before the House rises should the committee so report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Notwithstanding the way the member has asked that question, she still hasn't frightened me into changing the answer I have already given.

Mr. Mackenzie: It's not fright; it's common sense.

Mr. Warner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I would like to know if the minister understands yet the particular legal problem which will face both landlords and tenants as of September 30 of this year if there is not an interim measure put into place before the new program comes into effect? What does he propose to do, should we rise on June 23 and not sit until October, to handle that serious legal problem which will arise for landlords and tenants as of September 30?

Mr. Mackenzie: You are going to be forced to call the House back in the middle of August.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course I find it really quite interesting that the member's party really wasn't complaining about the lack of notice period until now.

Mr. Martel: Answer the bloody question for a change. What are you going to do, silly boy?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to explain to members and to tell them I am not going to play the politics on this issue, so if they will sit quiet, I will tell them about it.

Mr. Cassidy: Take some action.

An hon. member: Bring Drea in there.

Mr. Lewis: Politics are in your genes, young fellow.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I left them at home.

I will understand the legal problems we are facing. My point was that last fall when we reduced the guideline figure from eight per cent to six per cent—

Mr. Breagh: We did that last year.

An hon. member: You did it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—there were thousands of people, all landlords, who were stuck without notice, who didn't have any mechanism to—

Mr. Breagh: Bill, let's go again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—adjust their notice period. I didn't hear the slightest bit of squawk from either—

Mr. Warner: That wasn't my question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—opposition party with regard to exactly the same question, the notice period given the change in the rules.

Mr. Warner: So you are not going to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now as I said last week, there are inequities that will fall upon either landlords or tenants, and depending upon the solution sometimes upon both. In trying to now decide how we solve that problem I do wish to make one point very clear.

Mr. Warner: You are not going to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If members will just be quiet, I will make one point clear.

A landlord who is facing a situation in September of having to give a notice of a rental increase—

Mr. Breagh: Now how do you feel about consumer affairs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—for January 1, can do this in September.

Mr. McClellan: There is quite a choice open to you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The landlord can say: "I will wait and see what the assembly does in October or November—"

Mr. Martel: You better call another election, Bill.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and leave my tenants at exactly the same rent as they are currently paying for another two or three months."

An hon. member: No guarantee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nothing stops the landlord from doing that. And equally, the landlord could gamble a little bit and serve a rental notice increase which may not work or be effective at all—

Mr. Breithaupt: Why are you putting people through this charade?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—depending upon what the assembly does in the fall.

Mr. McClellan: This is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Samis: Why don't we go to Las Vegas?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In essence it is a better position than moving right now to add and extend a rent control scheme into January and February, if in the long run we are not going to have that scheme continued.

Mr. Lewis: The entire government is grinding down, minister by minister. It's never been this bad. You are in a state of terminal affliction.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So I prefer, really, to wait and see what scheme we are likely to have next year—

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you buy a crystal ball? Maybe you could guess.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—before we decide whether it is appropriate—

Mr. Lewis: I am glad I left in time to watch it from a distance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—whether it is appropriate to bring in legislation to extend it. If members will just listen to the final line, they may even be interested in it.

Mr. Martel: Some of you won't have to resign. You will be fired by the boss.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The important thing is this. If, in fact, the committee reports that the rent review scheme ought to be continued intact for another two years; and if in fact the government—

Mr. Martel: The first person I have seen who has survived an autopsy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—is going to do that, then of course the circumstances change and we might as well do something now rather than have the uncertainty.

[3:15]

Mr. Lewis: What is this?

Mr. Martel: Methinks you protest too much. Is his mainspring winding down at all?

Mr. Lewis: I think you have food poisoning.

Mr. Speaker: The question has been answered. Sit down. The honourable member for Simcoe Centre has a new question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are going to wait for the committee's report.

Mr. Foulds: This virginal, virtuous verbose-ness of yours must be catching.

Mr. Lewis: There should be a cabinet shuffle if there was anyone left.

STORE HOURS BYLAW

Mr. G. Taylor: A question of the Solicitor General: In view of the fact that July 1, Dominion Day—or whatever other name it has—falls on a Saturday this year, will the government make any provision for stores to open in tourist areas to enable tourists in those areas to buy supplies as a usual practice?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There is a provision in the legislation—

Mr. McClellan: Send him a copy of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—that in tourist areas the municipality can pass a bylaw which, in the interest of the tourist industry, exempts certain stores from the provisions of the bylaw requiring them to close.

Mr. Bolan: Check the act.

Mr. Roy: Give us your polluters-will-pay speech, George.

Mr. G. Taylor: Supplementary to that, will the minister make any statement on this for the benefit of those in the tourist area?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No. All I would do is refer to the act itself. As I mentioned, the act provides for exemptions in tourist areas in the event the municipality passes a bylaw. I don't think there is any reason for a general exemption of the law as it applies to holidays because July 1 falls on Saturday.

Mr. Bolan: Get your act together over there.

Mr. Bounsall: Just tell him to read the bill.

Mr. Foulds: Bob Welch leaves for a day and the place just falls apart.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Like when Stephen leaves for a day.

Mr. Lewis: I think you're all suffering from drowsy.

D.E.S LEVELS IN BEEF

Hon. W. Newman: I promised members I would comment on the DES issue raised by CBC last Thursday. As members are aware, the CBC reported on the Radio Noon program that they had sent 10 beef livers, five of US origin and five of Canadian, to Alpha Laboratories, a private laboratory in Don Mills, for DES testing. The laboratory reported high levels in all but one sample.

Frankly, the reported levels of DES were so high that the results were questionable. My staff immediately contacted the CBC for further information. They also contacted the federal Department of Health and Welfare, and Agriculture Canada. They obtained samples of the liver used by the CBC and had tests run on these animals at their pathological labs in Guelph. These tests showed no detectable levels of DES in any one of the 10 livers.

I should point out that the test for DES residue is not a routine procedure in most private labs. Interpretation of results requires considerable experience and expertise. Agriculture Canada, responsible for enforcing the DES ban, has tested 400 samples of beef liver in the last two years.

I am deeply distressed that CBC caused consumers to worry unnecessarily about the quality of their food. I am very pleased, however, that Ontario's beef producers' high reputation has been reinstated.

I would also like to point out that within the last few hours, I believe, the CBC has apologized; I think that should go on the record too.

Mr. Bolan: Let's go, Reuben.

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. J. Reed: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. This is in the nature of a very straightforward request.

Mr. Martel: Has anybody got ear plugs?

Mr. Mackenzie: There goes the rest of the question period.

Mr. J. Reed: So the opposition may properly consider support of the minister's request today, I wonder if the minister would be good enough to table, as soon as possible, the opinions given to the then minister when the building of heavy water plant D was considered; the Ontario Energy Board report of the day which weighed the pros and cons; what the cost overruns on D are projected to be upon completion; and, finally, if he would also let us know the production-consumption figures from the beginning of the heavy water era right through to 1995, so that we can see very clearly—

Mr. Speaker: Surely that question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. J. Reed: The urgency of the question, Mr. Speaker is that the minister is asking us to stand by his government and support him on this issue. I think he understands that we really need to have this kind of information in order to make a valid judgement.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I must say I'm very much encouraged to finally hear from across the floor that on this matter of Ontario Hydro's role in the export of heavy water, we will get the support of at least one party.

Mr. Breithaupt: No. We want facts for a change, facts first.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I haven't heard it from over here yet, but I hope it's there.

Mr. Lewis: You certainly haven't.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have it? Thank you very much. But that we will in fact—

Ms. Gigantes: No you haven't.

Mr. Lewis: I said you certainly have not.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have not?

Mr. Lewis: You certainly have not.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That wasn't the question.

Mr. Foulds: Have not. You have not. Why don't you just answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Certainly, we will be pleased to collect and to table whatever relevant data is required. I don't know if I can meet all of the member's requests, but certainly we will try to meet as many of the requests as we possibly can.

Mr. J. Reed: By way of supplementary: In order to clear the air, I'm sure the minister understands we may either support him or condemn him, as a result of that information.

Mr. Lewis: Since we may be on the verge of committing ourselves to another wasted expenditure of over $400 million additional, does the minister not think it's time to take a closer look at the information which is being fed to his ministry from Ontario Hydro; and therefore to the premises on which this additional $400 million expenditure is based, since—and he can then answer me—it may well be that Ontario Hydro suppressed important information which should have been brought to the attention of the House, the public, and the ministry more than two and a half years ago, until April 1978?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can give the honourable member opposite a generic response to that: I certainly will, when the information we're expecting comes, which has been based on all their detailed analyses. We will certainly examine it very critically and very closely. We will do this.

I can also assure the member opposite that if it is my opinion that Ontario Hydro is suppressing information that this ministry should have, there will be the very devil to pay. That is one thing I will not tolerate.

Mr. Lewis: There'd better be. We have heard that before.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's my promise to the member.

Ms. Gigantes: We had that promise before.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That's the promise to this House.

Ms. Gigantes: We had that promise from Taylor before.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will be very, very critical.

Mr. Lewis: Don't spend another $400 million before you know.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are not committing ourselves to $400 million before we know, that's the whole purpose of this exercise.

Ms. Gigantes: Are you stopping it now?

Mr. Lewis: Are you stopping Bruce D?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are not stopping Bruce D because we don't have the information that we need before we can make any final decision. That's all.

Mr. MacDonald: You are committing then?

OTTAWA HOUSING AUTHORITY

Ms. Gigantes: I'd like to ask a question of the Premier.

Would he ask the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) to show cause why he should not be required by the Premier to set up an independent public investigation of his veto of the municipal nomination of Aline Akeson to the board of directors of the Ottawa Housing Authority; considering his previous allegations that Ms. Akeson had misrepresented her income in reports to OHA, considering also that her income had been reported to OHA last fall by her solicitor at that time. Mr. Gary Guzzo: and that neither the OHA board nor the Ministry of Housing saw any problem with Mr. Guzzo's appointment to the same OHA board in December 1977?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not sure I heard the first part of the question exactly. If I heard it correctly, the answer to that is no.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: If the answer to the question is no, what does the Premier propose to do about a minister who makes such spurious allegations, affecting both the personal reputation and the professional contribution that a person such as Ms. Akeson could make to a municipality like the city of Ottawa in the role she could play on the Ottawa Housing Authority board of directors? Doesn't that concern the Premier?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have found most people in public life, particularly those with whom I'm associated, if they have made a mistake—and I can't comment on the facts of the situation at all—they are quite prepared to acknowledge it.

Mr. Roy: Could I ask a brief supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Premier might relay this question to the Minister of Housing. Could that minister advise if, prior to making his statement in the House last week, he checked with the solicitor for Ms. Akeson, Gary Guzzo, with whom I know the Premier is acquainted?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea with whom the Minister of Housing discussed this matter prior to any observations made in the House. I think if the honourable member wishes to ascertain this, he might ask the Minister of Housing. In fact if he is anxious to get a reply on that matter, he might just see him this weekend in Ottawa and find out.

In fact, he knows Mr. Guzzo better than I do. He might give him a call.

Mr. Speaker: New question.

Mr. Roy: I don't see the Minister of Housing in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He's on public business and the member is in the courts when he is in Ottawa.

Mr. Cassidy: It's a vendetta by the Minister of Housing.

RAYMOND LEE ORGANIZATION

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In view of the fact the results of a recent Ontario Securities Commission hearing showed they were not actively favourable to the operating procedures of the Raymond Lee Organization, an organization which has ripped off thousands of inventors in North America and in Ontario, and in view of the fact that the OSC has suggested that the Business Practices Act should be used as a tool for investigating this corporation, will the minister undertake to launch an investigation of the practices of the Raymond Lee Organization?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'll be pleased to see what action my business practices branch is taking on that matter and report to the House.

AMUSEMENT RIDE SAFETY

Mr. Bradley: I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In light of the fact that several accidents have occurred on amusement rides in the province in the last several years—the latest in Oshawa, I believe, where six children were treated for injuries; and in view of the fact that the province at the present time does not have an inspection system for these amusement rides; is the minister giving consideration to establishing an inspection system for Ontario—not to ensure that no accidents will take place but to reduce the chances of those accidents taking place?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Back in 1976, I believe it was, TEIGA developed, in conjunction with my ministry, a draft bylaw for municipalities to implement. That draft bylaw was drawn along the lines of the CSA midway safety code Z726. It was drawn up in a bylaw form and TEIGA in 1976 urged municipalities, which have the licensing authority in this area, to adopt that bylaw.

I can assure the member and the House that TEIGA and ourselves are still urging municipalities, especially the ones that do have these rides, to exercise their authority. We have offered every bit of assistance, back-up material and research to enable them to enforce this type of bylaw.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: It's true that this step has taken place and has alleviated the problem to a small extent, at least in some municipalities that have the financial ability to enter into a program of this nature. But for those municipalities that either do not have the expertise and cannot afford to acquire the expertise or devote the time through their engineering department to the inspection services, does the minister not agree that further action would be required? I'm not suggesting necessarily someone hired as a civil servant in the ministry, but someone designated by the ministry to do inspections, perhaps in sections of the province. Many municipalities simply cannot afford to do this and do not have the expertise at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The problem here becomes, with the number of operations that are in effect, once the province decides to go into an area which has always been an area of municipal licensing and control, it obviously will require an entire army of investigators and supervisors sent out by us.

A carnival operator or whatever will leave one little town and move to another one 20 miles away. That would require our people to follow them and check that installation. It has always seemed to us that notwithstanding what may appear to some to be too onerous a provision for municipalities, the fact is that most municipalities would find, I think, that they have one of these things perhaps once a year sometime during the summer and it would probably be a heck of a lot easier, and cost everyone a lot less money, if one or two people who are currently on staff in some of those municipalities were assigned to check into this, to licence the fairs as they arrive and then do the inspections with the education, assistance, material and background we would be happy to provide them. After all, each municipality would have to do that only one or two days a year when the annual carnival or fair arrives. That would seem to me to be a lot more sensible than having a team of people from here chase these people around the province.

Of course the municipalities have some very direct control as to what fairs they are going to let into their municipalities, so if they don't wish to encourage some of these licensing and supervision costs, they can of course choose to not have those fairs in unless the operators can satisfy them they have met certain safety requirements.

Mr. Conway: The man is as circuitous as the old Kingston and Pembroke railway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any event, it is a matter of serious concern. I am not sure we ought to be getting into a large expenditure here, but we think it is very important and therefore more consultation with municipalities will continue.

Mr. Conway: What was Allan like?

Mr. Bradley: Same way.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister realizes how serious this problem is, in particular the problem we experienced down in the Windsor-Essex area with the Bob-Lo Company, which has had something in the neighbourhood of five or six accidents in the last couple of years causing serious injuries? That municipality has not implemented any kind of bylaws, in fact Bob-Lo follows Michigan laws. Does the minister not feel that the province has a responsibility to protect the citizens of Ontario in this respect?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I trust the member will ask the same question of his local municipality in Windsor, because they already have all the authority. They have the draft bylaw which we have—

Mr. Cooke: It is a small municipality.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —developed after extensive work; it really takes very little to pass the bylaw to have the licensing powers. If they have someone they don't like they should not issue them the licence for the very good reasons the member is pointing out.

Mr. Cooke: They haven't done it; the minister should make them.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: I have been after this problem for the last three years and the city of Windsor has taken care of it in their appointment of an inspector who does a very admirable job. Would the minister not consider requiring every carnival ride to have a certificate of mechanical fitness posted in a very prominent position, so that the individual wishing to use that ride will know that it has been inspected recently by a municipality, and has been inspected on an annual basis?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's not a bad suggestion at all. I will look into it because we would like to find a way to solve it.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Laughren: In the absence of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), I would like to ask the Premier a question about the Treasurer's statement today on property tax reform. In view of the fact that property tax reform has already had a 10-year gestation period in this province, and during that time there has been ample opportunity for consultation and input; and recognizing the fact there were specific problems with the recommendations by the working committee; does the Premier not think that some of those specific problems, such as vacant land assessment, the particular problems affecting the residential and commercial interests in Metropolitan Toronto, were not insurmountable and that they could have been resolved, and would the Premier relate to the Treasurer that it is time he stopped renegeing on promises to the municipalities in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to get those impressions from the member for Nickel Belt and I assume he is speaking for his entire party, that they are totally committed to the principle of tax reform as enunciated by the Treasurer.

Mr. di Santo: Answer the question.

Mr. Swart: He didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I had been waiting to hear this for some time. I got some indication of the Liberal Party policy in Metropolitan Toronto when it sent out a pamphlet saying: "Here are all the problems. We're not sure we know what the solutions are."

Mr. Cooke: Answer the question.

Mr. Peterson: The solution is to get rid of you. That's the solution.

Hon. Mr. Davis: So we know what the Liberal position is on real property tax reform—like, no position. However, I will convey the member's concerns to the Treasurer.

Mr. Peterson: You are amazing.

Mr. Breithaupt: Don't wait 10 years—

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Ignoring the distortions uttered by the Premier, if he is worried about the school boards' comments on property tax reform—and, by the way, I talked about property tax reform, not market value assessment—would the Premier not agree that one way of making property tax reform more acceptable to the people of Ontario would be to progressively reduce the educational component in property tax across this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think there is any question about the acceptability of the reduction of educational levy, or actually the reduction of any real property levy, as long as people understand that along with that is an increase in sales tax, income tax—

Mr. Laughren: No, no.

Mr. McClellan: Progressive tax.

Mr. Samis: Not the sales tax.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —or, for that party, corporation tax; as long as there is an awareness that whatever the route that is taken, somebody has to pay for it.

Mr. Warner: Start with your bank account.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I won't argue for a moment that any form of tax change would be more acceptable if people felt they were paying less taxes.

Mr. Laughren: Tell them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I would say to the honourable member he has been here long enough to know that, directly or indirectly, there is no such magic formula.

Mr. Laughren: I never said there was.

Mr. McClellan: Don't be silly.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Taxation has to be paid by somebody in some fashion. I am not going to argue that the reduction in educational levy, or even in municipal levy, isn't attractive; it's attractive to all of us. But I would say to the honourable member, he has to look at the alternatives. I know what his is: Tax the corporations out of business. That to us is not a viable alternative.

An hon. member: That's garbage.

TEACHER LAYOFFS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Education. With the cutbacks caused by the dropping enrolment in our elementary and secondary system, and with the layoff of teachers, can the minister assure the House that his review of the situation with the various boards indicates that they are reducing their administrative budget and staff in the same proportion? Or does he buy the argument made by some boards that they have to maintain their administrative staff, or even increase it, because of the complexities of the layoff procedures and the increased amount of administration that is necessary under these difficult circumstances?

Mr. Breithaupt: It's like the British Colonial office: The fewer the colonies, the more staff you have.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How are you so familiar with that?

Mr. T. P. Reid: He was there.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I think my friend knows a fair amount about the school system, and I can't really tell him what boards are doing with their administrative staff. Certainly I don't support any school board that has an unduly heavy administrative staff compared to the services it has to deliver. I don't think anybody would, and I think that boards themselves would feel that there should be cuts in that particular area too.

I would just point out that the actual redundancy in teachers across the province was, as reported in the Globe and Mail a couple of days ago, about 1,175 teachers. That is the number who were told they were redundant at the end of May when the deadline had arrived and they had to be told. Some of those teachers, of course, will be available and will get jobs where hiring is going on.

I also would draw to the honourable member's attention that a number of these redundancies occur because of the negotiated class size, pupil-teacher formula, which is provided for under Bill 100 and under the way school boards negotiate now where they negotiate terms and conditions of employment. The ratios are in contracts and the terms of those contracts, when they are put into effect, necessitate certain changes in staffing policies.

Mr. Foulds: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I know you have ruled on this matter on a number of occasions and said that it is not in order for us to suggest a member like the Premier is misleading the House when he distorts questions like that from my colleague, the member for Nickel Belt; could you tell me, is it in order for us to call him the grand distortionist as well as the grand contortionist of politics in Ontario?

An hon. member: That's what he does, as well as not answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of privilege.

Mr. Warner: He can distort all he likes.

PETITION

FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition on behalf of some students in Toronto who deplore the Premier's decision of last week pertaining to Bill 89, and I'd like to present it to the House.

Je voudrais, M. le Président, de la part des étudiants de Toronto, présenter une pétition qui déplore l'attitude, ou la décision, prise par le Premier ministre la semaine passé au sujet du Bill 89.

REPORTS

STANDING MEMBERS' SERVICES COMMITTEE

Mr. Breithaupt, on behalf of Mrs. Campbell from the standing members' services committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows, and moved its adoption:

Your committee recommends, as the House on June 5, 1978 approved, that the three policy secretariats and the legislative administration offices located in room 151 be moved from the legislative building no later than August 30, 1978 and the space allocated to Mr. Speaker for reallocation; and that the space when vacated be immediately allocated to the Speaker; and first priority on the allocation of funds of the Ministry of Government Services budget be given for the purpose of renovating the vacated space for members' offices and committee rooms.

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Breaugh: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think you will recall that last week the House leaders met with the procedural affairs committee and a procedure was agreed upon among the three House leaders on the this particular matter. I would request the government respect that agreement at this time. I don't mind them turning over their tricks six months later but they could at least give us a week to try it.

Mr. Martel: Withdraw it, you don't need that motion.

Mr. Rotenberg: What's the agreement? The agreement is to have a debate some time, not now.

Mr. Warner: He's going to defy his government House leader (Mr. Welch).

Mr. McClellan: Where is the House leader? Everything gets all fouled up when he's not here.

Mr. Breugh: To clarify it for all those members of the Speaker's panel who received it last week, and who I hope have discussed it with the government House leader, the agreement was that the chairman of the committee would reserve the right to adjourn the debate. I might point out for the edification of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations that that suggestion was made by his government House leader.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the absence of the government House leader, may I say that it is my clear understanding, notwithstanding what the member has suggested, that the procedure we are adopting at this particular time is known to the other House leaders and is in order with the common practice that has been adopted.

Mr. Breugh: No, it is not.

Mr. McClellan: You are wrong.

Mr. Breugh: Quite wrong.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I have moved adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. members: No. No.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I don't think it is a terribly important matter, however my understanding of the agreement was that the government House leader felt a little sensitive about moving the adjournment each Thursday—

Mr. Breugh: That's right.

Mr. Nixon:—and wanted to be relieved of that responsibility. After getting the acceptance of the government House leader that we would have regular debates on these important reports it was also agreed the chairman of the committee who moved the adoption of the report would then move the adjournment of any debate that might follow and it would be scheduled for a convenient time within a few days.

Mr. Breugh: Absolutely.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the House leaders get their act together.

Mr. Nixon: We have it together, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, you haven't got it together. There's a motion on the floor that states Mr. Grossman moves the adjournment of the debate. Shall the motion carry?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the adjournment of the debate will please say "aye."

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, point of order. Is there no debate on that motion?

Mr. Nixon: Not on an adjournment.

Mr. Speaker: For the adjournment of the debate?

Mr. Foulds: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I have called the question.

Mr. McClellan: You've allowed it before.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, might I speak before you call the question? No one wants to put you in an embarrassing position by voting against your ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Do members want me to disagree with the rules of the House?

Mr. Martel: No, I want you to—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[3:45]

Mr. Martel: I would ask the Speaker to listen.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the member sit down?

Mr. McClellan: If you want to get your bills through you had better not play these kinds of games.

Mr. Eaton: What a threat.

Mr. McClellan: You are damn right it is.

Mr. Speaker: There is a motion to adjourn the debate. A motion to adjourn the debate or to adjourn the House is not debatable. I have already put the question.

Mr. Martel: But Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak to it for a moment.

Mr. Speaker: What is the honourable member going to speak to? There's nothing to speak to.

Mr. Martel: The government should not have asked for this order, unfortunately. The government House leader, the House leader for the Liberal Party, and I, representing my party had a meeting; we met with the procedural affairs committee—

Mr. Speaker: I'm not party to those agreements.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not a party to those agreements.

Mr. Martel: There is no sense talking; you might as well make an ass of yourself.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member will withdraw that remark.

Mr. Martel: I withdraw the remark, Mr. Speaker, but you know, once in a while you should listen so we can assist here.

Mr. Speaker: I'm not a party to any agreements that any House leaders make. In the absence of it I will abide by the standing orders of this House.

Mr. Nixon: Put the question.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn debate on the report from the members' services committee, which was approved on the following vote:

Ayes 50; nays 21.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee reported the following resolution:

Resolved: That supply in the following amounts to defray the expenses of the Ministry of the Solicitor General be granted Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979:

Ministry administration program	$2,687,000.
Public safety program	$11,417,000.
Supervision of police forces program	$6,717,000.
Ontario Provincial Police management support services program	$27,885,000.
Operations program	$118,293,000.

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following application for a private act and finds the notice, as published, sufficient.

Beezee Foods Limited.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

DISCRIMINATORY BUSINESS PRACTICES ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moved first reading of Bill 112, An Act to prohibit Discrimination in Business Relationships.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Community and Social Services I understand has eight bills. I think it has been agreed that he will move them all at once and the question will be put all at once.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Norton moved first reading of Bill 120, An Act to revise the Day Nurseries Act; Bill 119, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act; Bill 118, An Act to revise the Children's Residential Services Act; Bill 117, An Act to revise the Children's Institutions Act; Bill 116, An Act to amend the Unified Family Court Act, 1976; Bill 115, An Act to revise the Children's Mental Health Centres Act; Bill 114, An Act to revise the Child Welfare Act, and Bill 113, An Act to amend the Training Schools Act.

Motion agreed to.

TOWNSHIP OF PELEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Snow, moved first reading of Bill 121, An Act respecting the Township of Pelee.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the act which I have just introduced will provide the township of Pelee with the necessary statutory authority, so far as it lies within provincial jurisdiction, to operate a ferry service between the township of Pelee on Pelee Island, the towns of Leamington and Kingsville on the mainland, and the city of Sandusky in the state of Ohio.

[4:15]

This service has been provided by the federal government for the past 71 years. However, Ottawa announced in 1977 that starting with the 1978 shipping season they would no longer be responsible for the service. They would, however, lease the ferry to a qualified operator. As a result of a federal tender, the township of Pelee has tentatively been awarded a contract to operate the federal vessel and the Pelee Islander, conditional on provincial approval and authority. This act will provide the township of Pelee with that necessary authority.

CITY OF HAMILTON ACT

Mr. Deans moved first reading of Bill 122, An Act respecting the City of Hamilton.

Motion agreed to.

RESPONSES TO PETITIONS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Before the orders of the day, I wish to table the response to a petition presented to the Legislature, sessional paper 114, and an interim response to a petition, sessional paper 107. (See appendix, page 3274)

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the answers to questions 82 and 83 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 3275)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

SUNSET PROVISION FOR GOVERNMENT BODIES

Mr. Walker moved resolution 12:

That in the opinion of this House the government should bring forward legislation to insert a sunset provision (i.e., automatic date of termination) for all government agencies, boards and commissions, to permit meaningful and periodic review of the continuing need for such agencies, boards and commissions.

Mr. Bradley: We already had that.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Walker moves a resolution standing in his name. The honourable member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Bradley: It's a repeat.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I will try and limit my comments in view of the brevity of the hour.

I rise in support of the sunset resolution standing in my name, Mr. Speaker. As most of you know by now, sunset means the sun shall set on the various agencies, boards and commissions of government—

Mr. Wildman: That's profound.

Mr. Walker: —at some specified point in time, say after a few years. Agencies will become automatically terminated unless new legislation is introduced to remandate that agency.

Mr. Speaker, the lesson I learned in the 1977 election is the public of Ontario are not entirely happy with the way we in government spend their money.

Mr. Bradley: Your government, right.

Mr. Walker: That applies to federal, provincial and municipal levels of government.

Mr. Wildman: You have been in power for 35 years.

Mr. Walker: Government therefore must respond to this complaint in a way which satisfies the public. Government does not always do that. Let me cite an example.

Two days ago the voters of California voted in favour of proposition 13.

Mr. Samis: That's not a very good example.

Mr. Walker: Its passage ensures that in the state of California a reduction of property taxes by nearly one half will occur.

Mr. Samis: $100,000.

Mr. Walker: That was, in effect, Mr. Speaker, a taxpayers' revolt. The political leaders got the message for once, but it took a sledgehammer to get it across. Obviously, there was a feeling in that state that the legislators' demands exceeded what these people were prepared to pay.

Mr. Bradley: Then they find out the services are gone.

Mr. Walker: Proposition 13 is a very blunt instrument and to some extent a very unfortunate one. Here in Ontario there is a similar feeling in the minds of the public that something has to be done to curb the ever-increasing demands on the taxpayer's dollar.

To a large extent the sunset law answers that public demand. Sunset is a refined and sophisticated way for those in legislatures such as ours to regain control over their own government. It does so by inserting an automatic termination date in particular arms of the government; that is, its agencies, boards and commissions.

Mr. Wildman: Why not the whole government?

Mr. Peterson: Why not his head?

Mr. Walker: At a specified point in time these agencies, boards or commissions automatically terminate. That's it, zap, once and for all they are finished.

Mr. Wildman: They are zapped.

Mr. Walker: However, if the agency, board, or commission has merit, then a new piece of legislation is passed and the agency, board or commission is remanded for a further period of time.

Mr. Bradley: What would you do if they removed Tory candidates?

Mr. Walker: When I use the word legislation, I mean in some cases a new regulation, a new order in council of the cabinet, or a new instruction from the body which created it in the first place.

One perfect example of this very process at work is in the area of legislation, the rent control bill. As the members all realize, it automatically terminates December 31 this year. In fact, it has a sunset provision written right into it. Everyone knows it terminates automatically. If government chooses to do nothing, the program would automatically disappear very effectively and so would the millions of dollars of expense.

Mr. Warner: The problem wouldn't.

Mr. Walker: Knowing fully well that the program would terminate, this Legislature decided there might be value in some form of continuing tenant protection and therefore established a committee to review the matter. That committee is to report to the minister next week.

The government will receive the benefit of an exhaustive review of the whole tenant-owner question and no doubt, as a result of what it has had reviewed, it will introduce some form of continuing tenant protection, likely somewhat modified from the existing situation. Had rent control been imposed without the sunset provision, it would have continued forever, irrespective of whatever inequities there may have been.

Mr. Peterson: Are you in favour of rent control now?

Mr. Walker: Only a public outcry of immense proportions would have caused the bill to be altered because, from a very practical point of view, all members of the Legislature consider future matters, not past concerns. It is the nature of our parliamentary system to do so. To some extent, it is a fatal flaw that we spend our time exclusively on problems of the day, problems of the future—sometimes real and sometimes imaginary—but never really consider what we did last week, last year, or five years ago.

Mr. Peterson: The voters will.

Mr. Walker: However, there are some matters which, once passed, either become redundant down the way a bit or themselves compound the problem for which the law was first passed.

Mr. Wildman: This whole debate is redundant. We had it before.

Mr. Walker: Let me give you two examples: First, a redundant law, the tax discounters' bill, was passed earlier this year in the Legislature. It covered Ontario and prevented an abuse problem that this Legislature considered important. It was assented to on March 10 this year.

Yet, this same year, on April 17, the House of Commons passed Bill C-46, An Act relating to the Discounting of Overpayments of Tax under the Income Tax Act. It does the same thing basically as the Ontario bill; it puts the discounter out of business. But our Ontario bill is now redundant. I will be introducing a private bill shortly to repeal that piece of legislation.

The Ontario bill would have been a good bill to sunset. It would have made repealing legislation unnecessary.

The second consideration: The age of majority in 1971 was reduced from 21 to 18. Everyone agreed with it at that time.

Mr. Haggerty: Not everyone.

Mr. Walker: Yet six years later it took an immense public outcry to get the legislation changed such that it would prohibit 18-year-old people from legally consuming alcohol. Had 80 per cent of the public not become aroused on the matter, all of us know that government by its very nature would not likely have responded to the movement for an increase in age. Had the reduced age in 1971 been part of a bill with a sunset clause in it, say for five years, then a proper review of drinking at age 18 could have been conducted without such a large public outcry required.

Mr. Bradley: All you need is a responsive government.

Mr. Walker: It would have been a more orderly assessment of the matter, and I think that it would have been a better government in the legislative sense.

Ontario passes as many as 200 bills each year, some filled with hundreds of sections. Our existing laws are contained in five volumes, each over 1,000 pages long. That, incidentally, can be compared to France, where the entire nation's laws are contained in one volume. Along with Ontario's 5,000 to 6,000 pages of law—

Mr. Peterson: Some legal system, eh?

Mr. Walker:—Ontario proliferates regulations by the dozens each month. It would have 6,000 to 8,000 pages of regulations just to complement the law. I ask you how anyone can know what the law is?

Mr. Peterson: Especially you lawyers.

Mr. Walker: The answer is that no one really does. It is just too much for any person to grasp, let alone the general public who are expected to obey it. Why do we have so much law? The answer, to some extent, relates to agencies of government which themselves have become a government. They were probably established in the first place to carry out a small function of government, yet sometimes they have grown into governments by themselves.

Consider the conservation authorities which are governments within governments, governments within many, many municipalities. Consider the district health councils.

Mr. Bradley: The Tory sellout.

Mr. Walker: Consider the whole host of alternative governments such as the Ontario Municipal Board, the Ontario Highway Transport Board, the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario, the Workmen's Compensation Board—

Mr. Bradley: You want to abolish the Conservative senate.

Mr. Walker: —the Niagara Escarpment Commission that looks after some two million acres in this province. These alternative governments are not really accountable to the people directly, yet they rule often beyond the control of government itself.

Last year, in speaking to the review motion of the Leader of the Opposition, I indicated there were some 355 agencies, boards or commissions in Ontario to the best that I could determine. I regret to advise the House that I was not accurate in that matter. It would appear there are considerably more, in the range of 750, to which the government of Ontario makes one or more appointments. There are even more than that if you consider bodies to which the government makes no appointments yet, in fact, provides the funding.

Mr. Haggerty: You should have been on the Wiseman committee.

Mr. Walker: My sunset resolution is an attempt to get a handle on these agencies, boards or commissions. It's an attempt to return to the Legislature, to the cabinet, to the minister, to government in general, the control, responsibility and accountability.

What a sunset provision would do is to require these agencies, boards or commissions periodically to justify their existence to those who set them up in the first place. If the agency justifies its work, then it is simple to pass new authority remandating its existence for yet another period of time. If on the other hand modification is appropriate, that too can be easily dealt with.

If, however, the value of the agency does not warrant continued existence then termination automatically occurs without government doing a thing—something, at times, that it is very easy to do. Some agencies will have outlived their usefulness and their demise will be most appropriate.

The sunset law puts the onus of proof on the backers of the agency or the program to prove the value. This is a shift in the onus of proof. Normally, it is up to those in opposition to a program to justify why there is no value and, quite frankly in this Legislature and in others, I am hard pressed to think of where programs have been axed along that form.

The magic of sunset is that it turns the inertia of government bureaucracy against itself so that it consumes itself, for as we know, it is far too easy for bureaucracy to do simply nothing and thereby be assured that it is immune from positive action against it. Sunset reverses that onus of proof, Mr. Speaker, by assuming that there is no value and requiring the accused to prove its innocence in order to gain the reprieve.

While I have restricted my resolution to agencies, boards and commissions, let me say that it has great application for all government programs, the assumption being that not all government programs should be in place for ever. Like the hundreds and hundreds of agencies, boards and commissions, programs should not be expected to continue for ever without periodic consideration as to their value. As I once said, "Nothing in government is so holy that it deserves to escape periodic reassessment in order to justify its continuation."

If members approve this sunset proposal, it is not the be-all and end-all. It cannot be applied willy-nilly to every agency, board and commission. It must be carefully applied by a proper and well thought-out piece of legislation so that the proper analysis of the worth of the agency, board or commission can be conducted. For example, one could not modify the Workmen's Compensation Board or Ontario Hydro without very carefully analysing the entire operation.

Application of sunset will have to be phased over many years in order properly to assess the need for remandating. I would think every seven years might be appropriate for some agencies, particularly the very complex ones, but others might have sunset applied every two years or so.

Sunset will not automatically save all kinds of money, although there is that very distinct possibility. Sunset will, however, make more alternatives and more accountability for those alternate governments called agencies, boards and commissions.

Sunset will restore responsibility to these agencies of government. Sunset will allow members of the Legislature to keep a rein on these bodies for which we are assumed by the people to be responsible in any case. I urge your support of this resolution which while aptly called "sunset" may be considered the sunrise of accountability.

Mr. Nixon: That is a nicely-turned phrase.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable member wish to reserve the remaining seven minutes?

Mr. Walker: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peterson: I think that was a very poetic windup to the honourable member's speech. I think it's just depressing that there aren't more of his colleagues to listen to this because we've been talking about this kind of a program for many years—

Mr. Nixon: There's nothing but empty seats.

Mr. Peterson: —and he really should be haranguing his own members on this kind of issue.

Mr. Haggerty: There's nobody to give an account.

[4:30]

Mr. Peterson: Obviously, we have some differences on the implementation of this kind of policy. We're going to support this resolution, but as I stand here, Mr. Speaker, I have a curious sense of déjà vue. We went through this entire debate—albeit it was different in some respect—some six months or so ago, when my leader introduced a similar resolution. We had the same debate. As I recall, the ministers and the government caucus, including the member for London South, didn't vote for it. Those people stood up and guillotined that bill and it never did come to a vote. We are going to support this, because we are of the view that once we support one issue, Walker's resolution in this House, then there will be no more need for him here and maybe he can sneak away where he belongs.

Mr. Warner: Sink slowly in the west.

Mr. Peterson: I just have a few minutes and I want to support some of the things that the honourable member said because I think they are so very important. It is very interesting that I put a question on the order paper on February 23 of this year and, as you know, under the standing orders we expect, in most cases at least, an answer within two weeks. In a clear violation of the spirit of those rules, I had an answer to that question back on May 2, some seven weeks later.

Mr. Warner: Shameful.

Mr. Peterson: I want to read that question into the record, Mr. Speaker, because it is important to the debate. The question was: "Inquiry of the ministry: Would the ministry provide an updated list of all boards, agencies and commissions to which the government makes appointments, the administrative costs of the above board, agencies and commissions including names of commissioners, methods and amount of indemnity, and the amount of funds administered by the said boards, agencies and commissions in the current fiscal year?"

Well, it's obvious at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that they didn't know and they were scurrying about the ministries trying to find out for what, in fact they were responsible. It is an indictment in itself that they did not have that information immediately, on the tip of their pens, as they say. They should have been able to report back quickly and efficiently.

Even when we did get an answer it was the most convoluted, incomplete and disappointing answer to that inquiry at which I wish all members of the House would take a look. I have no idea how the so-called Wiseman committee or even the committee on procedural affairs is going to proceed without at least cataloguing the various sins they have created over the goodly number of years.

We have had a tremendous difference of numbers on this question of boards, agencies and committees. We cast about the number of 344. The member for London South today says it is over 700. I can say, Mr. Speaker, in the ministry's response to my inquiry, they came up with, depending on how one catalogues it, somewhere over 500. Now that figure depends on local boards, and it depends on ad hoc committees. It depends on a myriad of things but it is in the order of 500 at least. Maybe my colleague from London South is aware of the fact that the government has buried another 250 somewhere that they haven't come clean with, at least to us.

Mr. Bradley: What do you think they do with their campaign manager?

Mr. Peterson: I was very disappointed. I was very disappointed when they spent seven pages in the explanation saying why there could be no detailed explanation and why no answer could, in fact be given. They couldn't apportion the amount of money controlled or administered by each board. Really, Mr. Speaker, it wasn't a very constructive contribution to this process about which we have all, at some time or another, registered concern.

Obviously, one of the important issues in this matter is how much money they administer and how much they cost to administer so we can do some kind of reasonable legislative cost-benefit analysis to find out if we are spending money efficiently and well. As the member for London South has frequently pointed out, we create these boards, agencies and commissions and then we don't know what we have done with them.

I have a copy of the terms of reference from the procedural affairs committee that's looking into this thing. They have various little squibs about what various committees have done. It's interesting, as an example, Mr. Speaker, to show why it's necessary. It says: "As an example from this latter group, the chairman of the plant diseases licence review board." Now, I must confess to you I did not know you had to have a licence for your plant to get a disease in this province. A 1977 survey readily stated: "We were appointed by the Agriculture minister, Bill Stewart, to act as a review board. We were never used." Of course the list goes on and on.

Mr. Nixon: Very disappointing.

Mr. Peterson: I could read through a long list of redundant agencies. One of the problems, of course, with this committee as I understand these terms of reference, is they are only going to be studying the boards that are, in fact necessary and not the ones that are unnecessary. It's interesting to note at this time, Mr. Speaker, after the leadership of my own leader's resolution on this some six months ago, the concern registered by the member for London South. There are at this present time two committees looking into this myriad of boards, agencies and commissions. Now, talk about efficiency in the Legislature. The Premier stands up and appoints the Wiseman committee—

An hon. member: In name only.

Mr. Peterson: —four Tory backbenchers— to look into this whole matter. We are not expecting any concrete results out of them.

At the same time, the committee on procedural affairs under the member for Oshawa will be looking into this matter. They will be running concurrently. They should start by sunseting one of them, at least.

I don't know how you can possibly justify two committees—

Mr. Nixon: Back to the shoestore, Douglas.

Mr. Peterson: —with their members getting $50 or $75 a day, sitting all summer, looking through ridiculous things. It is time for some leadership out of that government, and we have seen none—

Mr. Nixon: There's nobody there.

Mr. Peterson: —out of that chair so far.

Mr. Nixon: Trying to get their cigars lit—

Mr. Peterson: I look back to the debate when it was so eloquently expressed by the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) about the boards, agencies and commissions being, in effect, "the Ontario senate," the graveyard for every Tory hack in this province, as some kind of appointee to a board, agency or commission.

Mr. Bradley: Campaign manager.

Mr. Peterson: I want the honourable member to know that I reread that speech. It was a first class speech, and I hope he will repeat it today. It is a burial ground for these dead, tired political warhorses, a place for them to retire to in some kind of peace.

Mr. Walker: There is one there for you, David.

Mr. Peterson: Everybody is aware of the abuses of that. The member for York South pointed them out so beautifully in that last debate.

Mr. Nixon: Take their pension and a salary, too.

Mr. Peterson: Obviously we need conflict of interest legislation to protect ourselves from that kind of political abuse of this system.

Mr. Warner: Just because there is no senate in this province.

Mr. Peterson: We can certainly understand with that kind of tenor and flavour—

Mr. Nixon: We need a new government to weed it out.

Mr. Peterson: —why the Premier is so reluctant to change this kind of thing. He expressed his reluctance, in fact, in the kind of committee he appointed, the kind of members he put on that committee. Frankly, I am not very optimistic that much is going to come out of that committee.

I want to take the House back a bit, if I may, to the resolution—

Mr. Bradley: How many Tories?

Mr. Peterson: —we would have preferred which was introduced by the leader of the Liberal Party at that time. Sunset isn't a bad device, but let's not get carried away with it. It's not a panacea for this waste and redundancy in government, but it is one management device. It is one technique that can be used.

We have in the past talked about—and will continue to talk about—other management devices and techniques that should be employed to keep this large bureaucracy under control. We've talked about deregulation on a systematic basis. We have talked about zero-based budgeting. We have talked about analysing the economic impact. And we have talked about sunset. And we support that. I don't want people to get a false impression that this is a universal panacea.

One of the problems with sunset is that it creates an automatic death, but it doesn't automatically create or allow for the consolidation, and the making more efficient, of some of these boards, agencies and commissions. It puts a different kind of onus on that board and it's a good onus. It is well known around here that the members have to justify their existence every once in a while. We've had to do it in the last couple of years and there is a good chance we're going to have to do it again very soon—when we will have no trouble justifying our existence, believe me about that.

Mr. Wiseman: Do you know something?

Mr. Nixon: There is going to be a real harvest this year.

Mr. Riddell: At that time the changes are made, too.

Mr. Peterson: I don't have to apologize for that, I think it is a good thing, a constructive thing in the process. It is time to sit down and rationally get a handle on this. It's not time for just a superficial motion. We should be putting our time into constructive, positive analysis, line-by-line, statute by statute, regulation by regulation, board by board, agency by agency, and commission by commission, to look at if in fact they are fulfilling a role, if they are doing it well, if they are doing it efficiently, if they can be consolidated with another board, agency, or commission, and bring the whole thing to heel. It is not easy. It is going to take a goodly number of years.

The honourable member's resolution says in effect that we should amend some 350 or whatever enabling statutes, putting in an extra clause, giving them an automatic death. What he is talking about, according to legislative counsel, is possible but extraordinarily difficult. We are going to be dealing with sunset amendments because you can't bring in a grandfather act that is going to deal with all of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Peterson: I think that our suggestion was a constructive one.

Mr. G. Taylor: Sunset on you, Peterson.

Mr. Peterson: We will support this one because it is better to light one candle than to curse the darkness.

Mr. Nixon: Very well put.

Mr. MacDonald: These poetic conclusions to the speeches from the honourable members from London are really challenging.

Mr. Nixon: And from Toronto?

Mr. MacDonald: I do not approach their level of poetry; I may even be a disappointment to them.

Let me say this: The problem which has provoked the introduction of this resolution is, admittedly, a very important one. We have agencies, boards, and commissions that have been sitting around, sometimes, for a couple of generations. Some are redundant. Some are overlapping. We should have some mechanism so we can take a look at this situation instead of letting it just drift on.

There are two things. One is the sunset legislation that this resolution calls for which would trigger that review. But even more important than triggering the review is a mechanism to do the review.

By triggering the review, sure, the act may disappear, but it may be something that should be continued. It may be worthy. The mechanism for a review is very important. I want to suggest that we may be moving toward the development of an effective mechanism for review and in my view, that's far more important than the sunset legislation.

Let me try to explain that because it is the burden of my remarks.

Agencies, boards, and commissions have been set up by governments to do jobs that the government, rightly or wrongly, concluded could be done by some body with a degree of independence. Sometimes this body was an advisory body; sometimes an appeal board; and sometimes it was an operational body like the liquor commission, or Ontario Hydro. This body, established to go out and do a certain job, became an emanation of the crown.

Just as this government should be subjected to the review of the Legislature to see that it is doing its job correctly, so should all those agencies, boards, and commissions.

That is where we have failed. If we have failed. If we have failed here I think it is as well to acknowledge we've failed generally in the parliaments of the western world. We've been seeking ways to do this.

What have we done in the past? We used to have a standing committee on government commissions. Theoretically, this body was going to look at all agencies, boards, and commissions in the normal four-year period between a couple of elections.

Presumably, they would have divided the time so they could review that whole list. It wasn't an effective approach because the committee had no staff; the members didn't have the time to do an effective job; and the committee wasn't given enough time, even if it had had the staff, because there were 18 or 20 committees in the Legislature at that point.

The result was that once or twice a year we would have meetings in which high-profile commissions, like Hydro, or the liquor licence board or something of that nature, would be brought before the committee, to which members had some objections. We would get an hour's report from Ontario Hydro. We would ask a few questions and then we'd go away. And that was supposed to be a review.

It was ludicrous. It was no review at all. A select committee is having difficulty reviewing Hydro now, after years, literally months in certain years to do that kind of thing.

When we moved into the new structure of omnibus committees dealing with policy fields, this got lost in the shuffle, once again. Only last year did we finally assign to the standing committee on procedural affairs the responsibility for at least looking at a portion of this job; those agencies, boards and commissions which are obligated under their statutes to table a report in this Legislature.

May I suggest that all of them should be tabling a report in this Legislature, not just some. They should do it directly through the ministry under whose operational umbrella they are now being brought, to be part of the ministry's report. Alternatively, the ministry's report should acknowledge that there is a separate report coming in from such and such an agency, board, or commission. They would all be tabled in the Legislature so at least there would be an opportunity for us to have the raw material. We would have the basis for reviewing what these agencies, boards and commissions are doing.

Now we've got a bit of a problem trying to work out an effective mechanism for review. Some part of the job, as I said a moment ago, was handled in the standing committee on procedural affairs.

I implore the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) not to say it was given the job a year ago and they haven't done it. That is a very facile and unfair comment. They were given the job a year ago and they had no opportunity to do it.

Mr. G. Taylor: Your member was out campaigning for the leadership.

Mr. MacDonald: They had no opportunity to do it last fall because they had no opportunity to sit and they had no staff. We are only now getting at it. Meanwhile, the government has moved with the establishment of its own internal committee, the so-called Wiseman committee.

It was reported to the standing committee on procedural affairs this morning that our chairman has met with the Premier, and the Premier has indicated that at the moment that review tends to be an approach to each one of the ministries to get them to clean up their houses, which is a good first step. To what extent the committee will go into an actual review of each of the remaining agencies, boards and commissions is as yet not decided. In any case, the Premier's office has indicated to the standing committee on procedural affairs they will keep us informed which ones the Wiseman committee have reviewed and decided to eliminate, or that the government is giving consideration to eliminating down the road a bit, so we won't be duplicating our work.

The Wiseman group, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, has got a sunset provision; it's a short-term group; it is not a continuing group. I come back to my basic point, the continuing review of agencies, boards and commissions should be within this Legislature, through the appropriate committee of the Legislature, which is the standing committee on procedural affairs.

I hope when we sort out the relationship, and the portion of the job that is done by the Wiseman committee and by the standing committee on procedural affairs, we can come up with a process and report back to the House on a process whereby each agency, board and commission will be reviewed over a four-year span, or over each year, whatever is deemed to be necessary.

If that is done, you don't need a sunset law, Mr. Speaker. You don't need a sunset law because then you would have said, "Here's a committee of the Legislature whose job it is to review each of these agencies, boards and commissions." All the government has to do is make it possible for that committee, through the necessary staffing and time allocation, to do the job. The sunset provision is redundant. If they are able to do the job, they will do the job.

Conversely, if we have a sunset provision and the government doesn't set up the mechanism for doing it.

Mr. Speaker, is my time up?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: About two minutes yet.

Mr. MacDonald: Two minutes? Oh, gracious.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It will seem like an eternity.

Mr. Warner: Time for some poetry.

Mr. MacDonald: I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the sunset provision is only a step in the direction of doing the job and it fails to come to grips with the real problem, the real problem of developing a mechanism for the review.

The member for London Centre said he hopes for some leadership over there; I don't want the leadership from the government on this. I want the leadership from everybody in this House to develop it through the combined efforts of the Wiseman group and the standing committee on procedural affairs. When the Wiseman group sunsets itself out of existence, the standing committee on procedural affairs, as a regular committee of this House, becomes the responsible mechanism for the continuing review.

If the government and all of the parties in the House take the necessary steps to make certain that that committee has adequate staff so they can do the research work for the review purposes, and if they have adequate time allocation, whether it be during the time the House is sitting or as a committee operating as a select committee between sittings of the Legislature, then we will have a real mechanism. With that real mechanism we won't need our sunset legislation.

I'm not really in favour of this, because this is only a step in the right direction without coming to grips with the problem.

Mr. G. Taylor: I am pleased to speak on this resolution put forward by my colleague, the member for London South. It has been in some other form before this House before but it is one thing that the House, the precipitator of much of our legislation, should be discussing, because in all respects, we have heard it many times before that we are an over-governed nation. It is the legislative bodies themselves that produce that type of over-government. Sunset legislation provides an automatic termination, in its true sense, of programs and agencies within a given number of years.

This may not be the sole purpose of sunset, but that is one of the true features of sunset. Maybe we do not need entirely that solid, true form of sunset but some form of it. The fact is that we are discussing the matter this afternoon. This resolution in theory is good, in practice even better, should we institute it.

As the member for York South has said, the mechanism is not in this resolution, but this, as with other forms of resolutions before this Legislature, is a prod to bring the government to put forth a statute that may do this. The time, the years, the determination, the dates, are all part of that procedure that may come forth. Not necessarily do we have to say it must be seven years. There are no magical numbers. There is no magic in certain boards and committees and commissions and agencies that we have. But it is necessary to review those and that is one of the basic issues of sunset: that there is some form of review mechanism.

Then again, do we need to have a look at some of these ABCs, as they are often referred to? Should they be modified, reviewed, eliminated or have they outlived some of their usefulness? In that respect again it is necessary to review these boards, agencies and commissions.

Another feature that goes along with the sunset provision is that of funding. Should we review this? It is necessary to review often the funding of the different boards. Are they worth the economic cost to us? Do we eliminate them because of cost or are we willing to, in the alternative, look forward to providing the money for these? Is the board providing a useful function?

This continuous review mechanism may be, as the member for York South has said, the procedural affairs committee of this Legislature. Maybe that is the one rather than what is referred to as the Wiseman committee. Some form is necessary. Maybe the staffing and time should be set aside for that procedural affairs committee so that it can get under way with the duty of removing the over-government of this province and of this country and of our municipalities.

Sunset has been applied in some cases. As an example, we can put forth the rent review legislation. We can look forward to the homeowners' program and some of the other programs that are started and then have inserted in them cutoff dates. Some are inserted after the program gets under way and then receives some criticism. These should be put forward ahead of time.

Like my Premier, I would not like to be provocative but we do have to be provocative at some times, and maybe my statement might be. It was the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party which overwhelmingly supported sunset legislation in the 1976 campaign. Here is where they will rise on the other side there—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh, come on, George

Mr. G. Taylor: —and then interestingly enough, the Liberal Party used it as a plank in one of their campaigns.

Mr. T. P. Reid: How you can make a virtue of the mess you got us into is beyond me.

Mr. G. Taylor: Of course, I might add that the member for London South brought that forward earlier as a Progressive Conservative thought on the subject.

Then of course, we have in there the self-destruct mechanisms. This is a feature that the member for London South has put forward. The self-destruct feature is sometimes worthy of note.

Mr. Samis: You are courting criticism.

Mr. G. Taylor: The rent review legislation was self-destructing, but then it has had this sunrise on it every so often as we feel the need—

Mr. Foulds: If it was such an important platform, why isn't there a bill before the House?

Mr. G. Taylor: —to put that sunrise provision in there. So, the sunset and the self-destruct provisions do provide for that mechanism of review. Of course, we could provide ourselves with lifelong work in that respect in reviewing the landlord and tenant legislation—until we remove landlord and tenant legislation in the future. But this self-destruct mechanism has to be put in there and has to work.

Mr. Foulds: Maybe we should have a sunset law on your speech.

Mr. G. Taylor: It will happen. One might say though, as the member brings that up, one might say that we should have sunset on all speeches rather than just the ones in the private members' hours. Indeed, I heard the member for York South earlier this year saying that we should sit longer and longer and longer. I say, when we sit longer and longer, we produce more and more legislation, with more government involvement in the lives of the citizens of this province, that which we do not need.

Mr. Sterling: And the members opposite are responsible for it.

Mr. Foulds: If the member thinks so little of his job, why doesn't he resign? If he doesn't think he should be a legislator, why doesn't he resign?

Mr. G. Taylor: They want to sit longer to get more legislation. When we put this legislation forward—

Mr. Warner: Go sink slowly in the west.

Mr. G. Taylor: It has been referred to in here that it is a sausage machine that produces legislation, and out it grinds. But it sometimes comes out looking like a wiener. When some hot dogs want to change that wiener—and they relish the thought of changing it—they might think we are too old to cut the mustard on this side—

Mr. Foulds: That's true.

Mr. G. Taylor: —but when they get that food machine going—

Mr. Warner: These remarks will catch up with you.

Mr. G. Taylor: —that solid smörgasbord of legislation, they amend and amend, and what comes out of the legislation is far from what it intended to be. That's what is happening to some of our agencies, boards and commissions: they get operating, and they do not know what they are operating. They get a mandate and continue on; so that's another reason why they should have the sunset put on them.

How is my time, Mr. Speaker?

An hon. member: A five-minute major.

Mr. G. Taylor: Two minutes? Well, in winding up—and I hope Hansard has been able to get all this; we talk so loudly in here and for the record, as we often hear—I don't know what record they are selling in this House—

Mr. Van Horne: I am going to put it on my dartboard.

Mr. G. Taylor: It has been suggested there are approximately 350 agencies, boards and commissions.

Mr. Hall: Who set them up, George?

Mr. G. Taylor: If we set out today, this very minute, we might not get them reviewed before the next election that the member from London, or one of those territories, says is coming forthrightly, in a short while—

Mr. Samis: Who has been in power for 35 years?

Mr. Foulds: You are striding forcefully into the 17th century.

Mr. G. Taylor: —but the present issue is that we have agencies, boards and commissions, and we must review them, change their attitudes, reduce them and cut them out.

Mr. Speaker, I may have slightly less than a minute left for the member who might want to wind up, the member for London South; if not, I pass to the next speaker. The sunset comes down upon me.

Mr. Peterson: The member for London North deserves a turn.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would point out to the member for London North there is one minute left for this debate.

Mr. Samis: That's closure; that's unfair.

Mr. Van Horne: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That obviously cuts out a lot of what I was going to say. But in reference to the member for Simcoe Centre's remarks about the wieners, I would submit that the part missing was obvious in his presence; that is, the beans.

I am pleased to support this resolution. I would submit, however, that it is only part of what should be a total package that, in my opinion, is long overdue. We have seen umpteen examples in this House during this past brief year, and certainly examples prior to that time, of lack of planning. I would submit that it is time that the government looked at not just sunset and the various agencies, boards and commissions to which it might refer, but that it would look further than that to all the programs and propositions through which it spends money and supervises the spending of money.

It has been a pleasure to have these few moments to speak to this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Warner: That was excellent.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The time for debate of this matter has expired.

DISPOSITION OF LOTTERY REVENUE

Mr. Kerrio moved resolution 20:

That in the opinion of this House: 1. all revenue from the Wintario and Provincial lotteries should be deposited in the consolidated revenue fund. 2. a ceiling should be set on the amount of money to be directed to non-profit organizations for fitness, amateur sport, recreational, arts and multicultural activities; 3. the balance of the revenue should be directed to health programs and research and health-related environmental programs; and 4. the revenue from the lotteries should be distributed according to a formula established by the Legislative Assembly and should be reviewed on a yearly basis.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Niagara Falls for up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the minister isn't here.

An hon. member: He is not here again?

Mr. Warner: He's not disappointed.

Mr. Foulds: He is in Edmonton. He has got an Edmonton commitment.

[5:00]

Mr. Kerrio: I would like to suggest that it is sort of coincidental that he comes from the wine country, because I think the effect of his grapevine is showing in the number of letters I have received from various members of the arts, libraries, and other cultural groups. I'm a little disappointed that they did not take a bit of time and touch base with my resolution before they took exception to it. Out of respect for them, I would like to say I am most concerned about those groups as they relate to the funding from Wintario.

At the outset, I'd like to reassure those who are concerned about a continuing commitment to sport, recreation, art and multi-cultural activity.

Mr. Warner: Don't worry about it. It's not going to pass.

Mr. Kerrio: I would like to say it is not my intention to propose legislation which would prevent lottery funds from going to these very worthwhile activities. The reason I am tabling this resolution is that I am seriously concerned about priorities at this time. I can't believe any member of this Legislature or any member of the arts, multicultural, sport or recreational groups would object to a fair and equitable distribution of lottery money for very important and worthwhile purposes.

An hon. member: You heard them today.

Mr. Kerrio: Recognizing that culture and recreation are activities deserving support from the lottery, but also recognizing the lotteries have generated much more funds than had ever been anticipated, I am proposing a reconsideration of the way in which lottery funds are disbursed. I had been assumed that all money generated by the lotteries is to be spent on culture and recreation. Since much more money has been generated by lotteries than expected, and since we are in serious economic difficulties, I believe my resolution to change this approach is timely and important.

Two of its provisions are clarifications and extensions of existing policy. The first is the proceeds from the Wintario and Provincial lotteries be deposited in the consolidated revenue fund. That is already being done and it's accepted practice that those moneys would be deposited in that fashion.

Mr. Ruŝton: Darcy uses it. He makes use of it.

Mr. Kerrio: The second is a proportion of this revenue be directed to health programs and research in health-related environmental programs. The fact that so much money has been generated should not in any way take funds from those areas I have addressed myself to. I keep referring to that because it's very important that the people understand my commitment on this bill and the policy of the Liberal Party. We are dedicated and committed to supporting those aspects of our cultural and recreational areas that are so meaningful to many people in our society.

Mr. Wildman: Did you say you were committed?

Mr. Foulds: Are you for or against this resolution?

Mr. Kerrio: The proportions are to be determined by a formula established annually by the Legislature. In this way, there will be a flexible mechanism to determine how money should be spent in response to changing demands and conditions, rather than the present blanket, indiscriminate approach which is out of touch with the needs and realities of today. When the formula has been determined, a ceiling shall be set on the amount of money to be directed to non-profit cultural and recreational activities and the balance should be spent on health and health-related environmental problems.

At this juncture, I'd like to relate something that happened to me as recently as yesterday. I attended with many other people in the Niagara region, the opening of a $600,000 addition to the crippled children's facility there. That money was raised by local fund-raisers. These are areas where I think the government has very luckily had the obligation taken from them. There are areas of concern—I'm pleased to see the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) is here. In the Niagara Centre for Youth Care, we are just operating on seed money. The government has not seen fit to make a reasonable contribution to a very much needed facility to take care of disturbed young people in our community. During the debates on the estimates of Culture and Recreation, when I suggested that there had been considerable money extended to some areas of arts and culture I wasn't suggesting that we take those away from those areas, but that there was much more money generated. While they had hoped that Wintario, at its inception, might raise $20 million to $25 million, in the very first year we raised some $42 million. We carried over into 1976-77 $38 million of the $42 million and added to that $76 million more.

Mr. Ruston: I never won a dollar.

Mr. Kerrio: We have accumulated over the years in that short time, nearly $150 million.

Mr. Hall: That much?

Mr. Kerrio: There is absolutely no way that the government can continue to spend this kind of money without recognizing that it's time we had some priorities. Now we're faced with a government considering a fourth lottery, believe it or not—a fourth lottery for which you can buy tickets in this province. And the fact of the matter is that particular lottery, which is referred to as the computerized lottery, is, in reality—

Mr. Nixon: That is called the numbers game.

Mr. Kerrio: —and I don't like to use this particular term, but a member of the press used it so I feel I could carry on that way—he referred to it as the numbers game.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You certainly set high standards for yourself.

Mr. Foulds: You are not fussy about where you pick up your ideas, are you?

Mr. Kerrio: The fact of the matter is that it was first brought into being in Chicago by Dutch Schultz, the gangster. I wouldn't like to suggest that this government has anything in common with Dutch Schultz, but the fact is that they are planning this kind of a lottery for the province of Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He was an amateur compared to this government.

Mr. Ruston: The Chicago gang. The Treasurer used to be called one when he sat in the back row.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kerrio: We are now embarking on a situation in the province of Ontario where you will be able to purchase tickets on four different lotteries—

Mr. Wildman: You would think you would welcome that. I thought that is what you wanted.

Mr. Cunningham: They are going to call the last one "The Regional."

Mr. Kerrio: —despite adding to this particular area of gambling, despite adding to people's ability to perform this particular function and so raise considerable money by gambling, I'm very concerned that the government has not seen fit to deal with the expenditures in a more meaningful way.

Many sectors believe there is potential abuse involving Wintario funds. An independent study on municipalities' use of these funds reveals that some communities know how to shift financial support to desired projects so that Wintario criteria for proven community support appear to be present. That was reported in some of our papers in Toronto and they called this laundering of government funds; in reality, those places were getting a considerable amount of Wintario money put to that kind of use without coming up with private matching funds.

It is also well known that many so-called semi-private clubs get lottery funding when they do not really meet the public accessibility criteria set forth in the principles of Wintario.

We also know of the odd fraud involving recipients of Wintario funds whose expenditures are not and cannot be effectively monitored because Wintario follow-up is spotty and not meant to analyse the value of this very new venture for the Ontario government. That is a grave concern of mine, but the reality of it is that we now have people in the upper income brackets with their hands in the public purse.

Mr. Samis: What's new?

Mr. Foulds: What else is new?

Mr. Warner: It's been going on for years.

Mr. Foulds: Name some names.

Mr. Kerrio: And I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to those kinds of expenditures with Wintario money, it's time that the government took a very, very good look at the criteria and the kind of people that get support from Wintario.

I'd also like to suggest that the very fact that matching funds are part of the criteria leads to those areas that have the ability to raise matching funds continuing to get more and more of this Wintario money. However, Mr. Speaker, even though the government has seen fit that one part in two is necessary rather than matching funds, I would like to tell you that where a recreation facility is badly needed in a remote place such as Moosonee, there's just no way the people can raise the kind of matching funds necessary to qualify for Wintario money.

So there are many, many abuses of the system. I am suggesting that the money, in fact excess funds that have been raised are not being put to good use. When it became apparent there was a great deal more money than needed to fund libraries, the arts, culture and fitness, the criteria that suggested "try us," I'm afraid we're pretty loose. In all the time the lottery has been in place, there has not been any movement to make certain those people who avail themselves of Wintario money put it to the kind of use to best serve those municipalities.

Now I would also suggest that we in the government must begin to be responsible as people within their own households are responsible. Along with many of the members here, I have certainly watched many shows where people have won. When interviewed and asked how they would spend their winnings, in nearly every instance they would cite areas of need within the family, and things they would like to do but couldn't afford to do. I suggest it's time the government was just as responsible with funds raised through the lotteries in the province of Ontario.

Now I suggest that there is another area of grave concern to me in the matter as it relates to the competition we give very worthwhile charities such as those for multiple sclerosis and the mentally retarded. Those organizations now find it more difficult to raise funds because of the competition from Wintario. When you watch those very expensive programs on TV, Mr. Speaker, you can appreciate that those people are certainly at a disadvantage when competing with the government of the province of Ontario to make their case known. I suggest to you we owe it to them to address ourselves to those areas where we have taken away their ability to raise funds for their particular causes.

I raised that question with the Premier on one occasion and he promised to get me an answer. I am not suggesting he didn't give me some kind of an answer because he said they would be willing to help. But I am very concerned as to the help that was given, and I wonder now if such a resolution has taken place.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve five minutes and I would like to know how my time is now.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Just under five minutes left.

Mr. Kerrio: Just under five minutes. Yes, thank you very much Mr. Speaker.

In summing up I would like to set at ease those minds that think this bill would, in any way, affect very worthwhile cultural, art and sports funding.

Mr. Bradley: Somebody has been on the phone.

Mr. Kerrio: I would like to say that I am most concerned about the huge amounts of money that have been raised through this method. I hope the government and the third party will support me in this resolution to see if we can't put it to more meaningful use.

[5:15]

Mr. Grande: We have met with the Liberal critic many times during the estimates, at least for the last couple of years, and let me say at the outset that I am not in agreement with this resolution he has before the House today. I oppose this resolution because I firmly believe it sets very dangerous precedents for the province of Ontario.

Mr. Bradley: Besides, it didn't originate over there.

Mr. Grande: I will get into that in due course, but first, let me suggest that what this resolution indeed does—

Mr. Kerrio: It must be a good resolution.

Mr. Grande: I am convinced that the Liberal critic for Culture and Recreation—as a matter of fact, I am extremely happy that he has converted. In the last few days there has obviously been a conversion on his part. I guess he felt that throughout this province there are many hundreds of groups who do rely upon Wintario assistance and Wintario funding in order to carry on all the worthwhile activities in recreation, multicultural activities, and the arts.

Mr. Bradley: He is not excluding them.

Mr. Grande: I say that I am glad that the Liberal critic has converted—at least he appeared at the beginning to be converted—however what I felt listening to him was that he felt constrained to say what he really wants to say, that is, that he considers most of the activities that are going on across this province to be frills and nothing else. I reject that point of view.

Mr. Bradley: But he didn't say that, though. You're saying he said that.

Mr. Grande: I rejected it at the last two ministry estimates and I will continue to reject it.

Mr. Wildman: He said it in estimates and it's in Hansard.

Mr. B. Newman: That's how I interpreted your comments in the estimates.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, to me, cultural activities across this province have a value which goes beyond putting a dollars-and-cents value upon them.

Mr. Bradley: You need a lottery to do it though?

Mr. Grande: Well, to respond to that, never in any country in the civilized world have the arts, these kinds of activities, been self-sustaining. The member knows that, and if he doesn't he should do some research.

Mr. Bradley: I feel put down now.

Mr. B. Newman: Did he hurt you?

Mr. Grande: On many occasions, the Liberal critic has stated that part of the Wintario money should be going to other worthwhile activities. At the beginning of this resolution he said—I suppose he did quote it so perhaps there is no point in quoting it again—but he said first, that all revenue from the Wintario and Provincial lotteries should be deposited in the consolidated revenue fund.

The Liberal critic, two and a half years after he became the Liberal critic, does not know that in fact that is exactly what happens, and he has to put it in a resolution before this House. If he had bothered to take a look at the Ontario Lottery Corporation Act, it states very clearly in section 9, "The net profits of the corporation after provision for prices and the payment of expenses of operation, shall be paid into the consolidated revenue fund."

However, what section 9 also does is to earmark these particular funds for specific purposes. It earmarks them to the promotion of development of physical fitness, sports, recreational and cultural activities and facilities therefor. Obviously, the Liberal member is not happy with that and he would like to bring in an amendment and through this resolution change that particular act.

Mr. Wildman: Why doesn't he amend the bill?

Mr. Grande: May I suggest to him that he could. Nobody prevents him. He does not have to bring it in terms of a resolution. There is no expenditure of money in changing that.

The next point that the resolution brings forth is that a ceiling should be set on the amount of money to be directed to non-profit organizations for fitness, amateur sports and recreation and multicultural activities. Clearly, the intention is there to curtail these activities across this province.

I want to go back historically to the point that somehow money raised from Wintario is not used for worthwhile causes. That point, historically, is back in 1976 when the then Minister of Health, the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller) went around this province saying to people that he was going to close 10 hospitals across this province. What happened is the so-called angel of death at that particular time, this Legislature, came down pretty firmly and stated categorically, "No way you're going to do that." We won that battle.

I may suggest to the Liberal critic that perhaps the pressure for the priority of what the Ministry of Health does is right here in this Legislature; and it's not a matter of money. There are approximately $3 billion in that Health budget. Sixty million dollars from Wintario is not going to make a lot of difference.

From there, we went to the other crisis. The other crisis is the coming on the scene of the then Minister of Community and Social Services, the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) who said,

"From this particular year we're only going to have a 5.5 per cent increase in social services." The Legislature started pressuring that, and started pressuring the Ministry of Community and Social Services and said, "No, you cannot do that." However, I think we lost that battle.

I don't think any portion of Wintario funds that would have gone into social services at that particular time would have changed the position of the government. They would not have spent more money in the social services and not reduced that budget.

Then we went to the other crisis, the unemployment crisis. One of the back-bench members of the Conservative government, a northern member, the member for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy), I think, suggested some of the Wintario money should be used to create employment.

The reason why I'm pointing out in a historical fashion—

Mr. Wildman: Why don't we amend the bill?

Mr. Grande: —what has happened over the past two or three years is that it is the government's responsibility to decide on the priorities so that these kinds of crises do not develop.

There's no point in trying to put in $50 million or $10 million or $12 million from Wintario to alleviate those particular needs because that is not going to make a lot of difference. It is government positions; it is priorities on which we, on this side of the House at least, have opposed the government at every turn regarding the cutbacks.

Then we come to the OHIP situation. Again, from the Liberal Party we hear, "Why don't we put into OHIP some money from Wintario to relieve the 37.5 per cent increase?" Mr. Speaker, you know and everyone in this Legislature knows that $10 million from Wintario going into OHIP would have not decreased that increase by a tremendous lot.

What we should have done and what we attempted to do, and what we did do is to say to the Treasurer of this province, "That increase is clearly unacceptable."

Mr. Bradley: Run a higher deficit.

Mr. Grande: "You are the ones who govern this province. It's not acceptable to the opposition parties, so therefore you change your mind." Indeed, we won.

Mr. Nixon: Did you vote with us on that?

Mr. Grande: Therefore, I would not want the Liberal critic to think that by putting $5 million or $10 million from Wintario into health, that is going to change the priorities of this government or this government is going to be spending more money on health.

Mr. Kerrio: It's sure moving in the right direction.

Mr. Grande: What in essence would happen if that were to be the case? What would prevent the Treasurer of this province next year, in the Ministry of Health budget or the Community and Social Services budget—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Grande: I will wind up.

Mr. Bradley: You should have wound up earlier.

Mr. Grande: What would prevent the Treasurer from saying, "Since you've got $10 million from the Wintario, then the next year you will receive $10 million less"?

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Grande: The dangerous precedent is that non-tax moneys are going to be used for essential services in this province.

Mr. McCaffrey: I must be candid right at the beginning and say that perhaps more than any other member of the Legislature I was sorry that the minister was not here today to speak to the resolution of the member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Wildman: Because you didn't want to.

Mr. McCaffrey: I say that because I know that I've heard him in the past speak briefly in committee to the member's comments and I know that he can handle this topic exquisitely well. I felt a little uncomfortable, as I say, because as you know, Mr. Speaker, I'm relatively new to the ministry and I did some rush reading this morning with the assistance of several good people up there to help me a bit.

Mr. Wildman: They're up there now.

Mr. McCaffrey: Frankly, my confusion, if I felt any up until an hour ago it, seems as nothing compared to the legitimate confusion that the member for Niagara Falls reflects.

Mr. M. Davidson: Got to make sure you did a good job.

Mr. McCaffrey: I don't mean to be critical.

Mr. Wildman: They're breathing down your neck.

Mr. McCaffrey: The member for Oakwood, too. It seemed to me that if these are the two most vocal critics of this ministry and this particular program on the other side of the Legislature we have absolutely nothing to be terribly concerned about.

I was particularly struck with the member for Niagara Falls' comment, especially at the beginning where he went out of his way to talk about his continuing commitment—his expression, his “continuing commitment”—to the concept that he was, and he repeated it, dedicated and committed as in fact was his party to this concept of providing moneys for cultural and recreational purposes in the province. No cuts were suggested by him. Heaven forbid. His resolution didn't in any way, shape or form imply that there would be cuts to these very useful dollars—only priorities. It seems to me the most delicate way I've ever heard anyone describe a cut.

In fact, his resolution is very clear. He would cut back substantially on the amount of money that is now being used through Wintario to fund quite exceptional programs throughout the province. But if the member is hiding behind the word “priorities” it leads to a second point, that people in their homes and businesses too, particularly in difficult economic times, have to set priorities and they have to make cuts. The implication there it seemed to me, was that their cuts might be of a recreational or cultural nature and I felt, as the member for Oakwood did, that the member for Niagara Falls was suggesting that many of the programs sponsored by Wintario were merely frivolous.

The second thing that impacted me about his initial opening comments was his pre-occupation with the “huge amounts of money” he said that were coming in—huge amounts of money, much more money than had ever been expected. I think that may well be a legitimate hangover, if I may use that expression, from when the hoped-for target of $25 million for Wintario in its first year three years ago was exceeded. It seems to me that we are in the process now of having reached, or are close to reaching a plateau. I stand to be corrected, but I think we're looking at an amount of money in the order of something like $60 million a year that seems to be fairly predictable. That may not be the ceiling, but we are approaching one it would seem. I don't think there are the huge amounts of money floating around in this program that the member's opening comments implied.

If I may just make reference to one of the very fundamental principles which underlies the Wintario program: Wintario funds are intended to enhance our capacity to promote and encourage cultural and recreational objectives and are not intended to replace or relieve the responsibility of ongoing government programs in this field. I wanted to mention that because in the estimates in April the minister and the member for Niagara Falls discussed this in general terms.

I thought one of the sentences that the minister used was quite relevant for this afternoon. He's talking about the balance between the ongoing committed programs, programs that are underwritten by the tax dollars in Culture and Recreation and the Wintario money.

[5:30]

“What I'm saying here,” he says, “is that we have arrived at a nice balance between insuring that the ongoing programs of this ministry are funded in a very open and deliberate way from tax sources and that we have some additional money from the lottery which we can use to do some special things which otherwise might not be done.” It seems to me that is the essence of this program: that all of us here, not just the government, are in a position to do some special things which otherwise might not be done. I say all members of the Legislature because, as the resolution raises, there has been some concern about the question of control.

The Legislature, it seems to me, has this very real control right now. All Wintario funds are now, and have always been, deposited in the consolidated revenue fund. This Legislature votes an amount each year to the Ministry of Culture and Recreation for Wintario grants. Both the member for Oakwood and the member for Niagara Falls are on the standing committee on social development. I read the transcripts this morning. They both actively participated in those discussions. They are on that committee. It reviews the ministry's spending estimates each year, reviewing what the ministry has done with Wintario funds in the previous year and questioning the minister about the use of funds in the upcoming year.

Again, the member for Niagara Falls talks about it being time, given the economic realities of today, given the restraint realities of today, that we should reconsider the ways this money is being spent. It seems to me that is being done. It is being done in this standing committee. It is being done by the member for Niagara Falls himself, the member for Oakwood and others.

The Provincial moneys, the $5 ticket, are not in the consolidated revenue fund. I think perhaps that is where some confusion has arisen. There is no specific rigid formula for the disbursement of funds. I am not at all convinced—and I am confident the minister would share this—that for the time being a rigid formula may not be a bigger obstacle than the flexibility that the minister now has.

I was amused when reading earlier today the transcripts when the lottery corporation was set up here in 1975. The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) hit it right on the head I think. One of the major problems that he could foresee was, "The major problem, of course, will be the division of the spoils. I would imagine that the minister will require the wisdom of Solomon to try to decide among competing groups, all with very worthwhile projects, just how the money is going to be divided."

I think that was the valid concern then and it probably has continued to be over the three and a half years. But if the Minister of Culture and Recreation has not had the wisdom of Solomon, it seems to me that he must have been awfully close to it because there have not been any major concerns about the distribution of money, the way it has been handled, the openness with which it has been handled. Rather, the concern expressed by most members of the Legislature has been like most members of the community at large. They wish there was more money to fund some of the important special programs that are going on in this province.

We are at a point right now in the Wintario grants program which I think is an important one and where again there has been some confusion—the implication that there is an amount of money just lying around that has not been earmarked. There is now no excess of Wintario money. This money has been spent or committed. I know the minister tried to clarify this in question period recently. Subsequently he wrote a letter to the editor of one of the Toronto newspapers. I would just like to go over that for the record.

Mr. Kerrio: Read Auld's report too.

Mr. McCaffrey: "Because the Ontario Lottery Corporation and the Wintario lottery were in operation several months before the establishment of the Wintario grants program, the government initially experienced an accumulation of revenues in excess of commitments or payments. This accumulation continued for some time in excess of $20 million and reinforced a commonly-held view that the Wintario coffers were overflowing with greater revenues than the fields of culture and recreation could accommodate."

"After two and a half years of operation, however, the Wintario grants program has developed to the point where this lag between revenues on the one hand and commitments and expenditures on the other has been completely filled. From May of 1975 to the end of February 1978 the Ontario Lottery Corporation turned over to the province a total of $181 million as proceeds from the Wintario lottery. During the same period—"

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has about 30 seconds.

Mr. McCaffrey: Thank you.

"—the Wintario grants program committed a total of $181.5 million for the successful projects, of which $94 million has already been paid."

Mr. Wildman: When are we going to install pinball machines in restaurants?

Mr. McCaffrey: In conclusion, I think the controls which the resolution wants are already in place. The excess money which has been referred to is not there. The commitment, which I am delighted the member for Niagara Falls has, is shared by everybody on this side of the Legislature; we just want him and his party to continue to be as dedicated to this as we are.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you can recall that long before we ever heard the word "Wintario"—and isn't it strange, it is much easier to say now than it was when we first heard it, because of the advertising—and long before we ever heard of the Provincial lottery, when the minister who is in charge of it still considered it sinful, this Legislature, by taxing the citizens of the province and using whatever wisdom is available here in the government and the opposition, was, through the Ontario Council of the Arts, through the Ministry of Education and through a wide variety of grant programs, providing for the cultural and recreational pursuits and requirements of the province.

It might have been inadequate then, and there are many people who are prepared to say it is inadequate now, but certainly those people are wrong who say that any removal of the requirement that the Wintario fund must be dedicated and directed towards specific programs is going to be a hardship on these areas of cultural pursuit and importance in the community.

I have been interested in the number of very strong and heartfelt phone calls and communications I have had, I think almost all from people in the library boards and library offices in my constituency, who are somehow under the impression that the passage of this resolution in the House is going to cut off funds for libraries.

Nothing could be further from the truth, and the only thing that interests me in this is what enterprising public servant or politician undertook to send the jiggles down the grapevine to these library boards that would persuade them that they had to get in touch with my colleague from Niagara Falls and others, saying: "Good heavens, don't cut off the money for libraries."

As a matter of fact, I can recall the debates in this House when the government was not prepared to support the libraries and when there was a very strong stand by the opposition parties, which really changed the position of the then Minister of Education, to begin the independent support for libraries, historical societies, museums and things like this, which surely are an important part of our community and must be a continuing part.

I had to say that because there is certainly somebody over there assisting the government in some sort of a misrepresentation which, frankly, I for one resent.

I want to also say this: The Ontario Council for the Arts has had substantial sums of money, quite independent of Wintario funds, that have been available by the decision of the government recommending to the House and, in each instance that I recall, being fully supported by the House, in putting forward funds for the support of cultural pursuits of a wide variety in the province.

Frankly, I can recall when our athletic office—and it used to change departments fairly regularly there was a very fine gentleman whose name eludes me who used to run that—

Mr. Gaunt: Bob Secord?

Mr. Nixon: I guess it was before him, but they would be sending out athletic equipment. It wasn't necessary to put in a Wintario application, have it reviewed, with a letter from the ministry saying "Your application is on file and we are giving it consideration," and a letter from the minister himself saying that the bats and balls were going to be made available to this fine team and that they were even throwing in a few face masks because they felt the people were so worthy of support by the government and by the minister.

Actually there are aspects of that that make me cringe a little bit when I see the doses of saccharin that are sent out with the money. I resent that to some extent too.

We have all been aware of the fact that when the applications are turned down, even for good and sufficient reason, it is not the minister who sends the letter out saying "I regret to inform you that we are not going to send you any money," it is some other person, some signature that is "per" somebody else, with a few letters down at the bottom, and they have got to carry the load.

Mr. Wildman: Johnson.

Mr. Nixon: It is probably a small point, but it is like the member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson) who carries out his duties by distributing the cheques himself.

Mr. Cunningham: He has got to be good at something.

Mr. Samis: Does he wear a red suit too?

Mr. Nixon: As soon as a lottery fund becomes a pork-barrel fund, then you are going to have to suffer some criticism. I should say, in fairness, that I don't feel it has been pork-barrelled to the extent that it might have been. To some extent, I resent the approach taken by the government, in what used to be handled in a very straightforward way for athletic equipment and support—if you'll pardon the mixed metaphor there—in providing the assistance that we would all certainly support.

Mr. Conway: Evelyn didn't smile.

Mr. Nixon: Point number one—and our time is limited—is that this House has always been very supportive of a government putting forward public funds from our budget to support these community programs. Don't get the idea that it was only with Wintario funds that this has been carried on or could be carried on.

The second point is that I really do resent earmarking any funds that come from the community by way of taxation or any other government program. It's almost as if we remove a cloud of sin—that ridiculous concept associated with this—by using the money only for good works. It's a wonder the honourable minister didn't say we're only going to use it for additions to Anglican churches or something like that. That is the sort of thinking that has gone along with this. In the justification of the Wintario lottery, if it makes people feel better to say we're going to foster the arts and the football teams; we're going to send the senior citizens' hockey club to Amsterdam, fine. That's the sort of thing some of the money has gone for. But essentially it must be regarded as a revenue source.

When we were debating this back in 1971—I was looking up the speeches too—we were beating our breasts and saying that with $8 billion coming into the consolidated revenue fund, it should be left to the Treasurer to recommend to his colleagues, and the government to recommend to the House, how the money is to be spent. Really, I believe very firmly that that's the way it should be done. We've got a lot of fine new arenas. Maybe we've saved the lives of a lot of young people by declaring some of those arenas unsafe two or three years ago, and spending the $60 million to replace them. A number of them are in my constituency. To be fair, I even attended the openings along with representatives—

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nixon: I did. And I congratulated the people for having those arenas.

Mr. Conway: How was the food?

Mr. Nixon: Even before Wintario was ever heard of, we were building and assisting with the building of arenas across this province. There's no doubt in my mind that that kind of support for these community programs would be forthcoming from this Legislature.

I believe that we should have the right to decide where the emphasis should be, with recommendations coming from the responsible minister of the crown. I do not believe in earmarking funds.

One of the classic cases, I suppose, was in the United States where there was a tremendous public opposition to the imposition of a gasoline tax, if you can imagine. The federal government imposed a gasoline tax at the huge rate of three cents a gallon, or some very small amount. They said, "We're not going to put this into general revenue, we're only going to use it to build roads." Well, the money firehosed into that fantastic fund. It became a multi-billion dollar fund that built their roads, but the government of the United States was not free to channel those funds or even parts of them when, from time to time, other matters of national importance came along, like the redevelopment of the blighted downtown cores of Buffalo and Detroit and certain other cities.

I believe that the government of the day must have the freedom to allocate public funds as it sees fit. The Legislature either approves or not, and the final test, of course, is when we go to the people. I have no qualms about the lottery program at all, in fact, I was among many of the members who called for the establishment of such a program. But I do support the principle of this resolution on the basis that the funds that come into the consolidated revenue fund should not be earmarked, other than by the decision of the Treasurer recommending to the government and to the House.

We in opposition—and hopefully in government in a few weeks or months—will want those powers on behalf of the people of Ontario; the ones who buy the tickets at the rate of over $1 million a week, and even those who do not. That is the justification of why we are here. I'm glad to see the strength of my oratory is bringing so many members in, hopefully, to support this resolution, which, I believe, is reasonable and which puts the power where it should be, with the members of this Legislature. Frankly, the members of the government should make the decisions needed to allocate these extremely important funds to the best benefit of the communities.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member for Beaches-Woodbine for two minutes.

Ms. Bryden: I realize, Mr. Speaker, I only have two minutes. I find this resolution rather confusing because the first clause states the money should go into the consolidated revenue fund. It already does that.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Kerrio made that point.

Ms. Bryden: The second two clauses suggest how the money should be spent and then the fourth clause says it should be determined by the Legislature. Surely, it's contradictory to say how it should be spent, and then to say it should be left to the Legislature.

Mr. Hall: Picky, picky, let's get down to facts.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I support clause 4 of the resolution and if there had been time, I would have moved an amendment that all the other clauses be struck out—

Mr. T. P. Reid: We'll change it.

Ms. Bryden: —and that clause 4 be retained. A position, Mr. Speaker, I have been advocating for a number of years is the Legislature should have the full say as to how Wintario money is distributed.

The present situation, where one minister is the tsar of Wintario and has the complete say, is completely undemocratic. All other money is voted by this Legislature. The public accounts committee reviews the spending of it, but this money from what is really a voluntary tax is completely exempt from that kind of control by the elected representatives.

Control of the purse is one of the most fundamental democratic rights, and this particular procedure violates that control.

The Legislature should have the right to decide the guidelines under which the minister dispenses money. It should be able to decide whether more should go to sports and less to culture, or vice versa.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Ms. Bryden: It should be able to make the full decision. I strongly support that part of the motion. As I say, if this was in committee, I would move to delete the rest of the motion.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I think I have some four minutes to summarize. I would like to take this opportunity to thank my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk for the kind of recall he has when we debate particular issues in the Legislature. I'm sure those assembled would benefit from those remarks.

I would like to suggest that while there has been a great deal of criticism directed at the resolution I am proposing here, the minister himself during debates has agreed I have been very consistent in my approach to the budgetary expenses and to the way Wintario moneys have been spent by this ministry.

Mr. Eaton: Consistent, but wrong.

Mr. Kerrio: In fact, I'm absolutely certain that if any member of the socialist party could find in Hansard that I did not agree with the support of cultural activities, I'm certain they would have been here pointing it out to the assembly.

I would have to think the government is in the same position. While they'd like to suggest that my intentions are something other than I have indicated today, there is nowhere that they have been able to bring to this assembly any proof that I have related any other circumstance than I have here before you in all the debates I have participated in the three years I've been here in the Legislature.

I would just like to sum up by suggesting the main point. It is not my intention, in any way, to take from the funding of those areas that are very much concerned and have related their concerns to us. I would like to reiterate that is not our intention. The intention is to deal with the surplus generated, that has not been put in high priority areas. It would be the reason for moving this resolution, so the proportion that would be determined by a formula is quite easy to understand. In that way there will be a flexible mechanism to determine how money should be spent in response to changing demands and conditions rather than under the present system.

I would suggest that that is very, very clear and those people who would want to have moneys used in a responsible way would consider supporting the resolution as I have placed it before the assembly. I hope that might be the intention of all members here assembled.

SUNSET PROVISION FOR GOVERNMENT BODIES

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Walker has moved private member's resolution 12. Shall Mr. Walker's resolution carry?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "ayes" have it.

I declare the motion carried.

Resolution concurred in.

DISPOSITION OF LOTTERY REVENUE

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on resolution 20.

Hon. W. Newman: Don't you ever ask for another grant.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Can we have some order please?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, the House leader will be back at 10:30 p.m. or—(Applause)—

How do you think I feel? I agree entirely. Thankfully he will be back at about 10:15 this evening and will then review the House business for next week, including the procedure for next Thursday afternoon.

The House recessed at 5:52 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 3254)

TENANT PROTECTION

Petition to the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario: In keeping with section 83 of the standing orders of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, I am petitioning the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly:

Since it will not be possible for legislation to be drafted, introduced, given adequate discussion, and passed between the June 15, 1978, reporting date of the standing general government committee and the dead-line of the end of September, 1978, which must be met for legislation to take effect on January 1, 1979, that the present rent review legislation be extended for at least six months as an interim measure.

The petition is on behalf of, and signed by Dr. Jan Dukszta, MPP Parkdale.

Hon. L. Grossman (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): In view of the fact that the standing general government committee of this House is scheduled to report by June 15, 1978, a response to the above petition is deferred until such time that the recommendations of the committee have been reviewed.

The concerns and considerations have already been noted by the minister in his oral answer to the Assembly on Thursday, May 25, 1978. The ultimate action of the government will, of course, depend in large measure upon the report of the standing committee.

The government does not wish to preempt that committee's report at this time.

HUDAC PROGRAM

Petition presented to the House to redress certain grievances, to revise the HUDAC Home Warranty Program: Petition presented by Ross McClellan, MPP (Bellwoods):

Whereas all our efforts to obtain justice have been rebuffed by the Ontario government officials, including Premier William Davis, we the undersigned, petition as follows:

(1) That a committee of this Assembly consider whether we have been justly treated and redress our grievance, or alternatively, refer the matter to the Ombudsman for investigation and recommendations.

(2) That the HUDAC Home Warranty Program be revised so that companies convicted of false or misleading advertising are automatically deregistered from the HUDAC scheme.

(3) That section 8(1) of Bill 94/76 be enforced to exclude companies with a public record of substandard construction practices.

(4) That the number of provincial appointees to the board of directors of the HUDAC Home Warranty Program be increased to a majority of the members.

(5) That the Ombudsman Act be amended to bring HUDAC Home Warranty Program within the jurisdiction of the Ombudsman.

Hon. L. Grossman (Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations): In response to the above petition tabled on May 30, 1978, by the member for Bellwoods riding, this ministry advises as follows:

It is our view that this is not a matter which should be referred to a committee of the Legislative Assembly for the following reasons.

It involves a dispute between private individuals which arose prior to the enactment of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act. The place for redress is in the courts. Only a court would be in a position to effect to the petitioners' problems. A committee could only look at a situation and recommend legislative changes. As we already have relevant legislation in place which was enacted subsequent to the events complained of and which would cure such problems if they arose at this time there would appear to be no reason to refer this matter to committee.

In view of our latest efforts in deregulation, we do not believe that the Ombudsman's jurisdiction should be extended into areas which we have privatized. It is to be noted that the extent of the Ombudsman's jurisdiction in relation to matters affecting government appointed tribunals is presently before the courts.

From and after January 1, 1977, all new homes sold in the province of Ontario have been covered by the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan. This plan provides coverage of $20,000: 1. Against loss of deposit or down payment; 2. Against all defects in work or materials for one year. The builder is primarily responsible and the plan is guarantor; 3. Against all major structural defects for a further four years.

The plan is administered by the HUDAC New Home Warranty Program, the non-profit corporation that has been designated pursuant to the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan Act, 1976.

To ensure effective operation of the plan all builders are required to register with the warranty corporation. The standard of entry is that the builder be financially responsible, that he carries on business with honesty, integrity and in accordance with law and that he has technical competence to perform the warranties.

In its first year of operation the corporation was flooded with applications and as of April 30, 1978 there were 4,469 registered builders.

Although financial responsibility was the predominant ground for refusal of registration, the corporation has increasingly been able to turn its emphasis towards eliminating poor builders. To April 30, 1978, 134 builders have had their registrations refused or revoked by the registrar and an additional 36 are presently in the process with appeal time still available to them.

The first and foremost purpose of the Warranty Plan is to guarantee to purchasers of new homes that any defects will be corrected by the corporation if the builder fails to carry out its obligation. As a result the registrar must look to current performance in assessing whether or not any registration be refused. While it is true that a conviction for misleading advertising is a matter which can be taken into consideration under the present act, the registrar must consider whether the conviction is timely. The registrar must also consider whether the offence is of sufficient severity as to justify the revocation of the licence of a going business. In short, there must be an element of discretion as an automatic revocation based on a conviction for misleading advertising could lead to both arbitrary and unfair results. What really counts is how the builder is treating its purchasers.

No amendment is required to the legislation to allow the registrar to take action where customer service is poor or the quality of work is substandard. This is already covered in the act and the corporation has been and is becoming even more active in this regard.

In an effort to reduce government expansion and to reduce red tape, this ministry has been very much interested in the concept of self regulation. Several moves have been made in this direction and the development of the Ontario New Home Warranties Plan with its independent administration has been our most important breakthrough.

As a self-directing body composed of both builders and representatives of other groups including my ministry, municipal governments and the Ontario branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada, the corporation has shown an even-handed administration and serious attention to consumer grievances. Based on its performance to date we can see no reason for changing the balance of its board of directors.

The grievances referred to in the petition all occurred some time ago and cannot be addressed by the corporation. The corporation, prior to granting registration met with representatives of Pastoria Holdings Limited, made field inspections, conferred with municipalities and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to ensure that they were satisfied that standards were being met and concluded that based on the operation at and for a reasonable time prior to application for its registration there was no ground for refusing registration to Pastoria Holdings Limited. Since that time monthly random inspections have been made of all homes built by Pastoria and its related companies and all have produced satisfactory reports. I am advised that complaints to the corporation have been few in relation to the number of units built and that they are for the most part on a current basis.

FLECK MANUFACTURING COMPANY

82. Mr. R. Mackenzie (Hamilton East): With regards to the Ontario Provincial Police involvement at the Fleck Manufacturing strike, would the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) please provide the following information: 1. What is the normal complement of the Exeter detachment, male and female? 2. How many additional officers have been on the strike scene each day since the strike started and what is the breakdown by rank? 3. What is the average daily cost of these officers? 4. What is the daily cost of an individual officer brought in to such a situation and what is the breakdown between salary, overtime and accommodation and meal allowances? 5. What are the daily transportation costs? 6. How many of the officers brought in on each day were billeted overnight? [Tabled May 25, 1978.]

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Solicitor General): Part 1: One sergeant, two corporals, 11 male constables. There are no female officers at the Exeter detachment.

- Part 2: Refer to subappendix "A".
- Part 3: $147 per day when not billeted;
$161 per day when billeted.
- Part 4: Regular salary $77; overtime $57;
- meals $13; accommodation $14 (when required); total $161.
- Part 5: $818.30 (average).
- Part 6: Refer to subappendix "A".

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CONFEDERATION

83. Mr. S. Conway (Renfrew North): What members of the Advisory Committee on Confederation accompanied the Minister of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. McKeough) on his recent trip to Europe? Where did they go, how long did they stay in each location and whom did they meet in connection with the work of the advisory committee? What meetings were held and what topics were discussed at those meetings in connection with the committee's mandate? What was the total cost of sending the members of the advisory committee on this trip? [Tabled May 25, 1978.]

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): 1. The chairman, Mr. H. I. Macdonald, as well as Dr. Richard Simeon and Judge Rosalie Abella, visited the Federal Republic of Germany during the week of May 15. The secretary of the committee, Don Stevenson of the Ministry of Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs accompanied them.

2. Their meetings included: May 16 in Mainz, capital of the Rhineland-Palatinate, meetings with the Premier Vogel, Dr. W. Schreckenberger, the secretary to the cabinet and members of his staff, and Professor Klaus Konig, Professor of Political Science at the University of Speyer; May 17 in Bonn, meetings with (a) Dr. Albert Pfitzer, Director of the Bundesrat; (b) a working luncheon with the ambassador, members of the Canadian Embassy staff and representatives of various federal and provincial government departments in Bonn; (c) Dr. Hans de With, Parliamentary Secretary to the Federal Minister of Justice, and members of the Ministry of Justice staff; May 18 in Dusseldorf, capital of North Rhine Westphalia, meetings with the Minister for Federal Affairs, Dr. C. Zopel, Dr. J. Hirsch, Minister of the Interior, and a group of elected members of the three political parties in the Land Parliament; May 19 in Bonn, meetings with the staff of the Office of the Land Government of Bavaria in Bonn.

3. The subjects dealt with in the meetings included: (a) The operations of the West German federal system as seen by political and civil service members of both the federal and provincial governments; (b) in particular, the operations of the German Second Chamber, the Bundesrat, which is composed of representatives of each of the Land or provincial governments; (c) the activities of the provincial houses in Bonn and the methods of conducting federal-provincial activity; (d) the operations of the constitutional court.

4. The cost of the trip for the four people was approximately $5,300.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Mr. Breithaupt: The only real principle with respect to this bill is the increase which is proposed in the drinking age within Ontario. I must say at the outset it is my personal view that all responsibility should be at the age of 18. That, I believe, is the age of majority for our young people, and I believe the results of that majority should be secured for all of the young people of the province.

If actions are taken by 18-year-olds for contract or for marriage, then of course they are personally responsible; military service, as we know, can occur, and certainly the right to vote as an adult, and indeed to represent their fellow citizens, flows from the fact of their majority.

Indeed, I would prefer that even the driving age be set at 18 unless there was a proper course of instruction taken by the 16- or 17-year-old in our society. In my opinion, as a result, the change which is proposed by this legislation is only a cosmetic solution. Those who want to think that this move will benefit our society will of course be allowed to do so; and they will do so, however, without ever knowing if proper enforcement of the present law at 18 would have worked.

A majority of members of this House, including a majority of the members of my caucus, favoured the private bill which was introduced by the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini). As a result, I expect—

Mr. B. Newman: The Mancini bill?

Mr. Breithaupt: —that this bill, particularly this section, will be approved probably by a voice vote—

Mr. B. Newman: It's a good thing he gave you fellows the idea.

Mr. Eakins: A fine bill by a fine member.

Mr. Breithaupt: If a recorded vote is taken, I announce now that I will abide by the decision of my caucus. As the critic responsible for this legislation, I intend to stand in my place and follow the views of my colleagues and vote for the bill. I will not be absent.

There was one area of added concern with respect to the effective date of increasing the age to 19. The bill had suggested August 31 and the minister by his announcement today has finally become aware of what a number of us were concerned about for some time; that is, that the education classes' structure included those students born before December 31 of a year in the class beginning in September of that school year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why didn't you tell me earlier?

Mr. Breithaupt: In order to avoid the division within the peer group of that class I was going to ask the minister to consider the necessary amendment. His statement in the House this afternoon is welcomed and we look forward to the placing of that amendment when the bill goes to the committee stage.

I am interested in the change which is proposed with respect to possession except at a residence of licensed premises unless the liquor is in a closed container and not subject to public view. This, I understand, will stop a person from walking along the street or being in a public place with a glass of wine in hand or a part bottle of beer. While it was earlier illegal to drink such a beverage in public it was not illegal to carry it about.

I suppose there will be a number of arrests in the parks of Toronto as a result of this change. These may well result from a confrontation with a group of those who may be down on their luck and be busy sharing a bottle of Niagara's finest in full view of a passing constable.

But what about the events on Centre Island this summer? There will be many new Canadians and many not so new who would like to take a bottle or two of wine along with their lunch. Will they now be arrested?

More important, will this new legislation strike at the heart of Ontario's summer culture—the elegant and chic picnics at Stratford on opening night? Are the constabulary of that city going to patrol the banks of the Avon like the chorus from the Pirates of Penzance? Will they be softly humming “a policeman’s lot is not a happy one” as they admonish those who come to see and those who come to be seen?

The lobster du jour and the shrimp quiche will have to be choked down with Kool Aid, I suppose. Perhaps even Veal Oscar, who knows? This will, apparently, resolve the moral peril which may result from such a flouting of convention under the new laws which are proposed.

Of course, we may well now have a law for the brown paper bag set and another for the checked tablecloth gang. However, I expect that the enforcement of this law will likely be as equal as the statement that both the rich and the poor are forbidden to sleep in the parks. Of course, for some, the problem doesn’t arise.

The Who card remains with us, at least temporarily. I would expect that when a person’s driver’s licence has a photo on it, then these provisions will likely be done away with. Then, the Who card will join the mythology of current Ontario history, along with Stan Randall’s hippopotamus and Bill Shatner’s view that, “By golly, the price is right.”

The other sections of the bill are only housekeeping. There are those who would say that the changes in section 7 are important because licence suspension is now provided where a person under 19 is served. Of course, I don’t believe that any of the other earlier provisions have ever really been enforced when the drinking age was 18, so I don’t have any great expectation of reform here, either by fear or by example.

The bill then turns from the picnic situation to the stadium crowd. The summer’s evening is replaced by the crisp autumn colour and the long lines of police now relieved from their earlier duties are busy frisking the thousands lined up for an Argo game. This appears to be a way out from the plague of unemployment because we’re going to be able to hire half the population to search the other half.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Which half do you want to be in?

Mr. Breithaupt: I don’t really look forward to the turmoil which is about to be created because I think this may be somewhat a bit of overreaction. However, it may stop the obvious abuse of the person carrying in a case or two. I don’t think it will have very much other concern.

It has always been thought that a publican has had a right to discipline the unruly in order to protect his better-behaved guests and more-valued clientele. Indeed, a symbol of Ontario’s probity has always been the fly-specked sign in a pub which said the management reserved the right to refuse service to anyone. That sign, of course, was usually beside one, hand-lettered, which read: “You must be 21 and prove it.” Latterly, of course, that “21” has been struck out and “18” has been scrawled on, usually with chalk from the dartboard. Now, I guess, “19” is going to replace that.

It now appears that some legislative sanction needs to be given to allow the removal of an undesirable from one of our many problem situations; and certainly, in order to keep a balance in our fragile society, the undesirable must stay out for the whole day. In this chamber, of course, Mr. Speaker can call upon the Sergeant at Arms to enforce our rule 17. However, the pubs of downtown Toronto will have to rely on their bouncers’ remembering to cite section 47 (4)(b) as they chuck some undesirable out the front door. I only hope that there will at least be the poetic justice in our province that perhaps the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) will be the first to enforce this new rule in his location, since he’s an expert on our rules.

The bill is otherwise housekeeping, besides the matter of the liquor age. I know it’s a matter of some concern to a large number of the members of the House, and I respect them for their opinion, even though I may not personally agree with it. In any event, the opposition caucus, my colleagues in the Liberal Party, will support the bill in principle.

Mr. Samis: That’ll never wash in Pembroke.

Mr. Conway: That was a temperate address.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, in my mind there is absolutely no doubt whatsoever as to what the results of the vote will be when we do complete the debate on this Bill 96. This bill, upon conclusion of debate, will be approved in principle by the Legislature.

I also believe that no member of this Legislature will change his or her opinion or vote as a result of the debate this evening. I say that because on November 10, 1977, after a long debate both inside and outside of the House, the members of the Legislature had a chance to make their feelings known on this issue, free of caucus discipline, and a substantial majority of the members of this House did indeed support the Mancini bill, the private member's bill that would have done the same thing as the basic principle of this bill does.

Since November 10, 1977, in my estimation there has been no significant change in the factors that led the members to take the positions they did in 1977; so I can't see tonight's debate ending in a different result from the result of November 1977.

Therefore, while I speak in opposition to the passage of Bill 96, it is not my intention to do so in an attempt to persuade my fellow members of the Legislature to change their opinion and to vote against this government legislation.

By and large, I accept the results of November 1977 as a most accurate assessment of the opinion of the members of the Legislature and perhaps a more accurate assessment than we would find if party strictures and caucus rules were to prevail, as they might in any vote on a piece of government legislation.

I don't intend this evening, as we often try to do, to speak on behalf of the members of my constituency. Frankly, I believe my constituents, like the constituents of most of us in this House, would not only favour raising the drinking age from 18 to 19, but would also overwhelmingly support raising the drinking age to 21. This evening I simply want to express my own feelings and opinions on this matter and to offer what I think are some reasonable warnings about real problems to my fellow members of the Legislature.

If I may be permitted, I would simply like to speak to the young people of the province so that they would know, as a matter of record, that it is not the unanimous intention of the Legislature to raise the drinking age to 19. When I speak to the young of the province, it is not my intention to criticize members of the Legislature who hold a different view from my own on this matter because I realize and accept that on this issue they hold their opinions with the same deeply and morally felt view as I do.

If I may be allowed, my expression would simply be one of faith, an article of faith in our young people in this province of Ontario. I would trust that members of the Legislature would accept my remarks that I make in that sense.

There have been many points made in the debate—perhaps not this evening—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra) agree with this speech?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I think the leader and only member of the Liberal-Labour Party of Ontario has been around the Legislature long enough that he learned how to read votes. He could quite well go back to November 10, 1977, and find out how the member for High Park-Swansea voted on that occasion.

Mr. Conway: He'll have Sheila Coppins-Miller in his caucus soon.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Yes, well she will have to run in a riding other than Hamilton Centre if she intends to get elected.

Mr. T. P. Reid: For someone who won by only 15 or 14 votes, you are awfully cocky.

Mr. Conway: Let the record show that.

An hon. member: If there had been one more recount, he'd be in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He'll probably double it next time.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Why don't you hold your smart aleck remarks for a more appropriate occasion?

There have been many points made on the debate on this issue both in the Legislature and outside of the Legislature. They are strong points, they are reasonable points and they are sensible points for raising the legal drinking age. This evening I would like to enumerate a few of them and offer what I would consider to be counter-arguments to them. I would raise them in no particular order of importance.

A lot of people in this debate have cited the fact that our sister province of Saskatchewan in 1976, when in a similar position to the one we face today in Ontario, decided to raise their legal age from 18 to 19. That's a game that is not won on one side alone because a year later in 1977, Prince Edward Island, when faced with the same choice in their province choose to keep the drinking age at 18.

The point has been made and made well that 97.8 per cent of the students in high schools in Ontario are 18 or under. Therefore, when we increase the drinking age to 19, we will remove alcohol from the high schools. That's a point and that's a statistic that is not arguable—except to say that is only true in September of the school year. By June the figure is in the low 90s, not 97.8 per cent, and perhaps not so overwhelming.

It has been suggested that if we really want to remove it from the high schools what we should do is raise the drinking age to 21, or at least to the age of 20 as was suggested by a member of the Conservative caucus, the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) when he brought in a private member's bill last year. I suspect that that would be the only way we would meet the desire to remove it completely from high schools in the public and technical sense of the phrase.

Perhaps a better way to go about removing alcohol from high schools, if that was the intent, would be to remove grade 13, a grade that is not found by everyone in the province, to be the most useful part of our education system and not a grade that we find in most other provinces in the country.

There is a lot of argument that underage drinking is a result of peer pressure. Somehow that is all connected to some kids in the high schools being able to drink and bringing it into the high schools. Therefore, these underage kids are going into the bars and boozing it up, and that is all very bad. That is probably all very true, but the way to end that problem is not by raising the legal drinking age to 19, but rather by enforcing the laws we now have.

The law is very clear. The law is very specific and if it is enforced rigorously and vigorously, then we won't have that problem to face. It is perhaps only because of our failure to enforce the law that we have come to the point we are at tonight.

There has been a complaint made that overconsumption leads to violence and that it is particularly prominent among young kids who overconsume. Again, it is probably true, or it is perhaps true, but raising the drinking age won't change those facts. What we should have done, and what we could still do, is better teach or better educate our young as to how to handle alcohol.

The point has been made that high school students are coming into class drunk and that is disrupting the education system. On the other hand, perhaps it says something about the education system in Ontario that a significant minority of our young people feel they have to go out and booze it up to make it through the day's classes.

Mr. Conway: Well, their job prospects are so tremendous.

Mr. M. N. Davidson: Really, when you come down to it, that sort of problem in the education system is something for the teachers to address and something for the education system to address, and not something for the Legislature to address by raising the drinking age. That is not a real solution to what may be real problems.

I guess the most important argument, and certainly the argument to which I would give the most credence, put forward by those who would see the drinking age raised, is in relation of the number of alcohol-related accidents. It is pointed out in studies such as this Legislature's select committee on highway safety and the Jones report that alcohol-related traffic accidents are the biggest single killer of people under the age of 25. That point of view is held and based on statistics.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I believe those statistics are open to various interpretations. One interpretation I could see people having of those statistics is our young people don't drive very well. It would seem to me those statistics could as well represent the critique of our driver education system as they could relate to the problem of young people drinking alcohol.

I don't mean to raise this report as a counter argument specifically to the highway safety committee report, whose chairman is sitting beside me, or to the Jones report, but there is another report which holds a different view on the same issue. The Traffic Injury Research Foundation's report found and held that lowering the drinking age had no discernible impact in traffic death among young drivers in the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and New Brunswick.

There are other arguments put forward by proponents of raising the drinking age, which are also real arguments and which are also sensitive and sensible arguments. I am sure I haven't canvassed them all or canvassed them all thoroughly this evening, but the point I wanted to make is that while they are real arguments, and while they are serious arguments, the one thing I can definitely say about them is they are all debatable. It's a question, in many cases, of degree. They're not arguments to which there is only one side that members of the Legislature could subscribe to. I think that's worth remembering.

Statistics are often used in this issue. In some cases, it becomes a battle of statistics. I don't mean to engage in such a battle, but there is one statistic that always got through to me on this issue. It comes from the often-quoted and often-referred-to Addiction Research Foundation study of 1976. That study very clearly pointed out that 86 per cent of high school students in Ontario drank liquor in spite of the fact that less than 25 per cent were eligible to do so.

What that says to me is something very clear and something I believe is very important in this debate. That is this: if the Legislature passes this bill, I believe the effect will be to criminalize an activity that in all likelihood will continue to go on. I really don't believe that's a particularly useful thing for the Legislature to do.

It's been said by some that one of the reasons the Legislature lowered the legal drinking age to 18 in 1971, when they lowered the age of majority, was to help us effectively combat the use of drugs by our young people. I don't know how much influence that had on the assembly at the time, because I was not there in 1971, but I believe, to some extent, that was an important part of the decision to lower the drinking age.

As legislators, we should consider what impact raising the drinking age, even one year, might have on that aspect of the problem. While overconsumption of alcohol leads to very undesirable effects, I would remind the members of this Legislature that the use of drugs can be much more dangerous and debilitating to our young than the use of alcohol.

I say that as one who grew up in the days of the ever-expanding drug culture in North America. While there are times I would like to see a return to what were my "good old days," I would not like to see that particular aspect of the good old days rise to prominence again with our young people. I point that out only as a warning, perhaps only as a fear of one member of the Legislature.

The real issues before us are, and must be, that of alcohol abuse and alcohol-related traffic accidents. There's nothing particularly magical or important about age 19. At the time that the Legislature lowered the age of majority and the drinking age in 1971, there was not, in Ontario at any rate, such a high degree of lifestyle advertising, nor sophisticated lifestyle advertising geared to our young people.

When we lowered the drinking age, the liquor companies of this province, of this country, were very quick to see and to understand not only the market's size but the market's nature. I have argued with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations about this. We hold differing views perhaps, perhaps not, but I very much believe if we had acted earlier and we had acted more effectively to ban lifestyle advertising and, I believe, to ban advertising of liquor, we would not have been faced with the rapid increase, with the rapid overconsumption of alcohol by our young people.

It was possible for us, in 1971, 1972 or 1973 to have taken measures in this Legislature that would have effectively, I believe, combated the real problem of alcohol abuse among young people and, indeed perhaps, among our population in general. One of the reasons we're here tonight debating a rise in the drinking age is because we, as legislators, have failed in our responsibility to come properly to grips with the problem of alcohol abuse in our society.

Alcohol abuse is a very damaging problem, but we cannot, I believe, make the young a scapegoat for our own failures as legislators and, I suspect, that is what we would do if we passed this bill, as we no doubt will.

The other problem is that of alcohol-related traffic accidents. Again, while one may debate the degree involved, it is nonetheless a serious problem. When we look at the statistics that show the alarming number of our young people killed in these accidents, it really does say to me that perhaps our young drivers are poor drivers. It says to me that if, back in 1971, 1972 or 1973, we as legislators had acted to tighten up and improve the instruction given to our young when they learn how to drive a car, or if we had made tougher and improved testing procedures for young drivers, perhaps some of that slaughter, some of that carnage on the highways could have been limited.

I really don't see how it is that we can delude ourselves into believing that raising the drinking age one year will have that great an impact on such a serious problem. There are many other ways that problem can be approached. I don't think we can be too happy about our failure to come to grips in the most appropriate manner with that problem either.

The argument is made by some that—and, Mr. Speaker, you know I don't subscribe to it—that if 18-year-olds are old enough to go to war, they're old enough to drink. Therefore, there has to be some consistency in the age of majority; we can't divide it out like that. While I can't subscribe to the rather simple and badly put argument that way, I can subscribe to it when we put it the other way around.

If the young people of this province, the 18-year-olds, are so totally irresponsible that we cannot trust them to consume alcohol, should we really allow them to enter into legal contracts? That's a real question. Should we allow them to vote? Should we allow them into the Legislature? I think, put that way, the argument does have some modest validity, but more important than that, and to conclude, it's a question of faith.

I believe we have to give our young people that chance. We haven't made a serious effort to combat the real problems. I think it would be terribly wrong for us to treat those young people as scapegoats for our own failures. Mr. Speaker, the future belongs to the young.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's very good. That should be engraved in stone.

Mr. G. Taylor: That's very profound.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If we have no faith in our young people to be responsible, what kind of nightmare future does that conjure up for us in Ontario? I believe our young people are responsible and I believe there is no reason for this Legislature to separate the legal drinking age from the age of majority. I think this legislation is a bad excuse for the kind of solution we, as legislators, should be seeking for real problems. As such, and perhaps on behalf of the young people in the province, I oppose it.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a few comments on this legislation. I did not participate in any earlier debates when my colleague, the honourable member for Essex South presented his bill which was accepted by the honourable members of the Legislature. I have watched with interest and observed with interest the various debates that have been going on about this question of the drinking age for the last two or three years. I must say it is with some concern and with cynicism that I view the whole process that has taken place since 1971 when we reduced the drinking age, to now, when we are, in fact, increasing it again.

I think it has to be said for the record that the legislation reducing the drinking age was passed some time prior to the election in 1971 when some of us made our first entry into the hallowed halls of this building. I can recall watching the provincial scene from a distance at that time, and watching while various pieces of legislation were being cranked through this Legislature. I don't think there has ever been such a period since the election of Bill Davis as Premier of this province that they cranked out as much legislation as during that period of time until the election in the fall of 1971. Of course, that was part of some of the legislation enacted at that time. All bases were being covered and legislation was introduced, as in many other jurisdictions, to reduce the drinking age in this province.

I think, in the process, it is obvious now there was undue haste. I think it should be underlined that the decision made by the government and by the Premier at that time about the drinking age was typical of some of the decisions which had been made in the attempt by the government and the Premier to gain this sort of leadership image. As my colleagues will recall after the election of Bill Davis, in 1971 the pollsters, and those were the famous days when pollsters had a lot of weight with politicians,—

Mr. Foulds: They still do.

Mr. Roy: —decided at that time the Premier's image after being Minister of Education all those years was somewhat mushy. They decided they had to build up the image. Of course, there was the Spadina decision. We recall that. At that time it in fact gave the impression at least of him being someone prepared to give leadership, and make hard decisions. We know what has since happened to that decision. It has been watered down and the alternatives put forward in fact—

Mr. Gaunt: Emasculated.

Mr. Roy: —the great Krauss-Maffei and all this since 1971 have turned out, in fact, to be a political decision made at that time with a purpose in mind in 1971. Of course we can go on. I can recall the decision on the separate schools. It was another matter to give leadership image to the—

Mr. Speaker: If I might remind the honourable member, he is watering down the principle of this bill too.

Mr. Roy: I am just setting the preamble. It is just a preamble, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: The word is diluted.

Mr. Samis: It's habitual with this member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Roy: And again the separate school decision was part of this and of course a variety of other decisions. The decision to lower the drinking age was part—I am not trying to put the type of cynicism on it I've heard some members of the Legislature put on it—but nevertheless I think that was considered to be part of the process at that time. Unfortunately here we are back in 1978, of course, changing it back.

My concern, and I think it should be said, is that we did the young people of this province a disservice. I think it's important we underline that fact and in some way admit that. I wasn't part of the process at that time, but I am convinced my colleagues, who I think at that time supported the bill and certainly the Premier and the government who took the initiative of the bill, made the wrong decision. In the process I think it's important that we tell the young people of this province that a mistake was made. We should apologize to them because we did them a disservice.

Having watched the debate proceed during these years, I was firm in the position that we shouldn't be tampering with that. There was some form of cynicism in lowering it or increasing it in that sort of approach. I suppose I was part of those who felt that if young people of this province were considered adults, enter legal contracts, to vote, to go to war for this country and so on, then we should try to have a regular and a common age for all of these factors. The one factor that changed my mind on this subject of drinking age was the report of the committee on highway safety chaired by the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young).

I appeared before that committee when they were talking about drinking and driving. I was one who looked at the committee recommendations and the overwhelming statistics involving young people which were just atrocious. For instance, by 1975, teen-aged drinking drivers were involved in a staggering 37.2 per cent of alcohol-related collisions and their involvement was still rising. Research has shown that 18- and 19-year-olds are 70 times more likely to die in a collision than the average non-impaired Ontario driver. With 16- and 17-year-olds, the risk of collision is 165 times greater than for the average non-impaired Ontario driver.

These are atrocious statistics, statistics that we in a democracy, we as members of the Legislature, cannot help but be convinced show there is in fact a problem. Of course it's our role, as members of the Legislature in a democracy, to respond to a need, to respond to a problem in this province. We have done it before; we have taken the initiative before. There are those who say, "Well, what you are doing by passing this type of legislation is criminalizing or putting some legal sanction on what was considered to be a legal act." We do that every time we pass legislation.

Mr. Speaker, surely you will recall the debates on seatbelt legislation, and lowering speed limits. Again, this legislation put a sanction on an action that was legal at one time. Not wearing your safety belt is now considered to be a crime under the Highway Traffic Act. The speed limit is the same thing. At one time you were able to drive at certain speeds on certain highways. Now you can't.

There's nothing unusual about that. That's part of the process. We, as responsible citizens, as leaders elected in our respective communities, cannot help but take some role, take some initiative when statistics such as these are so overwhelming. It is our duty to act, just as we acted in various other areas.

People say there are too many laws, too many curbs on the freedom of individuals. But of course that's the problem with a democratic urban society. If young people were only driving out in the middle of a field with no chance to cause damage to themselves or to anybody else, it would not be a problem. We have all sorts of legislation in our cities which are in fact a curb on the individual liberty of certain individuals. The problem with that is when you give wholesale liberties to some, that is an encroachment on the liberties of others.

That's the role of a democracy—to respond to a particular need. And unhappy as I am about what took place in 1971 and what is now taking place in 1978, we must respond. In view of the statistics quoted in the report by the committee on highway safety, there are only two ways to respond. Either you deal with the driving, or you deal with the drinking. It seems to me that it is more reasonable to deal with the drinking than with the driving.

Why should we punish all young people who drive cars without drinking? Why should we not put the emphasis on the drinking drivers and put curbs on them? We in this Legislature, as with the role of the federal government on criminal law, have to impose the curb on a combination of both. I think it is more reasonable in these circumstances that we proceed in that fashion.

It may well be, that having proceeded in that fashion, we will find in a few years that the carnage on our highways is still too great so that we will have to act further. That is the process that has taken place in relation to impaired driving.

You will recall that many years ago when the government moved in that area that there was some opposition to it. It was felt that this was an encroachment on the rights of the individual.

You will recall that when legislation was passed to force drivers to blow into a breathalyser we felt it was offending one of the basic principles, that of incriminating oneself; that there was a legal principle that one should not be obliged to incriminate oneself. But we breached that principle to satisfy a higher community need. That's what we are trying to do in this case.

I agree that if we are going to do something, we do something about the drinking rather than punishing those who do not drink and drive and are responsible people in our community. I agree with the approach taken in this bill. But I don't agree with the process that took place in 1971 which we now have to change in 1978. We admit we made a mistake and that in the face of the statistics the leadership that must be shown requires hard decisions. That is what we are doing now.

Having watched the process, having studied the problem, having looked at the statistics and as the health critic for our party I was the one who suggested legislation dealing with seatbelts, reducing speed limits, and got a lot of abuse for it at that time. But today that is accepted. The Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) is always very proud to report the statistics, although he never mentions the fact that the leadership was taken by others. The fact is that the statistics are pretty well what we had suggested they would be—the number of deaths on our highways and the number of injuries have been reduced and there have been savings in OHIP costs in this province.

Having looked at the whole situation, I as one member of this Legislature—as much as I think the whole process has been totally unsatisfactory—feel that in the circumstances I have no choice in the face of the statistics but to support the legislation.

Mr. Foulds: First of all, I want to say very clearly that our caucus is not going to vote en bloc in this bill. The people in our caucus feel very strongly on both sides of this question and we are going to have a free vote on the bill.

An hon. member: It means you can't decide.

Mr. Foulds: I respect the views held by members on both sides of this question.

Mr. Samis: It is democracy.

Mr. Foulds: I think that it is important we understand that this is a political issue; but it is a political issue like no other political issue that we encounter. This is because many people view it as a moral issue. I myself do not. I happen to view it as a very broad social issue; but many people do view it in a moral sense. I think it enhances a legislature, it enhances a party when those deeply held convictions can be expressed clearly on an issue that has caused such controversy and is as fundamental as this.

I myself am not supporting the bill because I believe there are two provisions in the bill that I simply do not agree with, as a legislator or as a human being. The age of 19 provision is, frankly, tinkering. I think one of the problems is that we have not as a legislature defined what the problem is that we want to cope with. Is the problem alcoholism; is the problem traffic deaths on the highways; or is the problem booze in the schools? Well, in part of the bill, the problem is booze or not booze in the stadiums, but that's another issue I'll get to in a few minutes.

If the basic problem in our society is alcoholism, then I say to this Legislature that this bill does not speak to that problem in any real sense. There is no government program of education about alcohol and its use and abuse. There is no education program about the proper use and the acceptable social use of alcohol. The piddling fraction of the budget in the Ministry of Health for preventive care with regard to alcoholism is infinitesimal and disgraceful—it demonstrates that the government party is not serious about attacking that fundamental question.

If the problem is about traffic deaths, especially among our young people, I don't see how cutting off the band of one narrow year, when those traffic deaths extend roughly from 13 to 25, is going to have any fundamental effect on those statistics.

If the problem is drinking and driving, it might just be worthwhile for us to try a tough enforcement of our Highway Traffic Act. We do not have before us in this House the supposed companion legislation to this minister's bill dealing with that problem.

If the problem is booze in the schools, the schools now have the authority and the administrators in those buildings have the authority to exclude from the school people who are drunk, people who are unruly, even people who are disobedient. They have that right.

I've heard the complaint; "I can't teach the kids because they fall asleep in my class after they have had a liquid lunch." I say to the House, the schools and those teachers and those principals have got to have the guts to send those kids out of the schools and not allow them back.

Mr. Van Horne: They've got to, without this.

Mr. Foulds: They've got to without this, exactly. If they had the guts and the fortitude to do it, they could send those kids home without this provision. It seems to me they must develop the conviction that the schools are not a babysitting service, either for drunken or sober children or young adults in grade 13. If they're not doing their proper academic work, they should not be there.

I think there is nothing in this legislation that comes to grips with the fundamental question of what is it in our society that makes alcohol such a desirable escape. I have no magic solution to that problem, but I would favour not merely a lifestyle ban on liquor advertising, but a ban on liquor advertising, as I favour a ban on cigarette advertising. I both smoke and drink. I know both of those things are relatively harmful to me.

Mr. Elgie: What else do you do?

Mr. Foulds: I enjoy both of them. I did not learn about them through advertising. It is not because of the advertising I enjoy them.

Mr. Conway: How did you learn about them?

Mr. Foulds: As a matter of fact, if you really want to know—

An hon. member: Stick to the bill.

Mr. Foulds:—and I don't believe in making arguments in the Legislature autobiographical, but I had a beer when I was 18, illegally, in the backyard of my own home after I'd dug the entire two lots of the garden, because my dad had a beer—a couple a week, in fact. I learned that at home. I learned smoking when I was six or seven from the kids I grew up with in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Van Horne: Banana leaves!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Six or seven? That explains it.

Mr. Foulds: Not banana leaves, honey-suckle leaves. I actually started seriously smoking a pipe when I was 18 or 19.

Mr. Roy: You have been puffing ever since.

Mr. Hall: On with the bill; we want to be out of here by July.

Mr. Foulds: Should we ban smoking for those under 18 or 19? Smoking, surely, is just as harmful as is alcohol.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As long as you don't smoke and drive.

Mr. Hall: Drinking, not smoking.

Mr. Foulds: Is the member for Lincoln speaking on this bill? He'll have his chance to speak on the bill.

By the way, it's a shame—I've been diverted—it's a shame the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) who brought in the private member's bill last November and who felt so strongly about the issue at that time, is not here in the Legislature this evening when we are actually bringing in—

Mr. Roy: Who cares? He'll be here for the vote.

Mr. Foulds:—government legislation that will pass, that will have some effect and that achieves the aim he spoke about so strongly last November.

Mr. Roy: For the record, he is working on behalf of his constituents.

Mr. Foulds: I would have thought he would have been here for this historic occasion.

I want to make one or two comments. I asked the question: what is it in our society that makes alcohol such an attractive escape? I think there was a saying in the 18th or 19th century in Great Britain that the shortest route from Manchester was through alcohol. That was when Manchester was the epitome of the dingy, dirty, crowded industrial town. I think there are many things in our society we have to say alcohol is the shortest route from—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Queen's Park.

Mr. Foulds:—not necessarily a geographic location but sometimes, say on Thursday evenings during the course of debate, including this chamber.

I think that largely despair, lack of hope, a sense of no purpose—

An hon. member: I think this is all George Kerr's fault.

Mr. Conway: George looks better in the third row.

[9:00]

Mr. Foulds:—a sense of frustration, a sense of being caged in—all are reasons for alcoholism. Nothing this government or this Legislature is coming to grips with is moving to give young people a sense of purpose, a sense of direction.

I want to say something about the role of the Addiction Research Foundation in the course of the whole debate, because I have found their role somewhat objectionable. It seems to me a questionable role for a government agency when it turns from objective research to advocacy. This is what they did during the course of a provincial election, by sponsoring meetings that were deliberately designed to bring pressure on legislators to raise the drinking age. That is questionable no matter how sincerely held the feelings were of the people who were engaged in that research. It seems to me kind of strange, if I recall correctly from 14 or 15 years ago, that the ARF was advocating lowering the drinking age. They thought that because of the education that would involve, and the longer period of incubation, there would be less alcoholism as a result. I find the role of the ARF in all that somewhat questionable.

I find the age of majority argument a convincing one. If you are going to have an age of majority that includes the other things we all talk about, drinking is a perfectly reasonable thing to include in that age of majority. If you wanted to raise the age of majority generally, I might have more sympathy with the aims of section 2 of this bill. Frankly, I would not be in favour of raising, generally, the age of majority, but that at least would show some consistency.

I want to read into the record some parts of a letter I received from a medical doctor and a psychiatrist who is in my own area who has given thought to the matter. She says: "There is no doubt in my mind that many responsible youngsters develop better drinking habits in today's related attitude. The 16-year-old who has a glass of wine at a Sunday dinner with his parents, having tried the odd half liquor glass at Thanksgiving or New Year's before that, is an example; as is the responsible youngster who enjoys music and to the dismay of the lounge manager sips one bottle of beer all evening in order to listen to the band.

"These youngsters have learned to put liquor in its place and are learning when it adds to pleasure and learning to handle its effects on them individually. While some physicians believe changing the age limit back to 21 or so would decrease the abuse of liquor, others including myself do not share this view. It is my opinion it would only substantially increase the illicit drinking, and since our law enforcing agencies cannot or do not wish to enforce the present laws, further lawbreaking would only diminish the respect for the liquor laws that remain.

"That there is an increased use and drunkenness among young people from age 10 on is obvious. Hospital and school figures support it, as presumably do court charges, employer complaints and other available figures. I believe lowering of the drinking age some years ago has only—"

Interjection.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Mancini: Point of privilege.

Mr. Foulds: I am glad to welcome the member for Essex South.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; point of privilege.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Chairman, if the member for Port Arthur will let me, I just want to inform the House a very important committee is sitting downstairs and it is concerning itself with discounting in the chain stores. The committee is hearing the chairman of the Greenhouse Vegetable Producers' Marketing Board, who is from my riding. That is where I was and I am ashamed of the member for Port Arthur for making such a remark as that he made earlier.

Mr. Stong: You have been chastised.

Mr. Conway: However predictable it is none the less sad.

Mr. Roy: It is facetious; the member should apologize.

Mr. Foulds: I deeply regret the fact that the member for Essex South cannot be in two places at once.

Mr. McClellan: He has always been able to take two positions at once.

Mr. Foulds: I admit I didn't know he was in committee downstairs. I don't apologize for my remarks. I made no innuendoes and I cast no aspersions. I simply said, as I recall my remarks earlier, I found it curious, and I regretted that the member for Essex South could not be here during the course of this historic debate.

Mr. Conway: Very tacky; tacky, tacky.

Mr. Roy: The record should show that he is smiling and smirking and is making all sorts of gestures with his nose. His glasses are crooked.

Mr. Foulds: If my remarks stimulated him to come and attend, then I think that has been very useful. If he feels the debate in the committee is more important, I am sure we would be glad to excuse him.

Interjections.

Mr. Foulds: Now, if I may continue.

Mr. Lupusella: No sense of humour.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have to read all that stuff, Jimmy?

Mr. Foulds: I am just reading a few short quotations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the member for Port Arthur, on the bill please.

Mr. Foulds: I am sorry. I must admit I am sorry that I caused the sensitive skin of the member for Essex South to prickle so easily. I had no intention to gain or lose in any way, I simply made an observation. If the member for Essex South feels hurt by that, I am deeply sorry; and as I say if he wishes to return to the committee, we would be glad to excuse him. All of us would understand. The people of Ontario would understand. The people of the caucus would understand. The people in the press gallery would understand. Why doesn't he go?

Mr. Conway: Throw him out.

Mr. Hall: No wonder you got out of teaching.

Mr. Conway: Three hundred votes; almost the last time.

Mr. Foulds: The letter I was reading goes on: "I believe the lowering of the drinking age some years ago has only been a small factor in this happening. We have seen a great increase in sexual intimacy in the same age group; at a time when birth control has been more easily available than ever before teenage pregnancies have markedly increased, and there is no change of age limit in this activity.

"I believe the reason for change reflects the change of attitude. We have raised children with greater permissiveness in the hope that this in turn would help them be more self-directed, more responsible. So they do things because they want to, not because they are afraid not to.

"In a large group of people this has worked beautifully. No thinking person will deny that many of today's adolescents are hard working, considerate, knowledgeable, co-operative, responsible people who are far more mature than we, the middle-age establishment, were at that age.

"However," the doctor goes on, "this positive kind of reinforcement has never worked with everyone. In as highly an individualistic country as Canada, there were bound to be failures. Some parents took neither time nor effort to raise children responsibly; some parents were simply unable to give this guidance; and some youngsters cannot be taught in this way.

"We accept that there are mentally-retarded children with special educational needs. We must learn to accept similar concepts with regards to the emotionally disadvantaged child."

The doctor then goes on to mention some techniques that she feels could improve the present situation, and she says: "We must also turn our attention to deterrents. While better educational means for problem youngsters are being developed, the offenders, for their own and society's protection, must learn the hard way and be restrained from doing too much damage to themselves and others."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They're not going to learn anything here; they won't learn anything here.

Mr. Foulds: "We must keep up respect for the law, since allowing the law to become a laugh breeds cynicism and corruption."

Mr. Sargent: Take it to bed, Jimmy.

Mr. Foulds: "Is it so hard to find liquor lounges that allow underage drinking? Is it so hard to find imaginative deterrents for drinking offences? It occurs to me that one deterrent for drinking under 16 might be not to be automatically permitted a beginner's driver's licence. For the over-18 being found publicly drunk, driving restriction could be enforced more rigidly. Youngsters might be asked to attend group sessions.

"I think there is no doubt in anyone's mind that adolescence is a difficult enough time, emotionally speaking, without liquor, and that the adolescent seems particularly vulnerable as to the physical and psychological effects of alcohol.

"Present-day affluence is a further problem. At no time in our history have so many people had so much money. Drinking was limited by lack of money to the reasonably well-off and the ones who would do anything to get drunk. The in-between group tended to limit drinking to paydays and special occasions. Today, lack of money does not appear to exist as a controlling factor."

I believe that this bill expresses a change in thinking. Unlike the previous speaker, I have no doubt in my mind that the legislators who took the decision in 1971 took a sincere decision. I do not believe that it was an initiative that was taken in order to show the leadership of a particular party leader or to get a certain age group's vote. I do not think that was why the initiatives were taken.

No doubt there has been some considerable evidence, particularly as it has accumulated in the report of the select committee on highway safety, that we have a couple of very basic and profound problems. But I do not believe this particular bill, by tinkering with the drinking age, by raising it by one mere year, meets those needs.

There is one other section of the bill that I want to speak to. It is the principle embodied in the section that I want to speak to. I would like the minister, during the clause-by-clause discussion, to correct the impression I have if it is faulty, but it seems to me the bill gives the power to a police officer to confiscate liquor where no offence has taken place if he suspects that an offence or an abuse might take place. I believe, if that is accurate, that it is too wide and sweeping a power. It is a power that we should not give carte blanche to the police. Perhaps we could deal more with that in clause-by-clause debate.

In conclusion, I want to say that this question has been a difficult one for all legislators. It is one most of us have thought through two or three times, in a political sense, in terms of the evidence that has been given, in a medical sense, and so on. Many of us have changed our views. I understand why many of us have changed our views over the last three or four years. On balance I found a lot of those arguments disturbing, but I have not found anything convincing enough to vote for this particular legislation, although many of my colleagues will be doing so, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

[9:15]

Mr. Stong: As with most legislation, the bill before us now contains good points and what I would regard as not so good points, or weaker points. As most speakers who have addressed themselves to this bill prior to me in this debate, I also address myself to the raising of the drinking age to 19.

Mr. Haggerty: It will be 20 next year.

Mr. Stong: I had hoped that when this bill was introduced by the minister, raising of the drinking age would have been postponed for at least two years. I say that because it seems to me the bill contains some good moves in the right direction with respect to enforcement, particularly with regard to an establishment losing its licence when breaching the law. Up to this point, I know of no case reported or tested through the courts where an establishment in fact has lost its licence because of continually, as a result of spot checks, been observed serving liquor to those under 18.

We have laws, and I would urge that those laws, even these new laws being introduced in this bill, be enforced more fully than they have been in the past.

Mr. Haggerty: Right on.

Mr. Stong: If they're not working, then raise the drinking age.

I have tried my best to approach this matter with an open mind, although I do tend towards not raising the drinking age. I have never been ashamed to admit I was wrong or change my mind when I've been proven wrong, but I have seen no evidence to date that would prove anything else but that most teenagers—

Mr. Conway: A true Liberal.

Mr. Stong:—are anything but law abiding citizens and want to be that way. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when we're talking about this bill, we as legislators are not only picking on, demonstrating or zeroing in on the most inexperienced segment of our society, but also grossly underestimating their intelligence, or their desire to be responsible citizens. We have completely overlooked, as legislators, the fact that teenagers, 18-year-olds, who are wholly dependent upon their superiors, want to look to the people who are older, their elders, for guidance. In fact they get their values from their elders and look to them for those values.

We've heard all sorts of arguments. We know that an 18 year old person is required to cast an intelligent and informed vote; we look to him to inform himself to cast that ballot.

We also regard him as a person responsible for any contract he might sign when he's 18 years of age. We've also heard the argument that we expect them to defend their country at 18 years of age. I was most impressed by a letter I received from an 18-year-old in my riding who wrote to me on this issue and said:

"I was married when I was 18. I have a younger brother who may be married when he's 18. He may have a child when he's 18." He has accepted all of the responsibilities of a married man. He's employed, he's expected to support his family and contribute to their education; but that man, having accepted all those responsibilities, will not be allowed to have a bottle of beer in a licensed premises.

Mr. Speaker, this law we are introducing now is really—to use a cliché—a Band Aid approach. We're treating a symptom instead of the disease. Teenagers are not hypocrites—not by far are they hypocrites. They recognize the problem that we are facing and they are reacting to it. We as adults insist that our teenagers go to jail for theft, and yet those same teenagers come from families where the fathers have pilfered from the factory; they come home daily with their lunchboxes full of goods from their employers; they have padded their expense accounts; they do not pay their income tax. The mothers go and shoplift on the weekends. These teenagers are not hypocrites; they can see those values, and those values are being imparted to them.

We also insist that our judges send teenagers to jail who abuse drugs, and yet all you have to do is look behind the scenes, into the medicine cabinets of those same families, and find out what pills the parents are on—the uppers, the downers, the moodcontrollers, the mind-benders. It is a drug-oriented society. Our teenagers are not hypocrites at all, but they can certainly see where the weaknesses are in us.

Mr. McClellan: Why do you insist you are a hypocrite?

Mr. di Santo: Are you for it or against it?

Mr. Stong: But there is one thing: They are not hypocrites; they can see fully the hypocrisy in us. I must say as well that all we have to do is to look at any person who is over the age of 19 and goes to a social event; they cannot communicate with one another unless they are holding a glass in their hand. This is the type of value that we are imparting to our young people. Rather than let them have the responsibility of making up their own mind, we tend to do it for them by trying to legislate morality. You can no more legislate morality than you can legislate brains into people; and, in fact, that is exactly what this legislation is attempting to do.

The strongest argument for the raising of the drinking age to 19 is the fact that it is in our schools. It seems to me that, if our teachers would quit trying to compete in personality contests among themselves and start calling the shots in the classroom and among the students, we wouldn't have this problem. I am aware of the fact that students are disruptive, but how many charges are laid of contributing to juvenile delinquency by virtue of supplying liquor? Not too many. That is a law that is on the books, and it has been on the books for a long time, but we have not resorted to it. The select committee on highway safety reported to us, indicating what the insurance companies have told us, relying on statistics, but there are laws that can control that problem if we care to enforce them.

It seems to me that, rather than raising the drinking age at this time, the minister should have introduced this matter in a way that would be testing the waters and enforcing the laws that we have now. I agree that there are some good points in Bill 96; one of the good points is the suspension of the licence of a premises or establishment that is abusing the law. We should also have more stringent legislation with respect to advertising, and we should be implementing this type of law on a piecemeal basis.

When we are speaking of young people, it seems to me that we expect an awful lot of them, but in turn we are imposing our wishes upon them without truly giving them any type of guidance in our own behaviour. That is where the problem really lies as I see it. How can you possibly control behaviour when those who are making the laws are not prepared to live in accordance with that behaviour themselves?

In this type of legislation, I don't think there is anything to be gained by zeroing in on a segment of society that is inexperienced, and weak by virtue of that inexperience. These people do not have the experience in life that we have; they have gained their values from those of us who are standing here and voting in this House on such a law.

I would much more prefer to see the law enforced, even the more stringent laws that are being introduced in this bill, and withhold the raising of the drinking age until all else has failed. But let's give it a fair trial, which has not been done to date.

Mr. Samis: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the member for York Centre for a very, I thought, reasonable approach towards this difficult and complex problem. It's one, I think, that perplexes many people; not just in this province but in society, because I think there's a general climate of worry and apprehension about what's happening to the social, as well as the moral fabric of our society. I am a little afraid this bill is a reaction to that general apprehension within society and is sort of lashing out in a one prong approach to try and solve it. For that basic reason, I don't intend to support this bill.

Before getting to the basic principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, let me, just in passing, mention I have some severe reservations about some of the other sections within the bill as well, namely the idea of granting increased discretion to the police to confiscate liquor and to exercise their authority, on a very discretionary basis as I see it.

I have very grave reservations about the idea of placing the onus of blame, especially when it comes to fines, on employees in bars and hotels for illegally serving minors. It seems to me if the policy of the establishment to observe the law is very clear cut, then it should be the owner or the manager upon whom the responsibility should fall, and not on an employee, usually earning the minimum wage, who is sometimes harassed, and in a beer joint, for example, has to move around pretty quickly to satisfy his or her customers. I think it's rather unfair to establish the onus of responsibility on them, plus put a minimum fine on them.

Of course, I couldn't talk about this bill without having some reference to section 4 and the idea of granting municipalities the right to restrict the possession of alcoholic beverages in certain arenas, parks and buildings for other sorts, without commenting on the natural, basic, obvious, overwhelming hypocrisy that the minister is aware of at the largest outdoor stadium in this city, namely the C.N.E. Ontario and Toronto have obviously retained their unique distinction of being the only city in major league baseball to ban the sale of suds at that beautiful outdoor emporium, especially as the hot weather approaches.

I want to get to the main principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker. When the various parliaments and legislative bodies of this country, in the early 1970s, almost without fail voted to make 18 the age of majority and adopted other laws in that spirit, I supported that initiative. I thought it was a recognition of the fact that people at 18 were able to accept those responsibilities. I thought it was a progressive move. I must say I haven't seen any really convincing or overwhelming evidence to convince me that those parliaments, those legislatures, including this one, made a mistake.

I think it was an intelligent move. I think we are going through growth pains. I think we are facing problems, but I am still convinced the move to give people from 18 to 21 their full rights in our society was the right move. I continue to support the right of someone at 18 to exercise the full rights of an adult.

Coming from the part of the province I do, Mr. Speaker, I have some memories before I got into this insane business. Down in eastern Ontario, obviously, we are in a jurisdiction that's exposed to other jurisdictions, as the member from Pembroke knows, namely the province of Quebec and New York state.

I seem to recall when I started teaching in Cornwall in 1967 that the drinking age in those days was 21. Supposedly those were the good old days. I recall very vividly the inclination among a good number of my students in the senior grades, all of whom were under the age of 19, was to drink. Drinking was a reasonably common thing. The law was 21, Mr. Speaker, but the drinking was going on at 20, 19, 18, 17, 16 and 15 years of age. This was being done, in some cases, in hotels and bars.

There was one particular establishment in my constituency that was famous for allowing 15- and 16-year-old kids to drink; that's when the age was 21. That wasn't necessarily the fault of the kids. Obviously the problem was the proprietor was being allowed to get away with those violations.

It made it difficult in our jurisdiction, because I recall the province of Quebec had lowered its drinking age and the state of New York had lowered its drinking age. We had a situation where the drinking age was 21 in this province, but it was 18 in two surrounding jurisdictions. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, there was a powerful incentive for those young people to go to Quebec and New York State to drink. They did so quite frequently and in a few cases with very serious results.

Drinking is obviously becoming more and more prevalent among young people. There is no question about that. The same is true among adults, among every age group in our society there's no question there's more drinking going on.

But who sells the stuff in the first place? Who profits from the sale of it? It is not the young people, it is the adults. Who operates the bars and hotels that profit from this particular habit? It's the adults.

Mr. Haggerty: Who runs the LCBO?

Mr. Samis: Or as my good friend from Sudbury would say, mainly Tories; but not in all cases, as he well knows. Who first exposes young people to drinking habits, drinking attitudes and drinking values? Usually it is the adults, usually it is the parents. Usually that is where young people first get exposed to the idea of a glass of beer, a glass of wine or a glass of liquor. I would dare to say that the predominant influence on the teenagers is the father's attitude on drinking.

Who is failing to produce the leadership in terms of educating young people to adopt so-called modest or proper or moderate habits of drinking? Where do they get these habits from? Where is there failure? It has to be among the adults in the first place, not the young people.

I always wondered who writes and who profits from those slick, seductive ads that lure not just young people but people of all ages to drink beer, wine, liquor and liqueurs. Again it is the adults. So here we have the adults profiting from everything that is going on; and yet here we have the adults complaining about the excessive drinking among young people.

Before coming into the chamber this evening I took a little stroll to the library to check up on Maclean's Magazine—Canada's so-called national magazine—just to look at the advertising. In the space of 88 pages—not in the most recent edition but in the previous edition—I counted 20 ads for liquor, wine or beer. That's the magazine that we are pushing as Canada's national magazine, et cetera. Young people are exposed to that.

Liquor was the one product advertised more by far than anything else in that magazine. Compared to cars, travel or other consumer goods, the liquor ads predominated by far.

Then we turn on the TV sets. Obviously, even with the announcement by the minister, we see all sorts of lifestyle advertising on TV. I recall last week, I think, he was questioned and said, "If they have a contract, we are not going to stop it or change it. We'll let that contract reach its natural end before the new regulations take effect."

Who watches television the most? Young people. Who are the most susceptible to lifestyle advertising? Again young people. My own opinion is that there should be a complete ban on all lifestyle liquor and beer advertising. We should stop playing around with regulations and kotowing to the ad agencies, the breweries and the distilleries.

Another thing I have noticed is the increasing presence, of the breweries especially, at sporting and social events. The amount of promotion being done by the breweries is really astonishing in the field of athletics. The time of year doesn't really matter; they somehow get in on it and get their advertising, whether it is a mobile van, a booth, free schedules—you name it, they work every possible angle, they make their presence felt. Again, young people mostly are being exposed to it and they are the most susceptible because they obviously participate heavily in sports.

I am not really surprised there is an increase in the amount of drinking by young people. They are just being saturated with pressure by us adults, by the advertisers, and of course by peer group pressure.

I don't think we should put the whole focus of blame, as the member for York Centre said, on the young people. I think the basic fact of life, even today, is that the vast majority of our young people are not abusing alcohol. It has not been proved that the majority are abusing alcohol. There may be a minority abusing it. That minority may be increasing in numbers, but the same thing is happening with adults. A minority abuse alcohol, and the size of that minority is increasing. I think in effect it is tantamount to punishing an entire age group without really having proved any consistent case of guilt. I think if anyone has failed it is not the law so much as the adults, the advertisers and parents, rather than the young people.

One of the main arguments we hear in favour of this bill by people from the research institutes is, "look at the accident rate." They relate the high degree of accidents involving alcohol with the drinking age and suggest that if it were raised to 19 or 20 that would somehow solve the problem.

First of all, the increase in accidents involving alcohol, once again, is not confined to 17-, 18-, 19-, or 20-year-olds. There has been an increase in other age levels as well. I'll be the first one to admit that the rate of increase is greater among minors.

At this stage, I'd like to express a personal opinion. When we talk about people of 16, 17 or 18 in accidents involving alcohol, it sometimes mystifies me why we're considering a law that would raise the drinking age to 19 yet we allow someone to drive a muscle-machine, a souped-up car, you name it, at 16 years of age in this province.

Somehow the logic escapes me of saying that you can vote, drink, borrow money, get married, et cetera, at 18 or 19, but you can drive a car at 16. In an industrial society as opposed to a rural society that, somehow, seems to me to show a little lack of consistency when we say you can drive a car at 16, but you can't drink or do those other nasty things until the age of 18 or 19.

In my last report to my constituents I included a questionnaire on the question: "What do you think should be the legal minimum age for driving in the province of Ontario?" I checked off 16, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21. If I recall the figure, over 70 per cent of the people who answered the questionnaire said it should be 19 or over for driving a car in the province. Yet, somehow we focus consistently on the drinking age, without ever giving any attention to the driving age.

I think it's about time we gave some attention to the whole premise and the whole preconception of allowing people to drive at the age of 16. I know my colleague from Hamilton mentioned it and I'm sure others will. I think this bill, if it passes, will create some very obvious inconsistencies. I know some of them sound like they're clichés but I think, nevertheless, they contain a modicum of truth.

If you can drive at 16—and nobody ever suggested you're an adult or mature at 16; if you can vote in a provincial, municipal or federal election; if you can get married in Ontario at the age of 16; if you can go into debt legally by yourself at 18; if you can serve in the armed forces at 18; how do we tell young people, "You can do all those things, but, no, with this new bill you can't do it at 19"?

What's the consistency of it? How do we explain the logic of that to the younger generation? I have a suspicion that the logic of it is so weak, the inconsistency is so obvious, that this is going to breed some considerable disrespect for this law among our young people. I just don't see young people buying the validity or the credibility of the argument. I think the inconsistency is painfully obvious and I've yet to hear a convincing argument au contraire.

Another reason why I speak in opposition to the bill is that I have very grave reservations that it will work in the first place, especially in terms of the problem it purports to attack. I suspect the police will not particularly enjoy having to enforce it because it will make their job more difficult and we have all sorts of new laws coming out in addition to this one that are going to make their job more difficult. I suspect the hotel and bar owners won't particularly support it because it will make their jobs more difficult.

Frequently, we hear the argument: "What about the high schools? That's where the real problem is. That's where the real abuse exists." I recall my days of teaching high school. Most of the drinking—and I suspect it hasn't changed much today—obviously is done on the students' free time. If you're 18 years of age, damn it all, that's your right in society. Then they say, "They go out at noon and they either get smashed or they have x number of beers and they come back to class." I would maintain that's a small minority within the high-school population and within the 17 to 19 age range. Among those who do it, where did they get the habit from in the first place? Who concocted this great idea of going out to quaff a few at noon hour? Again, I don't think we can afford to cast any stones.

Mr. Sargent: Tory members of Parliament. That's where they got it.

Mr. Warner: Certain members, Eddie.

Mr. Samis: Sometimes the idea is mentioned—I've seen it here in the Toronto press—what about the dance situation in the high schools? Some allege that it's extremely difficult now to even conduct a teenage dance in the high schools. If we think back ourselves, and obviously being far younger than the member for Grey-Bruce, my memory can't go as far back, but I recall having to supervise high school dances in the 1960s and the early 1970s. If anyone suggests there wasn't drinking going on then, when the drinking age was 21, he's just deceiving himself beyond all credibility. It was a problem then; it's probably a problem now. It may have increased even more so, but that's part of the general change in society. It's not restricted to young people. The same thing exists at the Argo games, where the minister will be going this summer.

Mr. Sargent: They won't let him in.

Mr. Samis: I would dare to say, as he has all his squad out there, the amount of drinking at Argo games has increased.

An hon. member: I'm not going to the Argo games.

Mr. Warner: You should. Punish yourself, you deserve that punishment.

Mr. Roy: He is going to have to drink to tolerate the Argos this year.

Mr. Samis: I'm sure at the "Make Believe Palace" on Carlton Street, for "Pal Hal", that the amount of mickies found over there in the last 10 years has increased drastically.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: No.

Mr. Samis: I'm sure any good bartender at a golf club will tell you that consumption has increased there over the past 10 years. So I really don't think we should isolate the instance of the teenage dances and say, "There's the problem; there's the proof."

If this bill passes and becomes law, I know that in my particular part of the province it's going to cause serious problems; we'll have a situation where the drinking age will be 19, and we'll be surrounded by two jurisdictions where it's 18. I can see it happening now as it happened when the age was 21; they'll be driving across the Quebec border to the hotels on Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays, or they'll be driving across the border into northern New York state. We'll have increased automobile accidents. I recall very vividly one of my students having been killed on a Sunday night coming back from the province of Quebec. Obviously, he'd gone out drinking and that was one source of his ultimate demise.

I really worry that, when this bill passes, the pattern we have been able to overcome in our area is going to resurrect itself, because there's now going to be the incentive to go over to Quebec or New York state as a result of the law in Ontario being different. I would point out, when we constantly hassle high school kids for drinking too much, that most of it is done after 4 o'clock and on Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sunday nights. With the vast majority who do drink, it's not really related to the high school in the first place. Sure, there are some who do, but let's not cast stones when we look at our own habits.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that this bill does not really get at the source of the problem. I'm afraid it won't solve the problem. I'm afraid it will create a whole host of new problems. It will be a glaring inconsistency and among young people it may even breed disrespect for the law. On the basis of that, I will not support the bill.

Mr. Conway: I, too, Mr. Speaker, would like to join briefly in the debate on Bill 96. I must say that I share with the member for Downsview a certain difficulty, because we've not yet heard from the archbishop on how we can vote on this matter.

Mr. Samis: The parish priest will do.

Mr. Warner: Someone should tell you how to vote.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Frank will tell you.

Mr. Conway: The member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick informs me that the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) will tell us, and I suspect that's probably true.

Mr. B. Newman: Remember, that's not Jimmy Carter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope he is with me this time, Sean.

Mr. Conway: I was happy to hear the member for Cornwall make the remarks about his personal experience from the far eastern region of this province, because it's been my experience to have seen many of the same things.

I'm happy to be here tonight with the minister and his bill, because as one relatively young Ontarian I have found his remarks and his general approach to the liquor question in this province more than slightly embarrassing and at times downright overbearing and intolerable. He has brought to the politics of moral uplift a sense of a sort of new earnestness and zeal that we haven't seen in many years.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Remember, I get to speak last.

Mr. Conway: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that there are many of us in this chamber who find it particularly difficult to accept that the minister in charge of the liquor policy of this government should be so prepared to make the sort of moral pronouncements that he is becoming increasingly famous for.

I know that many members of the House would join with me in suggesting to the minister that he become slightly less impolitic in his remarks about what may or may not happen to his children at the ball park where he would like to take them.

You know I was thinking, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: Does he have children?

Mr. Conway: —in that connection, because I have heard all his great speeches and all the powerful arguments he has made and all the tremendously significant points he has put in this respect. On the question of liquor policy in the past in this province there have been an awful lot of people like the present member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick who would guard the moral virtue of the young and older citizens in this very important respect.

When I hear his speeches, I think back to an earlier day and I just wanted to quote briefly from a similar such speech by—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Remo Mancini.

Mr. Conway: —someone given—No, my friend from Essex South is, of course, not discharged with the responsibilities of—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Discharged? Charged, not discharged.

Mr. Conway: —handling the liquor policy in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I was earlier tonight looking back into some of the old arguments in favour. I found this old song that made me think of the present member—

Mr. Stong: Then sing it.

Mr. Warner: Going to sing it?

Mr. Conway: —for St. Andrew-St. Patrick. Only one paragraph—

Mr. Warner: Sing it, Sean.

Mr. Conway: —of which I would like to read into the record, because I think it speaks—

Mr. Warner: Sing it.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Sing it, Sean.

Mr. Conway: It is not an Irish drinking song, Mr. Speaker, but it does say something about where the minister's heart lies in this. It goes something like this in part:

Mr. Warner: Sing it, sing it, Sean. We will join you.

Mr. Conway: "Someone's boy may be your boy, his eyes just the same shade of blue;

Someday your tears may be falling, the breweries don't care if they do;

'Tis theirs to ruin and trample, to crush out all hope and joy;

Won't you go to the polls at election, and vote to save someone's boy?"

That, just so the honourable minister will know in what context he finds himself, was authored by Miss E. W. Farley, in Belleville, 74 years ago.

I just wanted to bring that to his attention to put him in the proper stream—

Mr. Warner: Sing it at the CNE stadium now.

Mr. Conway: —because I must say that I have found his statements about people who can't handle their drink in this province just about at one with that kind of remark.

You know, the almost ancient hypocrisy of Tory politicians, certainly not members of this party traditionally—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, no, not members of your party.

Mr. Conway: —but Tory politicians in this province with respect to the liquor question is quite frankly something more than I can bear.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So you will vote against the bill.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, it is well characterized by what I think we can best describe as their brown paper bag morality.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So you are voting against the bill.

Mr. Conway: I often think that if we put the minister and a good mickey in a brown paper bag—

Mr. Warner: Why not put the minister in a brown paper bag?

Mr. Conway: —would that be acceptable if we took them both into the Exhibition Stadium for a ball game or some other such matter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Only one of us would come out alive.

Mr. Conway: The principle of Bill 96 deals with the matter of establishing a drinking age generally and, in fact, raising the age from 18 to 19.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So you are voting against it.

Mr. Conway: The member for Cornwall pointed out very aptly the experience—

Mr. Warner: Eloquently.

Mr. Conway: —of those of us who live and who continue to live in a border region. I suspect that if the member for Carleton has his way, that phrase will mean an awful lot more—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And being a border member.

Mr. Conway: —and being a border member, to be sure, we can well remember the days back—

Mr. Warner: That is different from being on the fringe element, Larry.

Mr. Conway: —pre-1971 when the drinking age in Ontario was significantly different from that in Quebec and certainly in the United States. I grew up in a part of eastern Ontario that was 65 miles from the nearest tavern in western Quebec. There was a veritable paucity of legislation in this province to induce me not to make that 65-mile trip to indulge myself.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that that legislation did not in any material way prohibit my interest or my activity in crossing the Ottawa River and partaking of the evil drink in question.

An hon. member: Shame, shame.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So you are voting against the bill.

Mr. Conway: The hypocrisy of trying to legislate these matters in the moral domain I find really quite fascinating.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are voting against the bill.

Mr. Conway: There are those in this House who know Irish Catholic partisans from the Ottawa valley have an historic commitment to the temperance side in the debate. I don't want to let that ancient prejudice bear upon my decisions in this vote.

But—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But.

Mr. Warner: Here it comes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Downhill from here.

Mr. Ashe: He smokes too.

Mr. Conway: —it seems to me the arguments put by the select committee on highway safety are important arguments.

Mr. Warner: The cap is off the bottle.

Mr. Conway: I heard the NDP crowing, as only they can crow. I heard the member for Port Arthur earlier tonight telling us all that they have decided to have a free vote. I am sure they are going to have a free vote, now that they have given themselves to the roller-coasting, roller-skating politics in a parking lot where the meter has long since run out.

I am not surprised to hear the NDP is having a free vote tonight because on such questions as we have found increasingly in this spring session, theirs is a party completely bereft of leadership. I suspect we will see, rightly or wrongly, willingly or otherwise, that party commit itself to an incredible series of free votes to avoid embarrassment to which they would otherwise be committed.

I am one of those members who listens to the passionate civil libertarian arguments of certain members of that party in certain committees and I no doubt will hear from the distinguished member for High Park—Swansca (Mr. Ziembra). I am sure he will grace this House with his stentorian orations on this matter in which he has some degree of interest. And no doubt that will represent a traditional position for that party.

Mr. Hall: Third position.

Mr. Conway: But I must say it is my feeling, as a private member that if we seek to legislate in the general questions of morality, in so far as removing from young people in this province the drink goes, as the minister would have it.

I think we operate on some fundamentally wrong premises. I happened to be listening to the radio the other morning and I was thinking of an effort the government and others, in respect to another moral area—a moral conundrum—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why did you support the bill last November? Why did you vote for Remo's bill?

Mr. Conway:—the business of legislating certain things out of the city of Toronto that had previously become quite apparent on lower Yonge Street. Now, I listen to the radio in the morning and I understand that it is off Yonge Street, but it is certainly alive and well at the corner of Church and Isabella.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where are you staying, Sean?

Mr. G. Taylor: Hey. I live there. Watch that, Sean. I live at Church and Isabella.

Mr. Bradley: Welcome back, George.

Mr. G. Taylor: I am moving to lower Yonge Street.

Mr. Conway: Some of us have certain latitudes in that respect, not free to others who have entered into more lasting commitments. I see the member for Simcoe Centre evincing his conflict of interest in that respect, no doubt.

I want to say that I think the efforts of this and other governments to effectively legislate in the moral areas has been proven to be somewhat bankrupt.

Mr. McClellan: He's going back in the other direction.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But Remo's bill, which you supported, was no different.

Mr. Conway: All members have argued—no, I am going to be quite simple and quite sincere—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As always.

Mr. Conway: I don't think it is quite frankly the hallmark of a civilized society that we should have a drinking age.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are half right.

Mr. Conway: I find it repugnant, to say the least, that civilized people cannot drink as they see their capacities to allow them to drink. Quite frankly, I find it very unfortunate that we need to have a drinking age.

Interjection.

Mr. Roy: Just listen, as you said this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He is voting against it, that is what I cannot understand.

Mr. Conway: I must say that the history of this province and the history of much of western society is not more unfortunate than in these questions of liquor and related moral questions. Clearly, as a society, we have not from the very beginning learned how to handle the matters of alcohol in particular.

That disturbs me. That disturbs me greatly.

Mr. Germa: You haven't learned anything. What a pussy willow.

Mr. Conway: Many members of this House have been circularized recently by some constituents—

Mr. Germa: What did you ever see or do in this world? Where have you been?

Mr. Conway: On Yorkville with the member for Sudbury waiting for the—

Mr. Germa: What a pussy willow. You never worked a day in your life. You haven't done anything.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: He wants to go up to the Ottawa River to study drinking.

Mr. Conway: I take seriously—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Come back, Bud; don't leave now.

Mr. Ruston: Stick around, Bud, stick around.

Mr. Conway: I take seriously what the member for Sudbury says.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The first time in two years I want him to stay and he leaves.

Mr. Conway: I take seriously what he says. It's interesting, Mr. Speaker, that he happily followed the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) in his years of being both leader of that party and a member, and as I recall he entered this Legislature under circumstances not too different from my own. I am, for the benefit of the member for Sudbury, trying to get the flavour of it all. I only suggest to the member for Sudbury that he be somewhat more generous in his tolerance of the younger portion of this society.

I have not been spending my life in the Frood mine and I am probably very seriously deficient in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You're seriously deficient, but we won't hold that against you.

Mr. Conway: Someday I may have the opportunity—sooner than I might like—to take him up on that offer.

Mr. Warner: You should go underground somewhere.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that I find the matter of a drinking age quite unacceptable in general. However—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: However.

Mr. Conway:—there is clearly a will among the members of this House, and clearly a desire on the part of the community as a whole, to have a drinking age.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And you too, you agree.

Mr. Conway: I will accept from my constituents in this respect, the notion that they want me as their member—

Mr. Warner: They want to run a referendum on it.

Mr. Conway:—to support, on their behalf if not on my own—

Mr. Warner: A referendum now. Is that what you're going to do?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Some leadership. There is leadership, there's leadership for you.

Mr. Conway:—to support the principle of a drinking age.

Mr. Roy: It is better than you guys. You changed the law in 1971 and changed it back in 1978; some leadership.

Mr. Bradley: A man of the people, no doubt about it.

Mr. Conway: It seems to me the people of my constituency and the people of the province insist that we have a drinking age.

Mr. Warner: Fifty-one.

Mr. McClellan: How about 35?

Mr. Warner: How about 81?

Mr. Conway: Speaking as a citizen in the province I think that that is not a civilized thing to do in some respects; however, I will accept that.

Mr. Warner: Just ban it from the Ottawa valley.

Mr. Conway: If we must have a drinking age, I will accept further the notion—

Mr. McClellan: Have an escalator.

Mr. Bradley: He's wandering now.

Mr. Conway:—that we should make that drinking age as useful as possible.

Mr. M. N. Davison: However.

Mr. Warner: Here comes the other side.

Mr. Conway: Therefore, on this one occasion, I want to make it—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Perfectly clear.

Mr. Conway:—perfectly clear—

Mr. Warner: Well, it's audible.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where have we heard that before? Now I can identify your speech.

Mr. Conway:—because any other clarity the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick would not understand. I want to make it perfectly clear that I appreciate the direction given me by my constituents as I understand it.

Mr. Warner: Not as they understand it, but as you understand it.

Mr. Conway: And on their behalf, notwithstanding Edmund Burke's letter to the electors of Bristol, I will support in principle the notion that the drinking age should be made more practical than has been the case post-1971.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How do you feel personally?

Mr. Conway: I do so with the following caveat, that I know that those in this province who are 16, 17, 18, or whatever, who want to have a drink will have a drink despite what this Legislature might rule to the contrary. There is no one in this chamber who can leave here feeling that this is a purity that we can make stick; and no one knows that better than the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) who has just arrived on the scene.

An hon. member: Aren't you glad you're here?

Mr. Conway: I hope, for however long that government lasts—and if today's performance in question period is any example I am sure—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Another 19 years.

Mr. Conway:—I am sure that the sunset, in the member for London South's phrase, is surely approaching—that we will have an opportunity to see the member for Scarborough Centre become the minister in charge of the liquor policy of the Tory administration.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He will be before you will.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's a damn hard policy, I'll tell you.

Mr. Conway: Then we might have another view; we might have a liberalizing, progressive view.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Don't complain about me.

Mr. Conway: We might have an under-standing view.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Not on liquor.

[10:00]

Mr. Conway: We might have a more sensitive social view, that we cannot expect, and that we do really expect from the present member.

Mr. Roy: Frank, are you against sin?

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, for those reasons, and I want to make it very clear, like the member for Kitchener (Mr. Brethaupt) who, I think, makes the case for those of us who find it very difficult to accept a drinking age in principle, and because the constituents we represent so direct us, we will accept their majority mandate. For that reason, I will support the principle of Bill 96. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Walker: You can't even accept a drink.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How do you feel personally?

Mr. Walker: You are a teetotaler.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park-Swansea.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Don't go away, Sean.

Mr. Ziembra: I rise in support of Bill 96, Mr. Speaker, not because my constituents have directed me to do so, but because I believe it's a small step in the right direction. I think this Legislature made a terrible mistake back in 1971—

Mr. Bradley: Is this going to be as good as the speech on the wolf bounty?

Mr. Ziembra:—and it will go a small way towards correcting that mistake.

We heard this evening that smoking could be banned or, because the age of majority was lowered, there has been an increase in sexual activities. That wasn't what the doctor ordered.

Mr. Roy: Leave that out of it.

Mr. Foulds: There was no cause and effect.

Mr. Walker: Bring the bill in again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are setting up a board.

Mr. Roy: A board? Yes, Frank can use it, you know.

Mr. Ziembra: While there are probably cases where people engaged in these pursuits—

An hon. member: I agree with that.

Mr. Ziembra:—were participants, and where the pursuit of these activities proved fatal, at least they didn't end up killing other people as we have with the drinking problem. Bars, taverns and discos that are catering to the teenage trade are not going to close down because we've passed Bill 96, Mr. Speaker. Young people will continue to drink in these bars rather than at home and cars will continue to be used to get from one bar to another. Eventually they will be used for the trip home.

This bill may cut down on some of the carnage on our highways but there are no guarantees that it will eliminate it, as far as young people are concerned. It would be a lot better if this bill restored the drinking age to 21.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Are you going to speak, Gordon?

Mr. Ziembra: Nowhere in this bill does it suggest that the brewers and distillers should cut back on their advertising. The member for Cornwall told us about our national magazine, Maclean's, having 88 pages with 20 ads. While we have 20 pages of liquor advertising, we have a more popular magazine, Quest, distributed free of charge to 700,000 homes in this province on a regular basis, and this particular copy has 88 pages with 35 pages of liquor advertising. They do better than Maclean's.

The more any product is promoted, the more advertising we have, the higher the consumption will be. This bill does not attack the root cause of alcohol abuse, which is alienation and loss of self-worth.

Mr. Bradley: On that basis, you should have a majority government, eh?

Mr. Ziembra: Youth employment stands at 40 per cent. There are no jobs for young people, young people who can't make it in school, and even graduates, face a bleak future. Thanks to our mismanaged economy, there are few meaningful jobs for anyone under 25. This loss of self-esteem, this loss of a sense of belonging and identity results in alcohol abuse as well as anti-social behaviour. We've learned that today's teenagers are, and will continue to be, over-represented in our prison system. I don't think this bill will change that very much. However, Bill 96 will go a long way, I think to removing alcohol from high schools and the peer pressure that accompanies it, and it is for that reason that I am going to vote for it.

It was also suggested in an earlier speech that we can't legislate morality. While we can't legislate people to be good, we can legislate in such a way that it will make it difficult for people to be bad.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be brief, because I realize there are other members who wish to make their contribution this evening and particularly our member from Essex South.

I would submit at the beginning that I will speak in favour of this bill. However, I would caution the minister in the flush of the excitement of what we are doing right now that he has a greater responsibility; that, I submit, is to examine through his ministry those factors which I personally perceive are things or factors which are changing the habits of the people in our community, in the province of Ontario, who are choosing to consume some form of alcohol.

The evidence I have is rather limited and yet, coming from London, Ontario, with Labatt's Brewery being one of the corporate members of our community, it is my understanding that the habits of the people in Ontario are changing very radically and rather quickly from that of consuming what is called soft alcohol—that is, in the form of some beer, ale, lager or what have you—to some harder form of alcohol. I would submit to the minister that his responsibility would have to extend into the area of consideration, or research if you will to examine what factors are causing the change and then, along with his cabinet colleagues, to do something effectively which would bring that change back or away from the rather horrendous direction in which it seems to be proceeding.

The next point I would like to make is that the amendment which the minister submitted to us today is one which pleases me very much. I say that for a personal reason. My family consisting of six young people, has in it two people—my second daughter, who was born in January 1960, and my first son, who was born in that same year, in December 1960. These young people, who are just over 11 months apart in their age difference would have been caught in a rather awkward social situation had the minister's original proposition proceeded. They are where they are—that is, in grade 12 of their secondary school life—by virtue of the Education Act. In the Education Act at page 25, and I am referring to section 20 in part II, which defines compulsory school attendance, an essential in there is the definition of "admission and time" for people entering our school system. Essentially, "those young people born between January and June of a school year may not enter until the September of that school year; however, the young people born between September and December may enter in that particular year." So, in fact, we have a division within a calendar year of the young people in our community.

I checked with Statistics Canada to see how many of our present 17-year-olds that might affect, and the information given to me this morning by Statistics Canada indicated that two years ago—they have no up to date information for 1977 because they have not the proficiency to have the information available that quickly, but for the preceding year the births in Ontario totalled 124,229. In the period from September to December there were 42,395 births. In other words they represent 33.8 per cent of the young people aged 17.

If you were to extend this or if you were to go back—and I asked him to go back to check the month by month birth rate and birth numbers and the numbers come out within a percentage point of each other. The number that would have been affected at this point in time, also making reference to the Ministry of Education statistics, would have been in the neighbourhood of 37,000 young people in our province if that age had been left effective September 1. Those young people, those 37,000 in our province, I am sure are grateful that amendment moves it up to January. In my opinion, it is very consistent to make that change.

Aside from making that comment I will note that my own son, who would have been affected, and many of his friends, who brought to me a list of names of people who are affected and who are concerned, all expressed the opinion, as mentioned a few moments ago by the member for York Centre, that if we have a problem right now it is that our law, as we know it today, is not properly enforced. The young people with whom I am associated—and again I have to make reference to my own family, aside from those many thousands of young people I was acquainted with in my 21 years in teaching—by and large the young people I am acquainted with have all made the same observation and that is that our law is not enforced.

They are not inclined to be critical of the law, but they are inclined to be very critical of the lack of enforcement of the law. For example, they and their friends do this—and I would submit that most of them, being human, probably have attempted the same thing—when they go into an establishment that serves alcohol, no one is questioned about his or her age. They have witnesses, associates and people they know in the same class who go into LCBO or Brewers' Retail outlets and never are they asked, according to these people, for identification. I would submit to the minister that that was one of the main criticisms that the young people have: enforce the laws that exist.

Beyond that, I would say that in section 6 of the act there is reference made to identification. I am torn at various times on my thinking on this, whether it's right or not, but we talk in one breath about identification for federal reasons and we look at our social insurance number. We then take a look at identification for this purpose. We talk about personal identification or identification forms for such things as OHIP and then we hear from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications that we will likely be getting drivers' licences with an identification photo.

To me this is an area that demands of our government a further investigation because essentially, if you sit and analyse it just on the surface, Mr. Speaker, you could end up with four or five or six pieces of identification. I don't think that is the minister's intention and I would hope that in the cabinet debate he comes up with some kind of solution for the people in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will be using the licences.

Mr. Van Horne: You will be?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, as soon as they are out.

Mr. Van Horne: I am sorry. I didn't understand that, having read this. But at any rate, I hope I have made my point that a variety of forms of identification are not necessarily needed. I would submit that if we had a form of identification and, beyond that, if we had a determination to pursue the laws that exist that perhaps we wouldn't have to get into such long debates and such concern as we are looking at right now.

Mr. Charlton: I rise to speak to Bill 96. Although there are a number of things in the bill that are probably useful in terms of tightening some of the aspects of the law a little bit, there are a number of problems I see with the bill. The basic one is the whole question of the drinking age.

It seems to me that to a great degree those of us who are debating this bill here tonight are playing games with ourselves if we think that the problems we are talking about didn't exist before 1971. If we think that by raising the drinking age by one year those problems are going to go away, we are being somewhat naive.

Drinking teenagers are no new phenomenon. Drinking in high school is no new phenomenon—a number of the members here tonight have mentioned that. Most of us here tonight know, whether we participated ourselves or not, that the problem existed long before the change in the drinking age in 1971. One point that has been made tonight by a number of speakers that I think is very important and that we seem to a large degree to be overlooking is that the vast majority of young people in 1978, as in 1971, as in 1965, in 1955 and in 1945, are responsible and reasonably mature. They are not abusing—as they did not abuse—the privilege, or the “snuck” privilege, of drinking, whether it was before or after 1971.

Perhaps we should recall for a moment the prohibition that was attempted in the 1930s. It was a prohibition to deal with a social problem; and the prohibition failed miserably. It just didn't work, because society was not prepared or able to deal with prohibition. They were not prepared to change their attitudes.

I recall a situation I was involved in when I was 18 years old. I was driving one night with a friend. We were following a car which was weaving all over the road. On a number of occasions it crossed the centre line of a four-lane highway onto the wrong side of the road. Obviously the driver had dozed off and on each occasion managed to get back to the right side of the road only after some very loud beeping by the rather heavy traffic coming the other way.

Eventually we got this car stopped and got the 45-year-old gentleman out of his car. We managed to get his name and address and to get him home. I raise this example tonight for two reasons: first, because the gentleman we were involved with that evening was part of a society that has set and is setting the examples for the young people we are talking about here tonight; and secondly, because he wasn't a young person and still hadn't been able to deal with his problem—which was a social problem.

We set the attitudes. We set the examples. And now we throw the stones.

One of the things that has bothered me somewhat is that we try to deal with a social problem and a social attitude by a prohibition. I've heard no discussion here tonight about trying to deal with the rather high death rate from alcohol-related diseases through prohibition.

I don't have any facts and figures on it but I would imagine that if we delved into the statistics on people who die from brain damage and from heart damage and from kidney and liver damage we would find that the rate is disgusting, to say the least. But we can't deal with that problem through prohibition, because the people who find themselves in that situation are a part of this society and living the social attitudes this society pushes. In the same way I don't think we can deal with the social attitudes and the social pressures of young people by prohibition.

This society has bombarded itself and the young people in it with the myths of the social benefits of the use of alcohol. We have tied the use of alcohol directly to sexual achievement and sexual acceptability and to athletic prowess. All of the things we worship in this society we in effect say you can accomplish with the use of alcohol or as part of your social involvement.

In the same way that this society has problems above the ages of 18, 19, 20 and 21, this society has to deal with those problems. For us to single out young people here tonight is a cop out. We have a social problem of alcohol abuse to deal with and we're hiding from that problem, finding a scapegoat. What I very sincerely fear is that when this bill passes, all of us as legislators, and all of the parents out there who have related the problem to us, will breathe a sigh of relief and say: "Thank God we've got it out of the high schools," or, "Thank God we'll save a few lives on the highways."

A number of the members mentioned the drinking that went on at high schools before 1971 and the drinking that went on in other jurisdictions as well.

I can well recall the problems of drinking in high school. A very small minority actually took alcohol into the schools during the day; a very, very small minority, but it happened even then. There were some who got drunk and rowdy at dances; and a large number drank on their own private time. Many went across the border from the area where I lived into New York state, to Buffalo, to Lakewood, to a number of other places, and ran the risks of the long drive home.

Mr. Bradley: Did you go to Lakewood?

Mr. Charlton: On occasion, yes.

Mr. Bradley: That place has burned down.

Mr. Charlton: That's probably going to be a saving for the 18-year-olds in Hamilton.

At any rate, my point tonight is that we are trying to deal with a problem that is a problem of the whole society in the wrong way and in a way that cannot work.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I shall be very brief. I, obviously, rise in support of this bill. I want to commend my colleague for his courage, not just on the—

Mr. Roy: What courage?

Hon. Mr. Drea:—issue of the raising of the drinking age—

Mr. Roy: It was the member for Essex South.

Mr. B. Newman: Mancini deserves the credit.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—but on the package of recommendations that came forward in a previous parliament.

Mr. Foulds: Mancini doesn't have the bruises from cabinet that the minister has.

Hon. Mr. Drea: As you know, Mr. Speaker, I had something to do in 1975—as a matter of fact, I did the bulk of the work—dealing with the previous liquor act. At that time, because of certain circumstances, there were a number of ministers involved, and I can say very truthfully to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House, that had the degree of courage that has been shown by the present minister been shown then, perhaps we would not have to be here tonight.

Mr. Mancini: Don't ruin your credibility because of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Roy: Give some credit to the member for Essex South.

Mr. Gregory: Oh, come on. He's Johnny-come-lately.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want to talk for a few moments on an aspect of the alcohol problem. I am not naive and I'm fully aware of human nature and the vagaries of the human condition as subject to pressures both from within our society and from within the person. I don't think that this bill is going to be a panacea. Quite frankly, it is a small step forward, but it is a step forward in the right direction.

For those who like to ponder certain things—as a matter of fact, I don't understand where this sexual attractiveness aspect comes from; from some of the speeches here tonight it's almost enough to make a man get extremely thirsty and see the things he's been missing over the years.

Every day when I go to work I have to face the grim reality that 90 per cent of the inmates in the Ontario institutions are there because of alcohol-related offences. This is not to say they're alcoholics; in fact, many of them aren't even heavy drinkers. But it is a statistical fact that their troubles in society that have led them to become offenders are over their inability to control the use of alcohol.

It may be of interest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the federal penitentiary service tells me that 80 per cent of the inmates—and, quite frankly, that is probably more shocking, because the bulk of their inmates are violent offenders—that 80 per cent of those offenders are alcohol-related.

Mr. Roy: Or drugs.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, alcohol. We'll give you the drugs, too.

An hon. member: Alcohol is a drug.

Hon. Mr. Drea: What bothers me, and I'm sure it bothers those of the profession in this House who are in contact with the inmate population in institutions, is that about 45 to 50 per cent of the inmates in Ontario, and about the same ratio of the inmates in the federal penitentiary system, aren't even shaving yet. They're 16, 17, 18, 19 years old.

An hon. member: Then what are they doing with shaving lotion?

An hon. member: Give them the vote.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It seems to me that we have to make a start in our society, in our community, towards a coherent and a personal control of the alcohol problem. Prohibition won't work. Temperance won't work. All the regulations and the legislation won't cure the problem. It is a matter of personal control. In this regard, the present minister has removed many of the anachronisms of the old act, which makes the act that will pass in this session much more acceptable to the population. Liquor control is not something to be snickered or laughed at or to be deliberately broken because it is expected in society. That's probably still the impact of prohibition upon us.

An hon. member: Howard Ferguson would be happy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Alcohol abuse has an enormous impact; albeit probably less than four or five per cent of the population is involved, it is a growing thing. If you want to look at the impaired driving in this province, Mr. Speaker, take into account that each and every weekend I have 600 weekend sentences, 95 per cent of them on multiples—this is their third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, 10th impaired driving sentence. These figures are going up.

An hon. member: Ten?

An hon. member: My boys.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Therefore, while this bill is not a panacea—it is not in any way, shape or form, nor has it attempted to be, a total look at the situation—it is a step forward. It is a step forward that will only be meaningful if there is enforcement. I don't think it's telling any secrets to say that the present enforcement of the act is at best non-descript. But enforcement alone won't carry it out. It has to have the support of the community. It has to have the support of the individual.

In this manner, I think that the package that has been proposed in this bill by my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is not only a step forward in the right direction as regards youth and the problem they are having with this commodity, but also it is drawing to the attention of the public that liquor regulation and liquor control is something that is absolutely essential in our society, not something that is to be snickered at any more, something that can be made practical and understandable. On that basis, I support the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Would the member for Essex South care to adjourn the debate?

On motion by Mr. Mancini, the debate was adjourned.

An hon. member: Well done, Remo. That's the best you've done all year.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, may I give some indication as to the order of business tomorrow and next week? Tomorrow we will carry on with the consideration of the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman. Once that is completed we will return to this bill, that is Bill 96.

During the week of June 12, on Monday, the following legislation will be considered in this order: Bill 96, if it hasn't been completed tomorrow morning, followed by the second reading of Bill 108. Then we will do Bills 96, 91, 86, 85 and 108 in committee.

On Tuesday we will start with Bill 66 in committee, no matter where we finish up on Monday. Then we will do second reading of Bills 83, 84 and 79. Then we will do Bills 80, 81, 83, 84 and 799 in committee. Then we will come out of committee to do second readings of Bill 110 and 111 together with any legislation left over from Monday.

On Wednesday, the general government committee, the resources development committee and the justice committee may sit.

On Thursday, private members' public business in the afternoon will consider Bills 65 and 99. Then on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock we will start Bill 103.

On Friday, we will carry on with Bill 103 until second reading and then if time permits, the House will consider any legislation left over from Tuesday.

Mr. Cunningham: Bill 78?

Mr. Conway: Not even Brezhnev has such power.

Mr. Breithaupt: Might I ask the House leader is it then the intention to only complete Bill 103 at the second reading stage before the adjournment of the House?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:33 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1978

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

VISITORS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, prior to statements, might I direct your attention and that of the honourable members to your gallery where we have a distinguished parliamentarian from the state of South Australia. He is the Honourable D. W. Simmons, chief secretary and minister assisting the Premier of the South Australian government. With him is his wife, Mrs. Simmons, and his research officer, Miss Terese Wacyk.

Mr. Speaker, I would draw to the attention of yourself that he is a man remarkably like you, because in that government he fulfils the equivalent in ours of the Solicitor General, the Minister of Correctional Services, the Minister of Government Services and the Chief Auditor and as well is Dr. Stewart and Clare Westcott.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, might I also draw to your attention that this is a very important day in the lives of some of us in this Legislature. This is our first year here and it is our anniversary. I see some of my newly-elected colleagues here, I would like to thank the remainder of the colleagues I have met in this past year for the great learning process they have given us. At times I didn't think we would make one year.

Mr. Breithaupt: The Premier (Mr. Davis) is out celebrating.

Mr. G. Taylor: I would like to thank all the members here for giving us this learning process.

Mr. Foulds: There are not many of them.

Mr. Sargent: In another year, you will be over here.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DOW CHEMICAL

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: During the estimates of my ministry last November, I indicated I was reviewing the Dow Chemical case in an attempt to bring this matter to a reasonable conclusion in the best interests of all concerned. I further stated in the House on March 3 that the fishermen, who were the persons most affected by the mercury pollution, should have the opportunity to settle their claims. At the same time, I should point out that the government's action did not include the claims of the individual fishermen who were separately represented.

Dow Chemical of Canada Limited has now settled the claims of the fishermen and has obtained releases from them. In view of the fact that the fishermen have now settled their claims—

Mr. Warner: You haven't settled one claim in Erie county.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—I have accepted the recommendation of Mr. J. J. Robinette, QC—

Mr. Warner: You haven't got one penny.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—who has been handling the litigation for the government, that the case against Dow Chemical Company of Canada Limited should not be continued further.

Mr. Nixon: Did you ask his advice before you started?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is my view that there have been substantial benefits achieved by the institution and prosecution of this action.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense; you have achieved nothing.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would like to review briefly—

Mr. Foulds: Louder, louder.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—the history of the initial discovery of mercury pollution—

Mr. Nixon: You can't win this one.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—the benefits which have been achieved as a result of the commencing of the action, and the facts on which the recommendation of Mr. Robinette is based.

A recognition of the likely cause of poisoning from eating fish contaminated with mercury first occurred in Sweden.

Mr. Kerrio: You might have given the fishermen your lawyers' fees,

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In the late 1960s, Swedish scientists determined that inorganic forms of metallic mercury were being converted to methyl mercury, a highly toxic form of mercury, by bacterial action in bottom sediments of lakes and rivers. They showed, also, that the methyl mercury was being concentrated in fish and other organisms in the water.

The significance of the Swedish studies initially was either not appreciated by or brought to the attention of regulatory authorities in Canada and the United States or the operators of chloralkali plants in Canada and the United States.

Mr. Roy: Another PR exercise down the drain.

Mr. Kerrio: You'd better get to the polls before you lose everything.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: When this information did come to the attention of the Ontario Water Resources Commission in 1969, an intensive program was started immediately—

Mr. Kerrio: You might have divided the legal fees among the fishermen.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —to determine which industries were using and discharging significant amounts of mercury in their wastes. The pulp and paper mills and chloralkali plants were known to be using mercury in their processes. These were examined first and the government ordered these companies to take immediate steps to reduce mercury losses to the environment.

One of the largest of the chloralkali companies was Dow Chemical of Canada Limited which operated two plants in the Sarnia area and used large quantities of mercury. The Dow plants were surveyed in August and September of 1969 and instructions were given to the company on the need to make changes in operational procedures to substantially reduce losses of mercury which had been discharged since Dow began chloralkali production in 1949.

Fish samples were collected from the St. Clair River and Lake St. Clair for mercury analysis. Results of the analysis, which indicated high levels of mercury in the fish, were first obtained in March 1970. At that time an order was given to the chloralkali and pulp and paper companies to eliminate mercury losses to the environment. Shortly thereafter, Dow had reduced its mercury discharge to the St. Clair River from in excess of 30 pounds a day to less than one pound a day. Mercury is no longer used at Dow's Sarnia plants. At a cost of some $40 million the company has converted to other processes which do not use mercury.

Very little was known in North America about the methylation of mercury and methyl mercury in fish prior to the late 1960s. As a result of the commencement of this action, research in this area has occurred at an intensive level.

Mr. S. Smith: You sure scared them.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: One beneficial result has been an increased knowledge of mercury and its effect on the aquatic environment, and the development of a high level of analytical expertise by scientists of the Ministry of the Environment laboratory here in Toronto.

Mr. Nixon: They haven't been able to get rid of much of it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This expertise is invaluable in dealing not only with mercury pollution—

Mr. Roy: Where's Darcy, Roy?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —but also in determining the effects of other heavy metal pollutants on the environment.

Mr. S. Smith: Had it not been for that lawsuit I suppose there would have been no research.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Furthermore, as a result of this government's action regarding Dow Chemical of Canada Limited—

Mr. McClellan: George Kerr didn't know about it.

Mr. Foulds: Where is George Kerr today?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —other industries faced with a mercury problem have been required to accelerate pollution control measures. For example, of the six mercury-cell chloralkali plants operating in Ontario in 1970, only one remains in operation today. This plant, at Cornwall, has developed its processes and controls to the point where it is consistently satisfying federal discharge regulations, which are the applicable regulations in that area. In addition, the Dow action has resulted in publicity concerning the toxicity of mercury compounds in fish throughout the St. Clair system and in other areas of Ontario. It is reasonable to assume that this publicity has protected the health of persons who might otherwise have eaten larger amounts of fish from that area.

Mr. S. Smith: And a $35-million lawsuit.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In the initial stages of the mercury problem, and at the time the action was started, the gloomy forecast was the possibility that the fisheries would be closed for at least 50 years and perhaps for ever.

However, the continued monitoring of mercury levels in fish in the St. Clair system has provided encouraging results. A report issued by the Ministry of the Environment in May 1977, entitled The Decline in Mercury Concentration in Fish from St. Clair, 1970-1976, concludes as follows:

"The mercury concentrations in all species of fish from Lake St. Clair have declined significantly since 1970. In general, the concentration of mercury in fish from Lake St. Clair is less than half of what it was in 1970.

"If present trends continue, most common sizes of most species should have mercury levels below the current federal guideline of 0.5 ppm within the next five years.

"The application of stringent controls on the Dow Chemical Company's chloralkali plant in Sarnia by the MOE . . . in 1970 and the subsequent decline in mercury available for biosynthesis, along with the transport of mercury-laden sediments out of the St. Clair system by natural processes, has been responsible for the decline observed in mercury concentrations in fish."

Mr. Robinette, who as the members know is one of Canada's most eminent trial counsel—

Mr. Nixon: Why didn't you ask him before you got started with the action?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —has indicated that the Dow Chemical case is the most complicated civil action in which he has been involved.

An hon. member: He says that all the time.

Mr. S. Smith: That usually indicates a very big bill.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In the light of the encouraging report in the decline in mercury in fish, and in view of the settlement of the claims of the individual fishermen, I recently reviewed with Mr. Robinette the advisability of proceeding to a trial which would be very protracted and enormously expensive.

Mrs. Campbell: How long has this been going on?

Mr. Kerrio: It's $1 million later that you're talking about.

Mr. S. Smith: Another seven years.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Robinette's opinion in relation to the legal aspects of the case is briefly as follows: Although there is evidence of poor control of wastes in Dow's operation prior to 1969, there does not appear to be any evidence of negligence—

Mr. Sargent: The Attorney General is giving them a licence to pollute.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —or lack of desire or purpose on the part of Dow's management to control waste following the revelation of the mercury problem to Dow in the summer and fall of 1969. Dow apparently became aware of the problem of methylation of mercury in sediments and the creation of toxic methyl mercury in fish by May 1969, at a meeting with the Ontario Water Resources Commission staff. The question, of course, is whether Dow should have appreciated, prior to 1969, that it was dangerous to discharge metallic mercury in the St. Clair River.

Mr. S. Smith: That's not the question. The question is the damage to the fisheries.

Mr. Rotenberg: Wait for the question period, Stuart.

Mr. Turner: You're a great doctor, but not much of a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Although there had been European studies prior to 1969 with respect to the methylation of mercury and its buildup as methyl mercury in fish, these studies were apparently not known either to regulatory authorities in North America or the chloralkali industries, including Dow.

Mr. S. Smith: The Attorney General will put them out of business by doing what he is doing.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Research into the toxic effects of mercury by the Chlorine Institute, which was initiated by the late 1950s, dealt almost entirely with the effects of mercury vapour on health. When Dow became aware of the methylation problem, it acted quickly to rectify the loss of mercury into the St. Clair River and, as previously indicated, has spent $40 million to alleviate the problem of mercury pollution.

Mr. S. Smith: That's the least they could do.

Mrs. Campbell: Would it have been different if they had spent only $4 million?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Robinette's opinion is that the government's case against Dow, based on negligence, is weak simply because until 1969 the danger of discharging mercury into the St. Clair River was not known by either the chloralkali industries or the regulatory authorities in Canada or the United States.

On the claim of nuisance, the theory of the government's case is that any person who discharges any foreign substance into waters does so at his risk, and there is some authority to support this proposition. On the other hand, there are other authorities which indicate that the foreseeability of harmful consequences is relevant to liability based on nuisance. As to liability based on nuisance, Mr. Robinette advises that the government has a reasonably arguable case but by no means a clear one.

Mr. Robinette's unequivocal recommendation is to discontinue the action against Dow Chemical.

[10:15]

Mr. S. Smith: It took him eight years to give you that opinion?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It is based on the very substantial cost of continuing this action, the uncertainty as to certain evidentiary and legal problems, the encouraging reports of the decline of mercury levels in fish, and most important, the fact that the fishermen who are the persons most affected by mercury pollution have settled their claims on the advice of their own legal counsel.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, sure.

Mr. Kerrio: The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) is right beside you, he will make it retroactive for you.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am advised that the settlement by Dow to the fishermen amounted to a quarter of a million dollars, and as well, Dow has agreed to make a payment of $150,000 to the Ontario government towards the cost of continuing studies of water quality in the Great Lakes—

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, dear me.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—which as a matter of interest, exceeds the legal and consultant disbursements incurred by the government.

Mr. Bradley: Conscience money.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As Attorney General, I had to consider the benefits which the case has accomplished—and these are considerable—the settlement of the claims of the fishermen—

Mr. S. Smith: You sold them down the St. Clair River.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry:—and the advice received from one of Canada's most distinguished legal counsel related to the substantial cost of the trial with the probability of appeals lasting for several more years before a final determination would be made.

Mr. S. Smith: It was your idea.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It should also be pointed out that, in the context of the benefits accomplished by litigation, the fact that counsel is of the opinion the government's provable damages would not exceed $1 million even if totally successful and the costs of a lengthy trial plus appeals with an uncertain outcome, did not warrant the expenditure.

Mr. Mackenzie: You should have done that five years ago.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: These considerations resulted in my conclusion that the continuation of the action against Dow Chemical of Canada Limited would serve no further useful purpose and, therefore, the action will be discontinued.

In summary, the substantial benefits achieved by this action are as follows:

One, the intensive level of research which has increased our knowledge of mercury and its effect on the aquatic environment.

Two, the development of a high level of analytical and statistical expertise by scientists in the Ministry of the Environment laboratory.

Three, the development of a data base for mercury in fish in Ontario which would otherwise not have been obtained and which will be invaluable in determining the effects of other heavy metal pollutants and organic compounds on the environment; plus the payment of $150,000 to the further study of water pollution.

Four, other industries faced with mercury problems and other pollution problems, as a result of our action have accelerated pollution control measures to the point of eliminating completely the use of mercury or severely curtailing the discharge.

Mr. Warner: If Dow played hockey you would get tough with them.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Five, Dow Chemical of Canada Limited shut down its plant in Thunder Bay, Ontario, and has eliminated completely the use of mercury from its chloralkali plants at Sarnia at a cost, as I have already mentioned, of some $40 million.

Mrs. Campbell: Say that again?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Forty million dollars.

Six, the action has enhanced publicity concerning the toxicity of mercury compounds and has had a beneficial effect of pointing out the dangers to persons who eat contaminated fish.

Seven, there has been a progressive and substantial decline in the mercury levels in all species of Lake St. Clair fish studied.

Mr. S. Smith: Thanks to the lawsuit.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's right, thanks to the lawsuit. And it is estimated that within five years the most common sizes of most species will have mercury levels below the current federal guidelines.

Mr. Breihaupt: Did they ever tell you a story.

Mr. S. Smith: Must have given you a high profile to the environmentalists.

Mr. Peterson: Who wrote that for you, Roy?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I wish to inform the house—

Mr. Roy: Try to pick up the pieces around here, Frank.

Mr. Turner: Did you miss your train, Albert?

Mr. Speaker: When the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) finish their little tête-à-tête, we will listen to the Minister of Correctional Services.

Mr. Conway: The Premier read Norman Webster and he's not happy.

PAYMENT BY INMATES

Hon. Mr. Drea: I wish to inform the House that it is the intention of my ministry to require persons serving intermittent sentences to pay a portion of the cost of housing them in correctional institutions.

At the present time approximately 425 individuals a week are serving intermittent sentences in correctional institutions. More than half of this number are being accommodated at the Mimico Correctional Centre, with the remainder being held in jails and detention centres across the province. Many of these individuals have been convicted of alcohol-related offences, such as impaired driving. They have been permitted by the judiciary to remain in the community in order to work at gainful employment during the week. They complete their sentences on the installment plan by spending consecutive weekends at correctional facilities until the total sentence has been satisfied.

As honourable members will be aware under the ministry's temporary absence programs, carefully selected inmates are also permitted to work at gainful employment in a community during the day, returning at night to a correctional facility. Participants in the temporary absence program help to support their families, pay taxes and are required to pay $35 a week towards the cost of maintaining them in an institution.

In most instances where intermittent sentences have been handed down by the courts, the main reason for allowing the person to remain at home during the week is to protect him or her from losing a job. It is my contention the person granted the opportunity to serve an intermittent sentence in order to retain a paying job should be treated in the same way as the inmate granted temporary absence to work at gainful employment. In other words, the person on intermittent sentence should be required to contribute toward his board in a correctional facility.

Effective July 7, all offenders serving intermittent sentences will be required to pay $5 for each full day served in an institution or $10 for the weekend. An exception will be made for full-time students attending secondary schools, colleges and universities. They will not be required to contribute toward their board.

This new policy is in keeping with the ministry's desire to see offenders accept responsibility and to provide relief to the hard-pressed taxpayer who must bear the cost of operating correctional institutions. It is anticipated that this practice will bring in approximately $200,000 a year. This policy is also designed to complement other legislation being introduced by the government to deter drinking drivers.

In short, the days of the free ride are over and it's now pay as you go.

Mr. Roy: Was that a free ride to Brampton last night?

ORAL QUESTIONS

DOW CHEMICAL

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the Attorney General regarding this dreadful settlement which has been imposed on the fishermen of Lake St. Clair.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That is nonsense.

Mr. Foulds: What do you do if they don't pay? Lock them up?

Mr. Roy: That's what they said. They said you threw in the towel.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The difficulty with the Leader of the Opposition is that he can't determine from day to day whether he is John Barrymore or Hamlet. What has Harold Greer decreed today?

An hon. member: You scuttled their claims, you didn't settle them.

Mr. Foulds: On a point of order, he is Lady Macbeth.

Mr. S. Smith: I think I would prefer Hamlet because I have detected something rotten in the state of Denmark.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Don't involve us with Denmark, we have enough problems. Take an interest here, never mind Denmark.

Mr. S. Smith: It smells a bit like rotten fish.

Could the Attorney General answer some questions?

On page nine of this carefully printed and very expensive retreat he said: "Counsel is of the opinion that the government's provable damages would not exceed $1 million." It is my understanding that the government sued for $35 million. Do I take it that $35 million was a number picked out of the air? Was it simply achieved at random? Was it designed for a maximum impact with environmental groups?

What did the $35 million mean, if counsel thinks the only provable damages were $1 million?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The provable damages today as compared to the time the action commenced may or may not be two very different things. Of the $35 million, $10 million was the estimated cost of dredging the bed of the lakes and river. Everybody agrees now that although that was probably something that should be considered as a possible cost at that time, it would be most unwise to expend that $10 million, but it was included in the original claim—

Mr. Roy: That is not what the then minister (Mr. Kerr) said in 1972. He said we were going to dredge it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —as it should properly have been included. As I also indicated in the statement, the original forecast for that body of water was very gloomy. Originally, it was anticipated that it would be at least 50 years before the water would be returned to the state where it would be safe to eat the fish. As I indicated in the report of March 1976, the original gloomy forecasts proved to be unnecessarily so. As a result of actions taken the forecast is a much more optimistic one. As I said, it would be within five years. Consequently, the damages are substantially less.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Even by the minister's own figures the fishery has been destroyed for some 13 to 15 years before we can even hope that it might return. The fishermen have been without a livelihood during that time. How could the minister possibly encourage them to settle for a quarter of a million dollars, $5,000 per fisherman per year? What is he able to do now for these fishermen to help them to relocate in other industries? Is he going to meet the millions of dollars that basically have been lost as a consequence of this whole industry going down the drain due to pollution? Whether they knew anything about mercury or not is surely not the issue; they have destroyed an industry.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: They didn't. Most of what the Leader of the Opposition has said in his question is simply not factual. First of all, we did not encourage or put any pressure on the fishermen to settle. As a matter of fact, the solicitor for the majority, I think 35 out of 37 of the fishermen involved, Mr. Leon McPherson in Windsor, had advised the association of fishermen some time ago that he didn't think they had a provable case in court.

Mr. Renwick: That they couldn't afford it, either.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In fact, as recently as this morning he has advised my office that if it hadn't been for the fact that we had kept our action outstanding, the quarter-million dollars that his clients received would, in his view, not have been obtained in court.

Ms. Gigantes: Some law, eh?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That happens to be his view and that happens to be factual.

Mr. Nixon: It's not factual if that is only what he thinks.

Mr. Roy: The lawyer said you threw in the towel.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The other lawyer who is quoted in the press, a Mr. Taylor, had commenced an action on behalf of two of the fishermen, and it was his choice to settle.

Mr. Roy: He said you threw in the towel. You let him down again.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: If anybody threw in the towel, I am sorry, it was his decision whether to continue or not.

Mr. Roy: It was the government.

Mr. S. Smith: Why did you drop the suit, then? Why have you dropped the suit?

Mr. Renwick: I was really quite amazed this morning when the Attorney General was shouting at us. It reminded me of the saying of the bishop who leads the black nationalist movement in Rhodesia about "a toothless dog barking loudest."

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Is that what we are going to hear now?

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question, will the Attorney General do two things for me: Will he now admit the total inadequacy of the laws of the province of Ontario to protect persons who suffer damage by the activities of such companies as Dow Chemical; and will he table each and every legal opinion, internal or external, that his ministry has ever received on this question since it was originally instituted?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The answer to the first question is that I will certainly not make any such admission, because it would be totally misleading to do so. Secondly, the most comprehensive legal opinion, that is in writing was received from Mr. Robinette. I might say that when the member's kissing cousins in Ottawa are in trouble, he's the fellow they invariably turn to.

Mr. S. Smith: The polluter must pay.

Mr. Nixon: Talk about a toothless dog.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what our distinguished guests are going to think of the performance of these people. They might appreciate why they have been in the wilderness for so long.

Mr. Nixon: They are not going to think much of you.

Mr. Stong: They are not as naive as you think they are.

Mr. Sargent: They will appreciate how arrogant you are.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I had a letter from Mr. Robinette last fall that I think includes all of the relevant legal advice—

Mr. S. Smith: This has been going on for eight years. What about earlier opinions?
[10:30]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Will you just be quiet for a moment, please?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The Leader of the Opposition has had the original question and a supplementary.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In order to assist my friend from Riverdale I am happy to provide him with a copy of this legal opinion—or, indeed, the members of the House.

Mr. S. Smith: That is not what he asked for.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary to the minister: In view of the fact that over the years I understand there have been very substantial donations to the Conservative fund by Dow Chemical—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Nonsense.

Mr. Sargent:—I would like to ask the minister—I would suggest to him that the fee for Mr. Robinette was more than the fine. What was Mr. Robinette's fee?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The total legal fee charged by Mr. Robinette was something just under $15,000.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's what you make, Albert, in a day in Ottawa.

Mr. Roy: Fifteen thousand dollars? You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Foulds: I wonder if the Attorney General could let us know—would you just be quiet for a few minutes, please?—could he let us know if, as a representative of his government, he is satisfied that the settlements arrived at by the fishermen through their own process, separate from the government, is a satisfactory one in terms of the amounts of damage they have lost from their livelihood?

Is the government giving any further consideration to giving additional compensation to those fishermen in view of the totally inadequate amounts they have arrived at? Finally, could I ask the Attorney General why he has estimated that the recoverable amounts are less because the dredging of the river bottom and the lake is considered inappropriate when his government and the federal government have recently come to an agreement to explore that very same possibility in the English-Wabigoon River system?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The answer to the last question first: That is the advice that we have from the environmentalists, that it would be inappropriate.

Mr. Foulds: Why is it inappropriate?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Secondly, so far as the wisdom of the settlements of the fishermen who are separately represented is concerned, it would be most improper of me, as the Attorney General, to second-guess or comment on the legal advice they received from their own counsel.

Mr. Mackenzie: It would be appropriate to see justice done.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It would be highly improper for me to do so. I can repeat what I've already said about Mr. McPherson's opinion that pending any final resolution of our action, he assisted his clients in recovering an additional $250,000 which, in his view, they would not have recovered had they proceeded to court. And there was some $500,000 in forgivable loans received by the fishermen who were affected, from this government I believe, and approximately an equal amount from the federal government.

Mr. Roy: If I may ask the Attorney General, who's just furnished us an opinion which I have just started reading, dated October 19, 1977, from J. J. Robinette: Accepting the fact, and without being derogatory at all to the government's counsel, and accepting his competence and his wisdom back in October 1977, how is it, in view of this opinion, that the government would launch a $35 million suit without having obtained comprehensive legal opinion? Did the government have an opinion at the time it launched this action in 1971 or was it merely a PR exercise?

This opinion talks of $10 million to dredge the river, which appears to be something that is unwise now. Can the minister explain the statements of the then Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) back in 1971-72 in telling this Legislature that the $10 million was needed to dredge the river—and that's what they were going to do?

I'd finally like to ask the Attorney General, in view of this opinion in 1977 and his statement here today, isn't it obvious that when the Premier made statements back in 1971 that they were serious and weren't fooling with pollution, that that was basically a PR exercise?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'd just reply that's total nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's exactly it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: It may be for partisan political purposes—

Mr. Nixon: That's why it started.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —partisan and to some extent mindless—you might understand that word, "mindless"—that I reviewed in some detail what has been accomplished by the institution of the lawsuit. To try to tie in the settlement of the fishermen and the further contribution of Dow as the only result produced by this litigation is just nonsense.

Mr. Breithaupt: We didn't say that.

Mr. S. Smith: You should. Did you have the legal opinion when you started? That's the question.

Mr. Roy: Did you have the legal opinion?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I've set out in some detail the benefits obtained by this litigation—

Mr. Warner: Say it right out. It's a failure. You blew the whole thing.

Mrs. Campbell: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —and these benefits have been very substantial, very substantial.

Mr. Roy: Did he have the legal opinion when he started?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Of course, we had legal opinions.

Mr. Roy: Let's see it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition with his second question.

Mr. Roy: You wouldn't table that opinion in 1971, eh?

An hon. member: Did you miss your plane, Albert?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No.

Mr. S. Smith: It took six years to get a proper legal opinion?

Mr. Roy: It's obvious, it was a PR exercise.

Mr. S. Smith: Table the earlier one.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Leader of the Opposition have a second question?

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, I have a question. I will venture back into the area of energy, if I might. I have a question of the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Nixon: Did you ever see the Tories looking worse?

Mr. Roy: We're not fooling around these days.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I suspect you are.

Mr. S. Smith: Could the minister explain why Hydro allowed the pooling agreement with AECL to go by the boards? Let me amplify that slightly because I don't want to get into the problem we had yesterday

Understanding there might have been an increase in the price of heavy water, because of the inefficient plants from elsewhere that would be part of the pool, nonetheless, is it the minister's opinion that, had we stayed in the pooling arrangement, we would at least have had a guaranteed buyer for our heavy water? Was the reason for getting out of the pooling arrangement, and giving up that option, simply one of price or does it relate back to the opinion given in 1974 by Hydro that it was "unsuccessful" in its attempt to ensure supply by the extension of the agreement?

In other words, was it just a question of price, or was it the fear that by staying in the pool our heavy water would go into the pool but then we wouldn't be able to get it back for our generators? Which one was it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It was something of both. We should recall that in the heavy water production program in this country, as in other countries, through the—

Mr. Mackenzie: You've toned it down. Somebody must have talked to you last night.

Mr. McClellan: Be your usual unpleasant self.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —through the 1960s and the early 1970s, the overriding concern was shortage. There was a real fear that there would not be enough heavy water produced.

Mr. Mackenzie: It's simply because the House leader is back.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There were very few plants in the world producing it and those which had been established were showing very poor performance, as we indicated yesterday. The overriding characteristic in the pooling agreement that evolved out of the 1960s and terminated in December 1977 was concern that there would not be enough heavy water for Ontario Hydro's own purposes. I suppose they felt they had to protect themselves first.

It was also, as you have indicated, a matter of cost. Ontario Hydro felt they could produce for less than the others and if they pooled their heavy water they were going to have to pay the average cost which, of course, was higher. Those were really the two reasons.

My impression, in talking with the officials of Hydro and with Atomic Energy of Canada, is there was a consensus that the agreement should be allowed to terminate. It was only set for a decade anyway. The whole thrust now, as we have tried to do in our statement and as we have tried to point out in our submission to the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is that we are going into a new phase, a new stage. We now know that we can produce heavy water and produce it efficiently. What we are looking forward to is an integrated, comprehensive rational, national heavy water production and marketing scheme.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We are in a new era with a new look and we are trying to push this thing forward. With the tremendous advantage of hindsight, it is always easy at this point to say: "Why didn't you make arrangements to get on with this two years ago or a year and a half ago?"

Ms. Gigantes: Last year.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: With the advantage of hindsight, it is easy to criticize but at that point that's not the way the situation looked.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, given the fact, as the minister says, of the advantage of hindsight, it looks as though we gave up a guaranteed market and have a situation where we are now going to find ourselves in serious surplus supply. We gave that up in favour of security of our own supply as well as certain price considerations. Clearly the wisdom of that decision can only be judged, as he says, with hindsight and knowing what the premises were at the time the decision was made.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question yet.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, this is a difficult issue. I am getting to it.

Hon. W. Newman: You still make statements every day.

Mr. Speaker: You still should be able to know how to ask a question.

Mr. S. Smith: I know how to ask a question but this is a pretty complex issue.

Mr. MacDonald: You go on for 10 minutes and we are cut off after half a line.

Mr. Roy: That proves you don't know how to ask a question.

Mr. S. Smith: The question, therefore, is why does the minister feel there are bits of information available to him now about the surplus possibilities that were not available to Hydro when it made the decision in the first place, given the fact that there has been no change in the number of reactors planned since at least February 1976? Surely the surplus situation must have been obvious then, had they bothered to look at it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think perhaps it might be useful if I were to repeat two sentences out of the letter of April 14 from the chairman of the board of Hydro to me which was tabled in this House. This talks about their forecast or their view of the possible shortages of heavy water. It is very vague, I can tell the honourable members.

I am reading here from his April 14, 1978, letter to me. I will read the whole paragraph so that we will understand it better. "For the most part this letter has dealt with the consequences of the load forecast on generation programs up to 1987, but it is also necessary to deal with the consequences after that date"—after Darlington, in other words, is on stream. "An analysis of the modifications that may be required is now in progress." I had a report of this yesterday. They are now going through their detailed analyses.

He continues: "These will involve considerable revision to the in-service dates for uncommitted generating stations"—in other words, those generating stations that at one time were foreseen to come on stream or to be built after 1987—"as well as in the amount of heavy water that will be required." In other words, this whole thing looks beyond 1987.

There were at one time three or four generating stations planned. Among them, there were probably three or four nuclear stations. There is a big question now as to whether, after Darlington comes on stream, there will be one or none or three; or whatever. We don't know. If there is a cutback at that time, and that study is going on right at this moment—

Ms. Gigantes: If there is a cutback, how long does it take you to see it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—obviously it has implications for heavy water requirements after 1987.

Ms. Gigantes: That's the answer?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can't really give more details at this point because that study is still under way. We are going to be getting it, I hope, in a few weeks' time.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Isn't it true that the plans for generation of heavy water were based on a plan for installation of nuclear generating stations that had a new nuclear station being in place and on stream every 15 months into the future? Wouldn't that have made Hydro and the Ministry of Energy suspicious long before now about the production of heavy water?

Regarding the minister's outline of the position to be taken with the federal government, in our attempts to shuffle our way back into some pooling arrangement for marketing heavy water, if the federal government doesn't agree, what bite is there to the minister's bark? Or else what, Mr. Minister? [10:45]

Mr. Roy: We all know he's a paper tiger anyway.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You should go back to your law practice. It's going bankrupt, I hear.

Mr. Roy: You don't like it when I'm around, eh?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I hear you're in financial trouble, Albert.

Mr. Yakabuski: He's always up there on Friday, anyway. I don't know why he's playing hookey today.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You'd better get back home.

Mr. MacDonald: You'd do better to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Please, I'm trying to answer the member for Carleton East.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Just answer the question.

Mr. Roy: What a display.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Up until now, Ontario Hydro has never considered the possibility of selling heavy water, overseas or in Canada, on its own, without going through Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Ms. Gigantes: What about the schedule?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: However, there is no law to say they cannot do it.

Mr. Foulds: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It could well be that unless we get the support from the parties opposite, the federal government may take a very hard line and say, "No, the La Prade plant is going to supply the heavy water for export."

Mr. Roy: And you will run back here.

Mr. Mackenzie: In other words, you have no teeth.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We may find ourselves in a somewhat difficult situation.

Ms. Gigantes: You're going to need that support.

Mr. Roy: That's right. All bark and no bite.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: However, the point I was trying to make yesterday is that if we stand together in this House—even your kissing cousins—

Mr. J. Reed: This is the worst blunder in the history of Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —I would suspect the federal government would not dare to say Ontario Hydro cannot export heavy water and that only La Prade will do that. Once the party opposite hears from its trade union members that they may lose their jobs in Ontario, then I suspect that it too will support us. Okay?

Mr. Mackenzie: You've got terminal senility over there.

Mr. J. Reed: The minister has stated that the reasoning for ploughing ahead at the time was there were no other organizations in North America that had the capability. It would appear on pages eight and nine—

Interjection.

Mr. J. Reed: —that in 1974 the Ontario Energy Board had advised an independent review of the heavy water supply requirements and Hydro had responded that it was not necessary, for the reasons outlined by the minister at that time.

I would like to ask the minister if there has ever been an independent review of the heavy water requirements, and if so, would the minister tell us when it was done and table it?

Ms. Gigantes: No, there was none.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Other than the Ontario Energy Board having taken a look at it, and the select committee which has, I suppose, taken a cursory look at it, there has not been an independent review.

Ms. Gigantes: I rang the alarm bells four years ago.

Hon. W. Newman: Oh, stop that over there.

Ms. Gigantes: Four years ago we were ringing the alarm bells.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I wouldn't rule out this possibility at all. As a matter of fact, the one thing we suggested to the federal minister in a letter of a few weeks ago was the time had come for us here in Canada—

Ms. Gigantes: It's passed. It's passed. The horses have gone.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —to take a very systematic and close look at the whole question of heavy water production and marketing. The time has come for such a review and I support it 100 per cent, but we're moving into a different and a new era.

Mr. Mackenzie: You're a disaster.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur with his first question.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, there are thousands of jobs in my riding affected here and I want to speak on it.

Mr. Speaker: We've spent 24 minutes on the first two questions.

Mr. Sargent: Thousands of jobs and he makes it look like peanuts.

Mr. Yakabuski: Welcome back, Eddie.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a feeling that it is Friday morning and things are a bit fractious. I'd like to ask the Minister of Energy a new question with regard to—

Mr. S. Smith: Darcy doesn't even know what he's talking about.

Hon. W. Newman: What side of the fence are you on, Stuart?

Mr. Nixon: You don't believe that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. W. Newman: Oh, come on, Stuart.

Mr. S. Smith: How about discounts?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. S. Smith: Never heard of them.

Mr. Speaker: We've been from 10:20 to 10:49 on two questions.

Mr. Sargent: We should take all day on this one.

Mr. Speaker: That isn't a fair allocation of the question period, having regard for the interests of all members.

The member for Port Arthur with his first question, without interruption, please.

RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Energy a new question with regard to his statement on Monday about nuclear waste disposal.

Can the minister indicate whether there is a formal, signed agreement between the federal and provincial governments, or whether there are letters of understanding, and would he be willing to table those documents, or what documentation does exist? I ask that question in view of the fact that members of the Geophysical and Geological Association of Canada have indicated that the two-year period that is set aside in the timetable in his statement for the examination of the rock of the 1,600 sites is totally inadequate in terms of examining the properties of that rock, because much of it has never been examined at all. Would that elongate the timetable for that part of the program? Would he consider that and does that affect the total program?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: First of all, to answer the first part first—

Mr. McClellan: Why not just answer it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —the joint statement serves as the basis of our agreement, and there is an exchange of letters of understanding; they're very brief.

Mr. Foulds: Will the minister table them?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As far as the second part of the one question is concerned, the observations made by members of the geological society, or geophysical society, was it?

Ms. Gigantes: Geophysical, it is called. Get to know them.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think the honourable member is referring to a report that appeared in the press this morning or yesterday. I think it emanated from Thunder Bay. That's where they had a meeting, apparently.

Of course, I have not seen the full text of that statement but, as we go ahead in this program, I would not only think but I encourage and make sure that scientific bodies like that are consulted and that their points of view are made known. I think that the scientists who will be working for us in this with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, with our ministry, and with Ontario Hydro, should be in touch with other scientists in the country—

Ms. Gigantes: Paid scientists—paid by the nuclear industry.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —but I think it's rather dangerous, on the basis of one press statement, to assume that is what the scientists did say. I'd like to see the full text.

Ms. Gigantes: They are objective.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In connection with that, the other day we were talking at length about this report that came out from the United States Geological Survey, and it was quoted as if it were holy writ. I now have a copy of it. It is rather interesting to see that the preface says: "Because the authors are confident that acceptable geological repositories can be constructed, this paper should not be construed as an attempt to discredit the concept of geological containment"—

Mr. J. Reed: Go on and read the rest.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'll read the rest, sure—"or the work done in the 1960s and early 1970s. However, the earth science problems associated with the disposal of radioactive wastes are not simple, nor are they completely understood. The main weaknesses in geological knowledge noted in this report warrant a conservative approach"—which is what we're getting in our whole plan, and I'm not playing with words there—

Mr. Kerrio: We know what we're getting.

Mr. J. Reed: That's what I asked for.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—"a conservative approach to the development of geological repositories in any medium." That's our whole concept. That's the way we're approaching this subject.

Mr. J. Reed: It is not complete and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Anyway, I can only promise the member opposite that the views of these scientists that have been expressed are going to be fully explored; we will meet with them, and if they can convince our scientists that they have a point, then I think we can adjust our program.

Ms. Gigantes: Your scientists are paid by the nuclear industry.

Mr. Foulds: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would it not be fair to ask the minister if he could table the evidence that he has and that has been given to him, that the two-year period is a sufficient period? Does he not think that in a matter as controversial as this it would be much better to do as I believe has been recommended by the AECB in recent months, and as was one of the Flowers recommendations with regard to the process in Britain: have the research done by an independent body such as possibly the Geophysical and Geological Association, rather than having it done by AECL, which—and I don't want to use a pejorative term—does have a vested interest in that it is a producer and exporter along with Ontario Hydro?

Mr. Warner: Just say yes.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will certainly have any relevant material tabled, because basic to the success of this whole exercise is full disclosure and public discussion of all documents and all aspects and sides to the story.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, in view of the unbelievable revelations that the competitive heavy water plant in Quebec, La Prade, now under construction, could cancel the hundreds of millions of dollars—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The original question dealt with the disposal of nuclear waste. If you have a supplementary along that line, would you please put it.

Mr. Sargent: No, I don't.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker. I would just like to ask the minister when is he going to table the documents and make full disclosure? We expected to have, for instance, the tabling of the document on the pooling agreement today. Where is it? Where are all these documents?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The pooling agreement document is already a public document. It was filed with the Ontario Energy Board hearing a few years ago, so it is available there.

Mr. J. Reed: You promised to table it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: However, in response to the member's request yesterday, which I have dutifully tried to follow through on, I did have a copy of the pool agreement in my office this morning and I was about to bring it over and table it just for him, for his weekend reading. Then I found one of the attachments was missing, and I surely did not want to have the member feel that I was tampering with these documents. So I hope he will get that document on Monday.

Mr. Foulds: Final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the minister is not prepared—I wasn't quite sure from his answer—if he is not prepared to go the full route and have an independent agency do the research plan that is outlined, is he prepared, in view of some of the mistakes that we have seen, with hindsight, made by Hydro and AECL, to find some additional government funding for groups such as the geological association to do independent research, which, in fact, would be well spent in terms of allaying fears? I am particularly curious about the research that might be done not only about the drilling but the transportation, which I understand is Ontario's responsibility under the agreement according to a statement and which—

Mr. Speaker: The question is too long.

Mr. Foulds:—Hydro has not been involved in.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the honourable member opposite would understand that because there are really two partners in this now, the federal government and the provincial government, it would be premature for me in this House at this moment to give a direct yes or no answer to his request. I think in fairness to our partner we have to discuss this question with them, but certainly I will convey to them the point he has been making here and take a look at the appropriateness and the feasibility of it.

CENSORED FILMS

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a Friday morning question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I wonder if the minister could confirm statements made in an article called Snip, Snip, Drool, Drool, by Rone Base in Quest magazine about an agency that comes under the minister's jurisdiction, the Ontario film censor board? Could he confirm the practice that the board makes a film from all of the clippings that it has excerpted for film showing in Ontario, and could he indicate what the purpose of such a film is? Do they update it from year to year, and who is invited to view it?

Mr. Kerrio: How much does it cost to see it?

[11:00]

Mr. Breithaupt: It is a training film.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The rumour was that it was made for the annual press Christmas party for the members of the assembly but I should disabuse you of that hope. I haven't seen it. It is put together, I am told, from some pieces that were snipped out of movies from time to time in order I think to permit those who question the good works of the censor board and the need to have some sort of censor role in this province to have some idea of the things that would get through and would be shown on the screens in the event we didn't have that function. I know from time to time certain members of the media, and I think before I got here certain members of the assembly, were invited out to the censor board to have a look at that outtake. It is still there and we would be happy to arrange for some members to go out and view that—also some members of the press, as has been done previously in order to get some idea of what this dialogue is all about.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What is the cost of producing this film and do the facilities supply popcorn and cold showers?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Louis Malle was not invited to put together the next clip. It's simply a process by which they take, off the floor of the projectionist's room, the pieces they have snipped out and then splice them together so it is absolutely at no cost. They simply pick it off the floor, save the costs of disposal and splice them together and just put them on a roll. So there's no cost. I am told, by the way, that a high percentage of those people who have viewed it have had to leave the room—not to use the regular facilities, they just haven't been able to stomach what was going on there. Hence I have chosen not to see it myself although over the summer I am thinking about it.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's not a training film?

OWEN SOUND HOSPITAL TRANSFER

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on May 30, 1978, the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) stated in the House it was his understanding regarding the transfer of the Dr. MacKinnon Phillips Hospital in Owen Sound that the agreement of transfer included the condition that no existing program will be discontinued or altered without consultation with the Ministry of Health. The honourable member also asked if I was aware that the department of psychiatry at Owen Sound General and Marine Hospital plans to or has already discontinued the free drug program for psychiatric outpatients and did they consult with my ministry before making a change.

The honourable member's understanding of the agreement is correct. By the terms of this agreement a condition exists which states that the hospital shall not delete, remove or modify any existing program unless instructed to do so by the province or unless prior consent is obtained in writing from the province.

My staff inform me that the free drug program has been modified. It has not been discontinued. This modification was instituted after the amalgamation and was a medical decision instituted by the director of psychiatry at the Owen Sound General and Marine Hospital in consultation with the medical staff of that facility and the public health nurses of Grey-Bruce counties. The previous procedure involved attending physicians in the community submitting prescriptions for refilling. Additionally every outpatient on free medication had their drug program reviewed by a psychiatrist every six months. The new procedure will ensure that all prescriptions for outpatients will be approved by the attending physician at the hospital as opposed to the local general practitioner.

This new procedure is still in its formative stages but the Owen Sound General and Marine Hospital—

Ms. Gigantes: Can't hear you. Don't mumble.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry. I am trying to do it quickly.

This new procedure is still in its formative stages but the Owen Sound General and Marine Hospital has assured my staff that they in no way are cutting off medication to any psychiatric outpatient who cannot afford it.

The director further stated that no consultation with the ministry had been initiated by the hospital regarding this modification but that the medical staff informed the administration of the hospital that the change was to take place. The director has assured my staff that no one is being deprived of needed medication, that the medical care of outpatients is being improved. However, I have asked my staff to contact the Owen Sound General and Marine Hospital to ensure that the Ministry of Health is consulted on all future program changes.

ACID RAIN POLLUTION

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment regarding acid rain and its devastating effect on the lakes and fish in the Muskoka-Haliburton area. Did the ministry first become aware that this was a problem in the area because of the April environment report on acid rain or was it known previously? Secondly, does the ministry know why Ontario's acid rain problem is as severe as anywhere in the world?

Hon. Mr. McCague: On the first question, I think it was two years ago that the ministry started studying this. The second part of the question was—is it more serious here?

Mr. Gaunt: No. Why is it as serious here as anywhere in the world?

Hon. Mr. MacCague: That's what we really don't know, at this point.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Since the researchers are being dispatched to the area, will the minister report their findings to the House and indicate what the ministry proposes to do to correct the problem? Secondly, will the minister release the April 1978 environment report on acid rain?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The report the honourable member refers to is just some comments that one of the members of my staff made at a convention. Yes, as the studies become available we will certainly release them.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: I'd like to ask the Minister of the Environment if any of his staff were at the recent conference on acid rain sponsored by the NATO Advanced Research Institute, which was held just last month? From this conference there were some very alarming reports on both the aquatic and terrestrial effects of acid rain. The fact came out that acid rain has increased fortyfold in the northeastern United States and probably the same here. If the problem is so serious, would the minister consider asking the IJC to undertake a study of this particular problem? I understand they have to receive requests from governments before they will get into the field.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I'm not aware of anybody from our ministry having been at that conference, but I will check into it, and I will consider asking the IJC to investigate.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: Since the report in the newspaper refers to some of the lakes as being already dead, can the minister identify where these lakes are located? I know of no dead lakes in the Haliburton area, which was featured in this article.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I am not aware, either, of any dead lakes. I will check into that, and if there are any I will let the member know.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Cooke: In the absence of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough), I will direct this question to the Premier. It concerns the announcement yesterday that the government will not be implementing property tax reform.

I would like to know why the government did not bring in property tax reform, market value assessment, for all areas of the province with the exception of Toronto in order to alleviate some of the inequities. Why should the rest of the province suffer because the government has not been able to solve the problems in Toronto? Secondly, has the government considered and will it bring in a bill to remove the freeze on the equalization factor in order to relieve some of the problems throughout the province?

Mr. Nixon: He is thinking about proposition 13.

Mr. Roy: No guts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, after your admonitions this morning I won't reply to the member for Ottawa East—

Mr. MacDonald: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am getting around to it.

Mr. MacDonald: I know it, that's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, the member's House leader today started out his questions with a lengthy speech—

Mr. McClellan: Order. Call him to order.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh no he didn't. The Premier has already wasted one minute.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South is contributing to that waste of time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it would be improper to conclude that the only geographic area where there are potential difficulties with market value assessment is Metropolitan Toronto. That is not factually correct. There are a number of complicated areas, if I can phrase it that way, in the province. There are some that are less complicated than others.

Mr. J. Reed: Where the Tories have had their oar in.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is no question that some in Windsor, while I am not sure whether they want market value assessment, would seek some change in the equalization factor or some way whereby they could get additional funding. I am not sure that they are that enthusiastic about property tax reform.

Mr. B. Newman: What about transitional grants?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is the additional money. Because the member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy) is not here to ask a supplementary, this also applies in Sarnia as well. We're quite aware of these difficulties. We will continue to pursue it with those municipalities but I don't want the member to feel that only Metro was a problem or is a problem as it relates to market value assessment.

Mr. Cooke: In view of the Treasurer's statement yesterday in which he indicated no deadline for a new proposal to be brought forward to the Legislature, I wonder if the Premier and his government will now be re-considering grants to cities like Windsor and Sarnia that are suffering from the inequities in the present system?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought I had already answered that question. We recognize there are some difficulties in some communities. We will continue to pursue those with those municipalities.

Ms. Gigantes: Pursue it? What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't give you any commitment this morning that we can find a solution to those problems, but we're quite aware of it and we will continue to discuss it with them.

Mr. B. Newman: As the Premier knows, Windsor has been adversely affected for quite a few years now. Is the Premier prepared to provide some type of financial assistance so no longer will Windsor not receive its fair share of government grants?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought I had already answered that question but I shall try to answer it again. I'm quite familiar with the situation in Windsor. It has been brought to my attention by others and by the representatives from Windsor in this Legislature.

Mr. McClellan: Is the answer yes or no?

Mr. Cooke: When are we going to hear something.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have some in-laws in Windsor. I'm quite familiar with it. I would only say to the member for Windsor-Walkerville that I can give no such commitment here this morning, quite obviously, but we do know that there is a problem.

GASOLINE TAX

Mr. Yakabuski: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue.

Mr. Haggerty: Ask him in caucus.

Mr. Yakabuski: In view of the fact that I have had a number of telephone calls in recent days, is the minister aware that Quebec tax officials were checking on Ontario truckers in the Pembroke area this past week with regard to gasoline tax, and is he aware that these truckers may travel into the province of Quebec only a distance of perhaps five or 10 miles and that the Quebec revenue branch is asking for tax in lieu of that mileage at something like five or 10 cents per mile?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Good question.

Hon. Mr. Maecck: I'm aware that this problem has existed for some time. I'm not aware of the recent problems the member has just mentioned.

The problem is simply this. The Quebec government has a different form of legislation than we do. Under their legislation, they have a fuel tax act which includes gasoline tax as well as fuel tax. Under their act they have the authority to stop vehicles in Quebec and determine whether or not they have purchased their fuel in Quebec. It's a different program from any of the other provinces.

Ours is the opposite. We don't have the same sort of legislation as they do. It's a matter that has been discussed with the Quebec government from time to time by the Ministry of Revenue and others. I believe it was one of the items that the Premier discussed with the Premier of Quebec in his most recent meeting with him.

Ms. Gigantes: He's pursuing that one too?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We are still working on it. But at this point in time, under their legislation they are within their own laws to do exactly what they're doing.

Mr. Haggerty: It's the same answer you got in caucus, Paul.

Mr. Yakabuski: Is the minister aware that some of the Quebec truckers travel hundreds of miles on Ontario highways—such as 17, new 17, and 417—and that our Ontario truckers are only going in a distance of five or 10 miles?

Mr. Roy: You see their trucks all over Ottawa, Paul.

Mr. Yakabuski: Has the Ontario government any formula at all whereby revenue can be collected from Quebec truckers and has any revenue been collected up to this time?

Mr. Kerrio: Why doesn't the member say all truckers?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We do collect revenue from fuel tax from Quebec truckers. There's nothing in our legislation that would permit us to collect gasoline tax. It's a separate piece of legislation. Our Gasoline Tax Act is very similar to the acts in eight of the other provinces in Canada. The one that's out of line is in the province of Quebec. We are trying to convince them that they should perhaps change their legislation so it would be complementary to the legislation in the other provinces, but we haven't been successful at this point.

Mr. Warner: Then they could give us another "I hate Quebec" speech.

Mr. Philip: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could get together with the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) and prepare a joint statement on reciprocity agreements involving trucking for members of the House, so that we have both the revenue section and the transportation section together and so that we can know how reciprocity agreements are going on. I understand the Minister of Transportation and Communications claimed in a statement recently in this House that there have been some successes in terms of reciprocity, but we just don't have all of the pieces together. Would the minister do that, please?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I could look into that for the member. I should mention while I'm on my feet that our ministry has negotiated four tentative agreements, which have not at this point been signed, between us and our counterparts in Quebec. They don't get into the detail that we would like to see and that has to do, of course, with the gasoline tax problem as we see it. There is also a retail sales tax problem that we're having some difficulty with.

The agreements we have drawn up and which I indicated have not yet been signed, cover such areas as co-operation and reciprocity and those kinds of things, but it doesn't go as far as we would like to see it go in order to alleviate the problems that the member for Renfrew South has indicated.

WILKINSON FOUNDRY FACING

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, on June 1 the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question on resource recovery. The answer is quite long and I would like to give it next week prior to question period.

Mr. Roy: That's right, make a statement.

Hon. Mr. McCague: At this time I would like to reply to a question asked by the member for Dovercourt regarding Wilkinson Foundry Facing and Supply Company Limited in Toronto. On May 26 an incident occurred at this plant at approximately 2 p.m. A pipe used to transfer the material known as bentonite from a railcar to a silo ruptured and as a result the neighbouring properties to the east of the plant were blanketed with this material. The fallout extended approximately 400 feet downwind of the plant. An estimated 600 pounds of the material was released to the atmosphere.

My staff advise me that the unit was shut down within seconds of the incident. An on-site inspection was conducted by my staff in the afternoon of May 26, at which time samples of the material were taken for analysis and identification purposes. The followup inspection was conducted on May 29 and at that time staff advised company representatives that a violation notice under the Environmental Protection Act would be issued.

The violation notice was subsequently served on June 5. Further action will be considered pending a written submission by the company on the circumstances surrounding the incident. To prevent a recurrence of this incident the vent pipe which caused the incident was to be replaced with what is known as a bin vent filter by June 6. The company will also install additional five bin vent filters on each of the silos at the plant as soon as possible. Installation of this equipment will complete one phase of the company's existing abatement program.

My staff advise me that the material released and known as bentonite is not a toxic material. However, the results of the analysis of the samples collected will confirm the company's description of the material released.

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary: In view of the minister's statement today, I would like to ask the minister the following three-part question:

1. The minister stated that the material released and known as bentonite is not a toxic material, yet the book called Dangerous Properties of Industrial Materials, fourth edition, states clearly that the toxic hazard rating of bentonite is completely unknown. In view of this, what was the basis of the minister's analysis?

2. Given the fact that 600 pounds of the material was released in the atmosphere and that this company has been polluting the environment for over 25 years with coal dust, is it the minister's intention to go beyond issuing a violation notice and actually prosecute the company in question?

3. Considering that the company has refused to comply with environmental regulations, why is the minister allowing the company to continue to pollute the residential area where the company is located?

Hon. Mr. McCague: As I said in the statement, we are doing an analysis of the product known as bentonite to find out the answers to the questions the honourable member is asking.

Ms. Gigantes: That's not what you said. You said you were finding out.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Secondly, the violation notice has been given and charges are being considered. On the third part, as to why the plant is allowed to stay there, the honourable member knows that my ministry has been looking at the performance of that company carefully for the past two or three months when the member raised it in estimates. I do appreciate the fact that he brought this matter to my attention, although our staff had already been there.

LINDSAY NURSING HOME

Mr. Eakins: My question is to the Minister of Health. As the minister is aware, the Nursing Homes Review Board revoked the licence of the Lindsay Nursing Home. On appeal to the Ontario Supreme Court, this decision was reversed and the court ruling restored the licence. What then is the status of the numerous replies he has received in response to a proposal call for a new facility? What happens now?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have indicated to my staff that I want to appeal that decision. So all those submissions are pending until that is resolved.

Mr. Eakins: Can the minister then give assurance that there will be no undue delay in providing adequate nursing home facilities in the Lindsay area?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes. The member will understand that we must resolve the matter in the courts. Otherwise, we would be in the position of having to allow the previous operator to do renovations which we had demanded for some considerable time and which we feel were not done in proper time. We do intend to appeal.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CO-OPERATIVE CORPORATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 122, An Act to amend the Co-operative Corporations Amendment Act, 1973.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought I might take a moment to inform the House with regard to some of the changes being made in this bill. The bill results from a series of changes recommended by the United Co-operatives of Ontario and the Ontario Co-operative Development Association, which together represent the majority of co-operative members in the province.

These changes are mainly of a house-keeping nature and are designed to correct anomalies and reflect changed circumstances which have developed in accordance with our efforts to clean up, change and amend necessary and overdue legislation in our ministry. We are anxious to have this bill proceeded with.

Mr. Nixon: You are going to proceed with this in the fall, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The existing act exempts from audit requirements any co-ops which have less than $50,000 in assets, $15,000 in capital, $100,000 in sales and fewer than 15 members. There are currently an increasing number of nursery school co-ops which often have very little by way of assets, no capital and limited sales, although usually they have well in excess of 15 members. In such cases, it hardly makes sense to require an annual audit. Consequently, the amendment exempts co-ops which have never issued securities and have less than $5,000 in assets from the audit requirement.

this is not realistic in today's money markets. We propose to raise that to 10 per cent. To ensure the incorporators will be members and users of goods and services of the co-op that they are incorporating rather than promoters, the legislation will be amended to permit incorporation by at least five members, including corporations "who shall be members" and to require verification by affidavit. This will remedy some abuses which have come to light recently.

The act now stipulates that before any securities are issued by a co-op with more than 15 members, the co-op must file with the minister an offering statement and obtain a receipt. This is to frustrate attempts by promoters to avoid disclosure. The amendment prevents a co-op from issuing a block of shares while it has fewer than 15 members and then transferring those shares to new shareholders, bringing the membership to more than 15, without filing an offering statement. It also prevents a co-op from accepting money on deposit from prospective security holders without obtaining a receipt for an offering statement.

In order to restore a right under the former legislation we propose to empower a co-op corporation to convert to a non-share corporation under part three of the Corporations Act.

Finally, there are also several amendments to ensure that co-op shares are issued or re-issued at not greater than par value so that the co-op principle of limited return on investment and return on investment on the basis of goods and services of co-ops will be followed. Of course, there are numerous other changes designed to clarify the intent of the original legislation, and to close loopholes which have developed over the past four years.

Mr. Nixon: Proceed with that in October, did you say?

DEBATE ON MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, I wish to comment on the incident of yesterday respecting the motion to adjourn the debate on the motion for the adoption of the report of the members' services committee.

It was suggested to me that as there was an agreement between the House leaders, of which I had been informed, to the effect that the chairman of the committee should move the adjournment motion, I should have ruled the acting House leader out of order.

This, of course, is not correct. An agreement between the House leaders does not change the standing orders or the provisional standing orders unless moved in the House and adopted by the House. The House would expect that the House leaders would carry out the agreement at which they had arrived, but as no such procedural change had ever been adopted by the House, I point out that any member may move the adjournment of the debate, as the standing orders provide.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Resumption of consideration of the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise to enter the debate on the matter of the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman. I have given a great deal of consideration to this particular debate because it does seem to me that somehow or other we have to come to grips with what seems to be an undercurrent in this House as it relates to this committee and to its functions.

I suppose perhaps the only way in this House to gain the attention of the assembly is to be somewhat abrasive, since nothing else works. If the members of this assembly do not wish to have a select committee on the Ombudsman, I think they ought to come forward and say so. If, in the alternative, they feel there should be a committee to engage in the review of the work of the Ombudsman, then it seems to me the reports of that select committee ought to be taken with some degree of seriousness by this House.

I am concerned that at this point in time we seem to use these periods as a sort of filler, like the old budget debates and the old throne debates. I, personally, am of the opinion that the work of this committee—and I tell you it is work—should not be treated in so cavalier a fashion.

Why did this committee undertake to go to look at the offices of ombudsmen in other parts of the world rather than stay home and make decisions here? Let me just point out to this assembly what we were asked to do, the obligations upon this committee:

The Ombudsman had asked for increased jurisdiction covering municipalities. We had, in effect, about two sets of authorities upon which to draw. One was all the written material about other ombudsmen. The other, Mr. Speaker, was the expertise of the Ombudsman and his staff, because they had already visited all of these offices, and it seemed to me that we ought, indeed, to take a look for ourselves. I want to tell you that in visiting these various jurisdictions—you do not get the truth, that is you do not get the full picture of the operation; you can't do it by reading, you've got to be there is what I'm saying.

Mr. Germa: You have got to get the flavour.

Mr. Haggerty: Ask the member for Sudbury, he knows.

Mr. Germa: Certainly, I am right with the member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, we knew from written materials that the ombudsmen's offices in the Scandinavian countries had jurisdiction over municipalities, but when we visited there, we found that what was written was not that which was in operation.

There were two basic factors: One, there was a very tentative approach of the ombudsmen in dealing with municipalities; and two, there was a very real situation that—for example in Stockholm, Sweden—when you talk about municipal functions, they were not all municipal functions but simply those which were carried out by a municipality as a direct agent, as it were, of the state government.

To my mind, the office of the Ombudsman in Ontario has somewhat similar jurisdiction only that his jurisdiction takes effect at a later stage than it does in Sweden, in that any appeal to the government of Ontario then fixes him with jurisdiction over that decision. Obviously, it relates to earlier decisions of the municipality.

We came to the conclusion that the jurisdiction should not be enlarged at this time. I would like to say that that is no reflection on the work of the Ombudsman of Ontario, but rather that as we sat in England and studied with the committee which relates to the municipal ombudsmen, we recognized the care with which that government had prepared and consulted with municipalities, both as to the personnel of the offices and also the function. It was the one place we visited where the committee which corresponds to our select committee, in fact showed signs of uneasiness with the office, and there was a sort of jealous regard of their authority. Of course, having seen that, having witnessed the experience in the Scandinavian countries, we came to the conclusion, that while an ombudsman's function was appropriate to a large municipality, nevertheless, this was not the route to go.

Another reason we sought some knowledge and expertise was because we have been charged as a committee with drawing guidelines for the operation of the Ombudsman. Again, hindsight is a very fine thing, but we have learned that we ourselves in this Assembly made a serious mistake in not setting some guidelines before the office started, because that has contributed immeasurably to the problems which we have to acknowledge have arisen between the Ombudsman's office and this Assembly.

We virtually told the Ombudsman to go out and create his own operation and he did. Ever since, some members in this House have been critical of him for doing just that. Now we are trying to work ex post facto on guidelines for that office.

Again, what did we have to go by? Very little, unless we saw the operation.

Very often it is only the civil servants and persons in an ombudsman's office who have the expertise, and that is why we do make so many mistakes in government.

It is obvious to me, and I am speaking now only for myself, that when one gives an office to a person, with the sort of power that our Ombudsman has, it is very important that the Ombudsman follows in precise terms the act which puts that office into place.

As we visited, we saw that this was indeed the way in which the operation took place in the other jurisdictions, so we learned something which may be of benefit to the people of this province, to the Ombudsman and to the Assembly.

My friend the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) in his recent debate on the subject spoke at some length about the problems between the Assembly and the Ombudsman. There has been a tendency to try and hush that down. I think it has to be out in the open. We have to face the facts and we have to resolve the difficulty.

I am very hopeful that with guidelines which we will be working on if we are permitted to sit in August, we may come to grips with these difficulties.

The third matter which had to engage us was that we ourselves have come to the conclusion there ought to be some kind of resolution to the way in which the budget of the Ombudsman is reviewed. I don't think there's anyone in the House who hasn't been aware of the somewhat bitter interchanges that we had earlier on with reference to this matter. Our committee has recommended more than once that a committee such as ours, which has now some expertise in the field should be the appropriate committee to review that budget. This is one of the items which has been consistently ignored.

It's interesting that in other jurisdictions the committees are actually performing that function. Perhaps they trust their committees more than we do. It is interesting too that in each case, save and except for the office of the Ombudsman in Edinburgh, there is a committee which works closely with the ombudsman and with which the ombudsman works closely and for the most part precisely. Here we seem to be labouring under all sorts of misapprehension.

I am very sorry that there are only two members of the government side in the House, one of whom is on the committee.

Mr. Mancini: Disgrace.

Mr. M. N. Davison: And an excellent member.

Mrs. Campbell: He is an excellent member without question, but I think I am preaching to the converted in his case. I would wish there could have been more government members who would stand up and frankly state their case—

Mr. Mancini: When the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) was the whip there were more government members here.

Mrs. Campbell:—about the Ombudsman, the office and the committee itself. As we sit in our committee, there's a great deal of work. I wonder at this point whether all we are doing is spinning our wheels. There are those who believe we shouldn't be sitting too much. There are those who believe that somehow we are involved in a make-work program.

We have an obligation under our mandate to study the report of the Ombudsman. We have one which has been released. We have a second one which we are told is to be released by the end of this month. Then there is the Correctional Services report which is not officially before us at this point in time, but I have been advised by the staff of Correctional Services that their reply and the replies of those ministers who have been involved in that report had gone to cabinet. I wouldn't expect that, if the response goes to the Ombudsman, he would sit on it for months; and so we face the inevitable with yet another report.

I suppose in a sense I have strayed from this report, although I trust I have covered the points which were made and the reasons for our study. It seemed to me that at this point in time somebody had to speak out and invite a debate on the realities.

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss this report also, as my colleagues the member for St. George and the member for Lakeshore have done before me. In discussing this report and the office of the Ombudsman—it becomes a very difficult task—and we often had this problem when we toured the different offices throughout the world recently—to distinguish between that office and the individual.

We have had the individual in this office for two to three years, and the office has taken on the personality of that individual—it is natural that it would—as we also found that the other offices we visited had taken on, in some respects, the personality of the individual holding that office.

I do not want to say that the report we are discussing today is just one dealing with personalities. There are some hard facts in that report. There are some hard realities that we discovered, some positions made and some opinions formed. A great deal of work was put into the report.

The report is not, as I have heard, a justification for the trip that was taken by the members of that committee. Throughout their endeavours in the different countries, speaking with and listening to and discussing with the people on the street, with members of committees that have a status similar to that of this Legislature's committee on the Ombudsman and with the ombudsmen of those jurisdictions, the committee members learned a great deal. They were, as has been stated by the member for Sudbury, "getting the flavour" of the area. That is necessary.

One has to look, as the report states, at the culture, the parliamentary procedure and the traditions of the different jurisdictions where there are ombudsmen. One has to look at all those things before one can formulate the duties of an ombudsman in this area.

For our present Ombudsman, who is performing a gigantic task for the people of Ontario, we did insert into our legislative and governmental process an Ombudsman with no background or tradition of that office. We put him into a situation against an entrenched and long-standing civil service which had been in existence for many years and going about their business the way they felt they should.

We inserted an Ombudsman into a situation which immediately became adversarial, and we had some difficulties. As the report sets out in more figurative language, we spent many hours discussing the exact words that might be used in this report. It was done with painstaking accuracy and deliberation to get the precise words. When my friend from Lakeshore brought up the use of that term "delicate flower," I think that is so figurative of the relationship between the Legislature and the Ombudsman. It is very delicate. We have seen in other jurisdictions as we travelled, this very close relationship, almost admiration, between the two operations. There, again, it is that admiration and respect for the two offices that is yet to be developed, and maybe through the process of these reports, through the process of our committee bringing forth recommendations, that admiration and respect for each other's position will come about.

In looking at our present office, it is said in the report that it will operate with a shadow of doubt because it does not have guidelines. It is those guidelines that this committee has been established to put forward. It is those guidelines we have tried to put forward. Those guidelines have not been acted upon by this Legislative Assembly and until they are acted upon that shadow of doubt will still exist.

The purpose of the committee will be meaningless unless they are acted upon, because that routine will continue—report of the Ombudsman, report of the select committee; report of the Ombudsman, report of the select committee—and we can go on with that procedure ad infinitum until the precise guidelines are formulated, put forth by this House and given to the Ombudsman as to how he is to conduct that office.

Otherwise, as the member for St. George has said, the Ombudsman will continue to operate the office as he feels it is necessary and within his interpretation of the statute that created that office. When I speak of that statute, it is a statutory office and statutory offices have to work within the framework of the statute they have been created by.

Indeed, and I've stated it before in this House on these reports, if the office is going to investigate bodies that have regulations to follow, bodies and civil servants that have administrative and statutory procedures to follow, and if they do not follow those procedures they are criticized by the Office of the Ombudsman, then that very office must follow its statutory procedures. That is very fundamental to that particular office.

Until this Legislature gives forth those guidelines and puts them down precisely, he will interpret them as it is most beneficial to that office. There may be some situations where it is beneficial to the individual he is serving, but, there again, is it the end that is justifying the means? It may continue that way.

Some may ask—and it has been spoken of in the different media—"Why did that committee have to travel so far?" The member for St. George has remarked on that very briefly. I can give you maybe a figurative situation. Yes, we had briefing material before we left. Yes, we could have read many articles on the ombudsman. In fact, when I read some of those articles I was amazed at the myths we had developed in this country and in this province as to the office of the ombudsman.

To emphasize that, I am sure no members in this House would play the game of hockey or would have even thought of the game of hockey had they picked up the rule book and read how it should be played. They'd say, "My God, that is a boring, boring game," and think of what Harold Ballard would do now if he had also picked it up.

Mr. Nixon: The last chairman of the select committee said he thought it was more like reading about sex.

Mr. G. Taylor: He would have gone immediately to Hamilton and played football.

Mr. Nixon: I think his alliteration is more moving.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Not necessarily more accurate.

Mr. G. Taylor: When we get down, even more precisely, to the people we visited, there were some other questions as to why we didn't bring them here. We saw in excess of some 60 individuals and I'm sure the cost of bringing those individuals here would have far outweighed the cost of that trip.

Mr. Nixon: How many were in your tour?

Mr. G. Taylor: There again, that's trying to be apologetic, and I am not apologetic. I think the material we gained for this Legislature on the running and operation of the operation of the Ombudsman in this province was extremely beneficial, because prior to creating that office, there had been, as is not the usual practice for this Legislature, no study of similar operations. It was just created by a statute of this Legislature and it asked the person to continue on and good luck to him.

When I look at some of the recommendations of this particular report and some of the other ones, I find they have still not been acted upon. I must say that in working on this committee I have not seen, on any other committees I have been on in this Legislature, such unanimity in the report they bring forth, such unanimity of the feelings of all the members from all the parties on this particular subject. It is an unusual thing to see such unanimous support for the recommendations.

One might say we should make more recommendations. This report contains only two. One of the main and prime ones was that of increased jurisdiction. We have seen how increased jurisdiction has operated in other jurisdictions, and even though it was in the statute of the offices there how it was not acted upon. Particularly when we talk about the municipal field, some of the ombudsmen had the opportunity to delve into the municipal areas; but because they respected that municipal operation, they had the opportunity but they seldom exerted that opportunity, feeling that municipal operations were a very particular type of operation and should be left alone.

They had their particular elected officials who could perform those features of the ombudsman much more than expanding the present office and interfering with those operations and trying to solve the complaints of individual citizens. There again it was the personality, feeling and tradition of an office. Although it had the statutory power to get into the field it did not.

We have some very hard decisions to make on this, as we characterize many of the decisions we have to make. Are we going to get down to the point where these recommendations are going to be put into legislation and are we going to amend the legislation? That is very crucial to the functioning and performance of this very committee. If not, it might be that this committee can no longer serve its purpose and its terms of reference and maybe it should be wound down or discontinued; or asked not to sit if it is not going to carry out its functions, if the committee is going to report and the report will then gather dust.

We can add many recommendations—I have set out a few that do not appear here, but some that I would like to make to this Legislature—that may show even further consideration as to how this office should be operated. I've seen the correctional institutions report. There again, it's a difference of opinion as to my interpretation of the statute and that of the Ombudsman, and even that of some members of the committee. It was initiated on his own volition, as he interpreted the statute, and we had a complete inspection of the correctional institutions of the province of Ontario.

Is that to continue? Do we have him then investigating other ministries at great cost? Is that not a policy of government or is he interfering with the policies of government? Is he then setting himself up to decide on the total operation of a ministry? Should that be spelled out? Specifically in the area of administration of boards, commissions and agencies, which ones should the Ombudsman have the right to look at?

Mr. Mancini: You don't even know how many you have.

Mr. G. Taylor: Maybe he might find out how many we have if we were to allow him to do all of those. We have seen situations in some jurisdictions where they spelled out and had a precise list of those agencies, boards, commissions and bodies that the Ombudsman was responsible for. We don't have that here. The office is still trying to decide what areas of jurisdiction it has.

We have seen numerous reports from the Ombudsman. They are down to approximately half-yearly. Some of the other jurisdictions have a situation where the reports came out on a precise day. One could expect when they are to be ready, again adding to the great advantage of the statistical data in those reports. It is no good if they're not comparable in exact, precise terms and precise areas of the particular part of the year. Now we are down to a report every six months. Should the statutes spell out a report at a particular time of the year so that it will form a more useful comparison to other years?

Then there are the time limits within which complaints can be received. As a member of this committee, I see being resurrected complaints of citizens going back six years. Should there be a time limit on what the Ombudsman can start working on?

Mr. Nixon: You won't get agreement on that.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Why don't you sit there and listen? You might learn something.

Mr. Nixon: I have been sitting here and listening. It's very interesting and a lot better than the last time when you were talking.

Mr. G. Taylor: Should there be a precise time limit? We have many statutes which we set up and where we put precise time limits in those statutes. If you don't come forward with your complaint within a particular time limit, then goodbye. We have many of those in the litigious field. Maybe, that should be inserted into the Ombudsman's field.

We have situations where the Ombudsman picks up the problem and continues it on, but where there is another form of alternative remedy, be it in the courts, which may be an expensive remedy. Should we insert into the Ombudsman act a situation where we say to the Ombudsman if there is an alternative remedy, do not carry on with that problem? If it is one where the person has an alternative remedy, let him take that route before the Ombudsman takes the problem in hand.

There are situations where we hear complaints about reports not getting out or the office not working swiftly enough. Some people say it's insufficient staff. Some others would say put on some time limits. Maybe we should. When the Ombudsman makes a recommendation or goes to the ministry and says there's a problem, maybe the ministry should have to reply within a certain time frame as well so that he and the office know that the ministry is cognizant of the problem and is going to act on the problem. Maybe we should come firmly forth with a recommendation that the ministry should be required to reply to the Ombudsman within a particular time frame.

Another feature that was very noticeable was the difference in the letters sent out by the office of our Ombudsman and that of the other offices on non-jurisdictional situations. Does it take a four to five-page letter to tell an applicant, wanting some relief that he cannot give him that relief, couched in words that many lawyers would not possibly understand. It is a very legalistic four-page letter telling him no.

Mr. Nixon: Surmounted on a rampant griffin.

Mr. G. Taylor: On three trilliums. We had seen very precise letters in other jurisdictions where letters from the ombudsman say: "No, it is not my jurisdiction," or situations where they lift up the phone when the problem comes in and answer: "No, it is not our jurisdiction." We have seen statistically where a great deal of the problems and complaints received by the ombudsman are non-jurisdictional problems.

We look at the cost and the time used up in that office, should that area be precisely delineated so that the Ombudsman can say: "Sorry, that is not mine, goodbye. Go off to unemployment insurance where the answer to the problem is. Here's the number," instead of going into three or four pages to arrive at that conclusion.

There is one recommendation in this report about the budget staying with the Ombudsman committee. It is a recommendation of the committee. I may not entirely agree with it. I think there is some benefit in that budget being dealt with elsewhere, although I must say the committee itself has a greater knowledge of the operation of that particular office and thus can cast forth a greater degree of information on the cost and the running of that office.

I give forth some other suggestions, Mr. Speaker. There were different jurisdictions we went to where the ombudsman could, in effect, discipline civil servants or bureaucracies for their maladministration, one might call it, or their transgressions of the administrative procedure of a particular civil service that they were operating in. Maybe that might be something this Legislature might consider. In the situation we have presently, if there is an error made it goes up; and if it's a type of ministerial responsibility, it's the minister's problem. There again, with very little discipline, maybe in conjunction with the civil service operation and its grievance procedure, it could come forward with the recommendations of the Ombudsman, so that some of these problems, which may be just strictly administrative, will not go unnoticed and continue in the future.

In some of the jurisdictions we visited the material that came forward—the ombudsman's report—was a code of civil service practice, similar to legal precedents. Again, it was felt that when the civil servants read that report, they would say, "Oh my God. Look what happened to Harry. Let's not have it happen to me. I want to correct my office so that I will not have any embarrassment come upon me or this administrative procedure that I'm carrying out."

There are some other matters. We have secrecy in our Ombudsman's reports and in the operation of the Ombudsman. Nobody knows who is being complained about, both on the administrative side and on the side of the complainant who is seeking some relief.

Mr. Haggerty: That's got to be changed.

Mr. G. Taylor: In some jurisdictions, it was open. The reports came in each day and it was available to everybody. It was open to the press and other individuals to see this. Do we insert that or do we stay with our program of secrecy?

Mr. Haggerty: It's got to be changed.

Mr. G. Taylor: Another area we found involved the informational process of the operation of the office itself. We have pamphlets. We have the Ombudsman going around speaking in different areas. We have members talking about it. Should we offer by, say the Ministry of Education, a program or a guideline saying, "Here is information about the office of the Ombudsman. Could you include that in your school program"; in your civics classes, or whatever other class it might be.

Mr. Haggerty: Civics would be good.

Mr. G. Taylor. The people would thereby be aware of the office and what it does for them and how it operates. If they knew its purpose, maybe the non-jurisdictional part of the workload would decrease if they were aware of the actual functions and duties of the Ombudsman in this province.

Undoubtedly the Ombudsman has received criticism from members of this House and members of the media as to its offices. We saw offices that were very close to the people in their physical location. Is the office of the Ombudsman as it is presently constituted physically removed from the people it primarily serves?

Our jurisdiction is no different from the other jurisdictions we visited. Without labelling him, the person was a person who generally needed the help of somebody. It wasn't a person who could go and and secure high-priced legal talent. It wasn't someone who could pick up the phone and talk to the old school ties. It was the people who do not have the everyday advantage of high-priced legal talent or some other method. In the legal profession, we talk about giving people neighbourhood legal clinics, neighbourhood law offices. We put our constituency offices where people can find us. Maybe there again, the office of the Ombudsman could do the same. It might necessitate a larger budget, but maybe he should be required—

Mr. Haggerty: Put legal aid in with him.

Mr. G. Taylor: —to put these neighbourhood offices about, rather than just having a phone system. There again, we saw the physical side of these operations. All of these features go to make up what is in this report. I recommend to you the features of this report. Sit and study it and get together in your own caucus with your own colleagues and maybe bring forth some recommendations.

One of the very tenuous things that was evident in some of the offices—I'm not so sure it would operate here—was that relationship between the office and the elected representatives. Some of the ombudsmen had to maintain the confidence of the Legislature. It was not a tenure appointment or for a period of time. Most of their terms related to the tenure of the Legislature that appointed them. There, again, that might be a very considered thing that we might do to implement a similar one. There are some who would say it would be difficult for them to get a person who would like the job for that short period of time, since we have more regular elections in this province, but the person who holds that office receives the support of the body that is elected by the people of the jurisdiction, and if he has that support he knows it is continuing support and, with the 10-year appointment that is presently there, he is not looking over his shoulder all the time wondering whether they're going to be sniping at him.

Those are some of the recommendations I put forward to you besides the recommendations that appear in this formal report. I, like the member for St. George, and I'm sure some of my other colleagues on this committee, would hope that before too long the recommendations would be acted upon, or in the alternative give us directions and say that the work of the committee is no longer necessary, so that we are not sitting day after day, week after week, looking at these reports, because they are long reports, they are involved reports.

Indeed, we might even in the committee look at some other ways of dealing with these reports. I saw one jurisdiction where they had support staff who looked at the ombudsman's report, went over the report, came back to the committee and highlighted it and said: "Here are the things that you must look at," which significantly reduced the time spent by the legislators on the committee that is comparable to ours. Maybe that is a situation we might look at for our own use in this committee.

I will add one more feature to this report. Had I not gone on that trip, I would not have been given the opportunity. As we have seen around this Legislature—

Mr. Haggerty: You are well adapted to the labour, George.

Mr. G. Taylor: —around this Legislature, there are certain mottoes inscribed in the wood, one that I'm sure is particular to the Ombudsman's office and how he operates and they operate throughout the world. I noticed one very close at hand here, Audi Alteram Partem, which is indicative of the operation of the Ombudsman's office, but my friend from the Lakeshore and I developed great feeling for this one in Denmark—

Mr. Nixon: Maybe you'd better translate that, please.

Mr. Haggerty: Ask the member for Lakeshore.

Mr. G. Taylor: No, I'm not going to. I'll give you the translation. It has puzzled us for some time and I'll give it to my colleagues here. This was in their legislative building, and it was: "The one who understands the language of the birds can become a minister."

Mr. Ruston: That sounds right.

Mr. Nixon: That's what happened to St. Francis. Most of the ministers over there are for the birds.

Mr. G. Taylor: I leave you with that. If you solve the problems, we might not have to continue travelling throughout the world studying other jurisdictions.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments concerning the report on the Ombudsman which was presented to the Legislature by the members of the select committee.

It's been three years now since we've had an Ombudsman for the province of Ontario and I was one of the people—although I wasn't a member of the House at that time—who was very pleased to see that the government had taken the step to appoint an Ombudsman for this province. Although they kind of dragged their feet for a while, they finally came around and appointed an Ombudsman, which was needed for this province.

I would like to say that in my experience in the last three years, being a member of a legislative body and coming into contact with many people in the riding and across the province of Ontario, I've noticed that the people feel comfortable having someone they can go to with a problem or with a concern, someone who is at least an arm's length away from the government and someone who is independent of the government.

As a matter of fact, I've had the privilege of using the services of the Ombudsman myself. I know, in one particular case, I don't think we could have got any type of justice at all from the present government if it had not been for the Ombudsman.

[12:15]

Mr. Speaker, a great amount of the debate today has been centred around the need for guidelines for the Ombudsman. In my opinion, the Ombudsman should be able to investigate any matter which comes under the jurisdiction of the Ontario government, any of its boards, agencies or commissions. There should be absolutely no attempt to try to restrain the Ombudsman from investigating any of these matters which come under any of these agencies—

Mr. Haggerty: Open your books, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Close my eyes.

Mr. Mancini:—boards and commissions. It should be stated in the regulations that a cabinet minister or chairman of a board, agency or commission, should reply to the Ombudsman within a certain amount of time. I can recall from personal experience a matter that I turned over to the Ombudsman and we waited endless days for the minister to respond. Possibly this type of response needed the length of time that he took and possibly it didn't, but I think we would get a much fairer deal if it stated in the regulations that the members of the cabinet or the chairmen of these boards and agencies had to respond in a certain amount of time.

Also, I think there should be guidelines for the budget of the Ombudsman. I can well recall the bitter battle that took place last year between the members of the Legislature and the Ombudsman. Many of the points that the members brought up at those estimate hearings were good and valid points and they criticized the Ombudsman at that time for what they considered his excessive opulence. I believe that when any board or minister or anyone at all who is related to the government goes about the province and has his office furnished in a way people might consider excessively opulent, he should come under criticism. I believe he should be made to stop and I believe he should be made to operate under the rules of restraint just like any other arm of the government. I believe that the members of the committee were right in what they did.

Although the Ombudsman might have taken some of that criticism personally and he might have taken some of that criticism as unfair, I am one who believes that it was not. The members were not there to criticize the work that the Ombudsman had done, they were not there to criticize the areas of investigation that he wanted to undertake but they wanted the Ombudsman's office to be a human and humble office, one that any person in the province of Ontario could approach without feeling inadequate.

At that particular committee hearing, the Ombudsman made a strong defence for himself and he mentioned to the members of the committee there that evening that he had wished to have a management consultant's study done of his operation. He felt with this kind of study he would be able to make his large office more efficient and would be able to assist more people throughout the province of Ontario.

However he felt—and he stated to us—that the Board of Internal Economy had treated him shabbily and had treated him without due respect for his office. The way that I recall it, the Board of Internal Economy, which is controlled by the Tory government and which I believe has at least three cabinet ministers on it, had arranged for the internal audit to be done but had arranged for this in such a way that possibly the confidential files of the Ombudsman might be open to the present government; and I don't think that we in this Legislature should ever compromise the office of the Ombudsman in that manner. I feel that if the Ombudsman felt it was necessary to have this management consultant's study done on the funds which should have been appropriated, there should have been no sly move or attempt by this government to try to get into the files of the Ombudsman.

I can well recall how furious the Ombudsman was that evening, and he informed the committee members that the Board of Internal Economy could keep its money and the qualifications it had set down, and that under no circumstances was he going to have any kind of management consultant study done which might jeopardize the privacy of his files and the way he operates. I believe the Ombudsman did the right thing—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Really?

Mr. Mancini: —and that's why I believe it is necessary that strict guidelines be set up as to how we budget for the office of the Ombudsman. I believe that the budget should be set by the select committee. These are the people who have worked with the Ombudsman over a number of years. They know how his office operates. They know his jurisdiction well. They have been around the world and they have seen the offices of other ombudsmen. They have had the opportunity to compare his operation with others. I have the confidence in them that they would be able to set a fair and equitable budget for the Ombudsman.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How did your member on the Board of Internal Economy vote?

Mr. Mancini: I am giving my own personal opinion of the report of the select committee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then don't accuse the three Tory cabinet ministers on that committee. Include your member on that committee.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, when the member for Parry Sound was the government whip, there used to be dozens and dozens of members there; now we only have three, and one's squawking.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: What has that got to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How did your member vote on the Board of Internal Economy?

Mr. Gregory: If there were a competent speaker, there would be more members here.

Mr. Mancini: I'm sorry; I didn't hear that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He said if there were a better speaker today, there would be more members over here.

Mr. Mancini: I wasn't the only speaker today.

Mr. Eakins: The Tories should remember they had 31 away yesterday; so their record wasn't very good.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. Will the member for Essex South please continue uninterrupted?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How did your member vote?

Mr. Mancini: There is no way that anybody can defend three government members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have got five of your colleagues to listen to you.

Mr. Mancini: There is no way anybody can defend that.

Mr. Ruston: Three out of 57.

Mr. Mancini: Yes, three out of 57.

Mr. Ruston: No, there are four.

Mr. Mancini: Four?

Mr. Ruston: The member for Simcoe Centre is down here on our side.

Mr. Mancini: Oh, I see. I welcome him aboard. We are glad to have him here. There's a seat for him right back here next to me.

An hon. member: I don't want to remind you, but at most you only had five in here this morning.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fact, there are as many Tories listening to you as there are Liberals.

Interjection.

Mr. Nixon: This whole place ought to close down.

Mr. Mancini: I can well recall the good job that the member for Parry Sound did, and the government whip's office has suffered since he left.

One of the major duties charged to the select committee on the Ombudsman in the past few months was whether the responsibility of the Ombudsman and his jurisdiction should be expanded; he wanted to cover the municipal level and expand his office to do the same.

I am pleased to find out and I am pleased to hear that the members of the committee have opted against that proposal. I do not believe that it is necessary for the Ombudsman to investigate these local matters. I think that the Ombudsman's office at this time needs more experience and more time to get its office together to find out exactly how and under what guidelines he wants to investigate the activities that are brought to his attention and come under the Ontario government and its agencies.

For the life of me I cannot understand at this particular time why the Ombudsman would want to investigate other areas. His staff at present is in the neighbourhood of 100 and I am sure, if he had to investigate these other areas, there would be a large increase in his staff and in his budget and pretty soon we would have a bureaucracy so big in the Ombudsman's office that it might become inefficient. When that happened who would investigate the Ombudsman's office for its inefficiency? I think we need a lean operation in the Ombudsman's office and they should get on to the matters they have already been charged with. In the future, if the members of the assembly feel that his office should be expanded, then I say we can consider that step.

I would like to congratulate the members on the select committee on the Ombudsman for the work and time they have put into their project. I encourage them to continue to sit on this matter.

Mr. Nixon: Five days a week.

Mr. Gregory: Five days a week for 10 weeks.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When the House isn't sitting.

Mr. Eakins: Much has been said by the various speakers in regard to the report and I rise to speak very briefly, as the hour is getting along. I wanted to make a few comments as a member of that committee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: John, there's only two Liberals in the House today and there's five Tories.

Mr. Eakins: Well I'll tell the minister, the average of the Liberals in the House today is much greater than the average of the Conservative Party yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: And the quality is always better.

Mr. Eakins: And the quality is tops.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not in ability.

Mr. Gregory: We will just have to admit that you are just average.

Mr. Mancini: Bring the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck) back as whip.

Mr. Eakins: There was some comment made when the committee on the Ombudsman arranged a tour to look into the ombudsman function in various countries.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) is leaving; let the record show that.

Mr. Mancini: Let the record show he is going to talk to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon).

Mr. Eakins: I support the trip the members took to look into these jurisdictions.

I remember when I served in municipal office, many people used to say, "don't go to the convention, save the money." Many of the people who did not take the time to attend the various conferences and conventions were the losers, because they were not keeping up with pending legislation and making their voice known to government. I feel the same way about this tour that the committee on the Ombudsman took.

As the Ombudsman has been in office for only three years, I think this was an appropriate time to visit some of the other jurisdictions to gain from the experience they had the benefit of receiving over a period of years, such as in Sweden where the ombudsman's office has been in effect since the 1800's, right down to Israel where it has only been in existence for the last seven years. There was a good variety of jurisdictions to visit and compare notes with.

I am supportive of the recommendations in the report, but I would like to express a couple of opinions. My colleagues have pointed out some of the differences in the various countries. For instance, in Sweden the complaints are received by the press. They can't print the names of those involved but they are free to report on the type of complaint. In other countries, however, the press is not involved at all.

One jurisdiction, Israel, impressed me very much, and I am sure other members would join with me in that. It is a joint function where the state controller and ombudsman's office is one office. It is given the status of a cabinet ministry, but is outside and independent. The state controller function has a staff of about 500, and the ombudsman function about 50. The ombudsman deals with anybody coming under the state controller's jurisdiction.

Dr. Nebenzahl, the ombudsman, is selected by a committee and appointed by the state. He is in his fourth year as ombudsman and is the second person to hold this office. He has never had a strong political affiliation, which I found very interesting. He sees the combined function as having a very great advantage. In fact, I would say it is unique in the world.

Complaints in Israel may be received in writing or verbally. The members of the Knesset, unlike England, can contact the Ombudsman on behalf of a citizen. I noted that Dr. Nebenzahl said that he does not see anybody personally, because he feels it would be unfair unless he saw everyone. I was very much impressed with the operation in Israel. As a result of the visit to the various jurisdictions we will have an opportunity to put together their comments and views which I am sure will be very helpful to us here.

One complaint that I hear in Ontario is— which I think sometimes is unfair in respect to the Ombudsman—the Ombudsman's office and, in many ways, his budget.

While the ombudsman's office in some of the other countries was very small in comparison to our own, I feel the Ombudsman here is certainly entitled to an office comparable to that of a cabinet minister. I don't think anyone should complain about that.

When I compared the ombudsmen and the members of the parliaments in other countries we visited, I found the members of this Legislature are physically better looked after, in many ways, than many of those members. I think this is comparable to the office of the ombudsman there.

One observation I made is the Ombudsman in Ontario, in three years, is perhaps better known, both in office and person, than in any other jurisdiction I visited.

Sometimes we hear complaints about the Ombudsman advertising the office and advertising for business. I found, in talking to some of the committee members and some of the ombudsmen's staff, that many jurisdictions would like to do what the Ombudsman has been able to do here, that is make the office very well known throughout his jurisdiction.

One recommendation regarding jurisdiction over municipal matters: As one who has served in municipal affairs, I believe that somehow and some day the Ombudsman's function should include municipal jurisdiction. However, I feel at this time the recommendation of the committee is proper. I feel the Ombudsman's office should iron out a few of the problems they have before moving to a further jurisdiction.

Some comment has been made about the time the office spends on non-jurisdictional complaints. This can be dealt with in two ways. The Ombudsman can simply say it's not our function, set it aside and let them look up the proper authority; or he can endeavour, as he is doing, to help out by referring them to the appropriate jurisdiction.

I think all members of this House realize that many people who contact us are confused as to jurisdiction, whether it's municipal, provincial, or federal. As a member I personally endeavour to help them out whenever I can by steering them in the right direction, rather than saying this is not my function. This might be looked upon as one of the faults of the Ombudsman, if you wanted to look at it that way, that he is endeavouring to help everyone and as a result perhaps has got bogged down with a lot of complaints that perhaps he could have redirected to other jurisdictions.

I feel we all have a job to do in creating a good liaison with the Ombudsman's office. I, for one, am going to do everything I can to create that good liaison, rather than have continual disharmony with the Ombudsman's office. I'm supportive of the Ombudsman's office and I think it's been very helpful, certainly in the jurisdiction I represent.

I would like to see a speeding up in the processing of the cases so that complainants can get results much faster than at the present time. This is one of the main reasons I would not, at this time, like to see the Ombudsman take on a municipal function.

These are just a few of the comments which I have had. I have found the visit to the other jurisdictions most helpful and as time goes on I hope we can draw on those experiences to help us here in the jurisdiction of Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: I thought I would make a few comments about the report. I feel very strongly about the matter pertaining to the Ombudsman, the committee, his jurisdiction, who's going to look after his budget and so on.

It's very difficult, really, for me to express my views as clearly and as thoroughly as I would like, because those views can very easily be misconstrued. I have a high regard for the members of the committee, and it goes without saying a high regard for the Ombudsman himself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Okay.

Mr. Nixon: Frankly, I believe he would have served the province far better if he'd simply stood for nomination to election in this House for any of the three parties and would come into the House and express his views with his unmatched style. He's obviously one of the brightest and ablest people in the law profession, perhaps in any profession, in the province. In some respects I think we have lost a good deal of his inherent and personal abilities by elevating him to this high office that is so easily misunderstood, and perhaps to some extent, in my view, is misunderstood even by the Ombudsman and the committee.

Frankly, in perspective, I am disappointed at what we have done in the establishment of the office and in our relatively brief experience with the office. I have felt that the argument or the public discussion over the expense and the trappings of the office has been unfortunate, but in my view as well the blame rests entirely with the individual who received the appointment. There is no question in my mind that he is and was the ablest person for it, but I personally feel that the expense of the office and its size and its ramifications have gone beyond what I as an individual member who voted for the formation of the office had envisaged.

Frankly, I feel the same way about the select committee dealing with the Ombudsman. I almost feel that with the length of time they spend in their deliberations, with the staff they want and have assembled around them, and with the seriousness in which they take their responsibilities—

Mr. M. N. Davison: How do you assemble one staff member around a committee?

Mr. Nixon: —that we could very well do without the Ombudsman and let them deal with all of these problems. A person in the community who feels that he cannot be served by the government or be served by a private member could approach the Ombudsman's committee. They're in session all the time. Why can't they deal with these things?

I just feel that we have somehow established a system and an office, and ramifications around it, which are far more complex and enveloped in mystery and expense than we ever envisaged. I certainly am not prepared to commend the committee for their decision to travel all over Europe. I have listened to the members of the committee and as far as I can tell there are only two or three people here who aren't members of the committee. I've listened to them justify to themselves and anybody who would listen how important it was that they find out what is happening in all those countries.

I think, Mr. Speaker, you know my views on this. I travel at public expense myself from time to time, so I suppose I can be guilty of hypocrisy. But for that whole committee with all of their staff to assemble themselves and traipse through Europe finding out what Messrs. Ombudsmen are doing—

Mr. Lawlor: You are turning into a conservative.

Mr. Nixon: —I just think was a classic waste of money. For us to stand here and try to justify it is just bloody ridiculous.

Mr. Lawlor: One of the most purlblind members.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Nonsense. You don't understand the process.

Mr. Nixon: Just ridiculous. All right, I have unburdened my views in that particular matter and I would certainly feel like a hypocrite if I stood here and nodded to the chairman and the other members of the committee and said, "What a fine job you're doing."

Mr. Lawlor: Neanderthal.

Mr. Nixon: I think the concept of sitting for five days a week all through the summer dealing with the four or five annual reports that we've had in the three years of the function of the Ombudsman is once again a very questionable exercise.

An hon. member: Why don't you wait and see?

Mr. G. Taylor: No committee should sit. Cancel all the committees for the summer.

Mr. Jones: A waste of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Lawlor: Why don't you get on some committees and find out?

Mr. Nixon: Those are my views on those matters. As a private member, I put them forward. You see, it's useless to say I have a high regard for all of the individuals involved in it because you're bound to take it personally and I can't help that.

One thing I suppose I should express a view on is the Ombudsman's budget. I was listening with interest to my colleague the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) who indicated the Ombudsman had said that he was not treated with respect by the Board of Internal Economy. I wasn't sure whether this was in the review of his most recent budget, which took place in my presence on the board I guess about two months ago now, or perhaps the review previously when there was more public and private controversy about it. I trust it was not the most recent review, because frankly I could think of no reason why the Ombudsman would be concerned about his treatment at the board.

It may have referred to a previous occasion. I certainly hope that nobody comes before the board or is dealt by the board without adequate respect to the person's office and the person as an individual. Anything else is obviously regrettable and should not be allowed to happen.

I think, really, the concept of the Ombudsman's committee approving his budget is a good one. I think that it is the same sort of thing that should apply to the Provincial Auditor, that the public accounts committee—which, once again, is chaired by a member of the opposition with representation from all parties—may very well have the principal responsibility to review the budget with the official concerned. I see nothing wrong with that and there may be other public offices where that would be useful. Certainly for the Ombudsman and the Provincial Auditor, it would have usefulness. It seems to me that it would be quite possible for the select committee, or the standing committee concerned, to review the budget in detail with the officer and the office concerned and approve it with their resolution.

It is quite possible for convenience that it would then come before the Board of Internal Economy with the approval of the appropriate committee. Perhaps that step could be eliminated, I don't know. I personally think that the Board of Internal Economy is the parallel or perhaps opposite construction to the Management Board of Cabinet. It is through the Board of Internal Economy and the Management Board of Cabinet that the recommendations for expenditure are printed in the estimate book and come before the Legislature, which of course has the final approval for the expenditure.

The Legislature does not have the power to increase the amounts by resolution, as we know, but does have the power to reduce them or give them basic approval. It seems to me that recommendation is one that ought to receive the consideration of the members of the House on all sides.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Will you argue that before the board?

Mr. Nixon: It was indicated by the member for Simcoe Centre (Mr. G. Taylor) that unless the House acts in a positive way in the recommendations that it may be that the committee ought to be wound down. Frankly, that idea is very much in my mind, not that my opinion will wind it down but at least it is an opinion which I have the right to express.

I personally think the involvement in the procedures of the Ombudsman by the committee have, in my view, had what you might call diminishing return. The Ombudsman concept, as I understood it, was that his office was there with sufficient research availabilities so that any citizen could approach him if he felt wronged by the bureaucracy or the powers of government.

I believe that we established, perhaps, too much machinery, too much review of the Ombudsman and his office. I, as a member of the Legislature, would offer my advice to the select committee on the Ombudsman: that they should review their own concepts of their job. If they feel that this is going to require a full-time operation by that committee, then there is one member who disagrees with them. I am going to say so whenever I am asked and even when I am not; that's why I do so now.

I think that the controversy involving the Ombudsman has been unfortunate. I personally feel that our experience over the past three years has not indicated that we have had that many cases in the community that could not have been remedied in a good and useful way that justifies all of the expenditures and all of the involvement that we are getting ourselves into. The thing seems to be feeding on itself and growing in expense and complication to the point that its usefulness is, in my view, coming under question.

I simply say again—I suppose so that I can send it out in Hansard—to people who may feel that I have affronted them personally, that is not my intention. I have the highest regard for the individual and the individuals in the committee. Whether or not you accept that, I certainly say it sincerely. I believe that we have a problem involved with the committee and with the Ombudsman which we didn't have to have.

It is unfortunate, perhaps, that we didn't establish the office with more forethought. I was a member of the Legislature, and a leader of the party which was pressing for what we called a parliamentary commissioner in those days, and we had done a considerable amount of research which we felt would have been effective if our recommendations had been accepted. We have the best qualified person who could possibly have been found. We have a committee with the very best of intentions. I, for one, am not satisfied with the function of either of them.

[12:45]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does any other honourable member wish to participate in the debate? This then concludes the debate on the consideration of the fourth report of the select committee on the Ombudsman.

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They're all gone.

Mr. Nixon: I'm quite prepared to speak.

Mr. Mancini: Yesterday we were debating Bill 96 which was introduced into this House by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial relations. The main and most important aspect of this bill is to raise the legal drinking age in the province of Ontario from 18 to 19 years of age.

I can recall last night how the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) was citing how courageous this present Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations was for introducing such a bill, and how courageous he was to stand up in the House and say that the drinking age must be raised.

Mr. Nixon: Now that he is 20.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was waiting for the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway).

Mr. Mancini: Where was the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations or his predecessor two years ago when the Jones report was tabled with the cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where were you?

Mr. Mancini: Where were the cabinet ministers who supported my private member's bill back in November? Where was the strong government action? It was nowhere to be found. As a matter of fact, they had to wait until a private member's bill forced them to act on such an important matter.

Mr. Gregory: Do you want a billboard?

Mr. Mancini: Not only that, they had a debate in cabinet numerous times, as was reported by the media.

Mr. Gregory: How do you know?

Mr. Nixon: We listen in. We have a tunnel.

Mr. Gregory: That's how you know.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You sure do. You've done that for years.

Mr. Mancini: On numerous times there was a debate in cabinet, not about whether the private member's bill which I introduced would pass, but whether it would or would not be blocked.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's not true at all.

Mr. Mancini: Where is the courage the Minister of Correctional Services was talking about last night? It's nowhere. There was no courage at all. The government was backed into a corner and now this is its response.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why didn't you do it before the Jones report?

Mr. Mancini: It's typical of the actions we have seen by the government since the fateful 1977 election when the people of Ontario said no way—for a second consecutive time, as my good friend from Windsor-Walkerville points out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have stolen your bill right from the report of the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones). Where was your courage before his report?

Mr. Gregory: You have built your whole career on a private member's bill.

Mr. Mancini: Even though the government had recommendations from the select committee on highway safety to raise the drinking age to 19—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And Terry Jones.

Mr. Mancini: —and all the statistics they had to back up their statements, still there was no government action. Not until they were backed into a corner on that fateful day on November 10, 1977, when they had to vote on private member's Bill 76. That's when it happened.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You were here for two years. Where was your bill? You could have introduced a bill at any time.

Mr. Mancini: The private members' lottery system did not start until last year. This was the first opportunity I had to do something about it and I took it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) has been introducing bills for years.

An hon. member: That's leadership.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You're riding on Terry Jones' back.

Mr. Mancini: We also have to witness in this House the third party, which has been so disorganized and disunited for the last few months that—

Mr. Gregory: Members over there ought to hear this garbage.

Mr. Mancini: —it can't get together on a major policy such as raising the drinking age. What do they do? They call a free vote. They still think it's private members' hour. For their information it's not private members' hour—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did you hear Alf Stong last night?

Mr. Mancini: —they should get together on this very important issue, because they do represent a lot of people in the province of Ontario—

Mr. G. Taylor: Remo, there's only one of them here. To whom are you speaking? Wait until they are here to defend themselves.

Mr. Mancini: —and they should give them the fine representation that they deserve.

Mr. Gregory: Pick on somebody your own size.

Mr. Mancini: I believe that we're going to be seeing a lot of free votes from the third party in the near future. I can bring to the attention of the third party, and to the attention of this Legislature, that there is a socialist government in this country—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Be careful.

Mr. Nixon: Red Tories.

Mr. Mancini:—which has taken action on the drinking age. The socialist government of Saskatchewan lowered the drinking age from 21 to 19 then to 18, and after finding that the age of 18 was not satisfactory, they raised the drinking age back to 19. That's their socialist colleagues in Saskatchewan who did that, sir.

Mr. Gregory: That's where you got the idea from.

Mr. Mancini: This bill serves two good purposes, two very good purposes. It removes legal drinking from the high school age population of our province.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have been telling Stong that but he won't listen.

Mr. Mancini: No longer will people in our high schools be able to take a liquid lunch and then go back to the classroom and be an undue influence on the other students in the class.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Page four of the Jones report.

Mr. Mancini: Whether it's page four of the Jones report, or page five of the select committee on highway safety report, or page 18 of some other report, that's not what's important. What's important is that the government had all those reports and didn't do anything about them. They just dragged their feet. It's a slow government. They had a problem and they didn't do anything about it, that's what's important.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What do you think this bill is; Bill 96?

Mr. Nixon: The minister was out observing drinking habits at the ball game.

Mr. Mancini: The second most important aspect of this bill is that it brings public debate on the whole issue of alcohol consumption. Over the last few months, with the attention that the news media have given this issue, it's given everyone in this province and in this Legislature a good opportunity to discuss the whole problem of alcohol consumption, what it's doing to our people here in the province and what we can do to minimize any of the great problems we foresee.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You're moralizing.

Mr. Mancini: No, I'm not moralizing. We heard statistics from the Minister of Correctional Services last night.

Mr. Nixon: He is telling it like it is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, would the member for Essex South address his remarks to the chair and just disregard the interjections?

Mr. Mancini: Yes, I will. This is all very important. Fine, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, come on.

Mr. Mancini: We heard statistics last night from the Minister of Correctional Services, who stated that 90 per cent—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We're going to continue, though.

Mr. Gregory: Trying to ignore you is difficult.

Mr. Mancini:—of all his inmate population had alcohol abuse problems. He also stated that in the federal penal system 80 per cent of all the inmate population had alcohol problems. So we have all the statistics; we don't need any more statistics. There is one thing that is very certain, the government had all these facts before it. They refused to act until they were backed into a corner and they didn't even know until the very last day whether they were going to allow my bill to even have a vote.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is totally and completely false.

Mr. Mancini: The minister will have his chance to speak.

So, Mr. Speaker, without hesitation, I support this bill; and, without hesitation, I suppose I should congratulate the minister for having some courage, I guess—not much, I don't want to be too kind to him—to bring this bill before the House.

I would like to say that subsection 4 of section 2, where the bill allows people who are 18 years of age to continue to work on premises that serve alcohol, I think was a good move by the minister, because in this time of high unemployment I think we should do everything we can to keep our young people working. I support that aspect of the bill.

I would like to make one final comment. Many of the regulations that we are going to enact are not included in the bill. I was always under the impression when the government side of the House talked about the package legislation and changing many of the rules that we had gone by before, that these things were going to be included in a bill.

I don't think it gave the members of this House a fair opportunity to debate and to state our views on some of those changes, such as the new regulation which the minister proposes to open up drinking on Sundays and on voting day. I think he should have given the members a little more authority to speak on those subjects. When it is done by regulation, it really doesn't matter because it is going to be done.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Another private member's bill.

Mr. Mancini: Oh, another private member's bill for every government regulation that is made?

Finally, I would like to state once again my support for this bill and hope for a speedy passage so that the law can be enacted by December 31, 1978.

On motion by Mr. Young, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Grossman, the House adjourned at 12:58 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS INQUIRY

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am today tabling the report of the royal commission appointed to inquire into Waste Management Incorporated and related companies and individuals in dealings with this government.

Members will recall that this inquiry, conducted by Mr. Justice S. H. S. Hughes of the Supreme Court of Ontario, was established in May 1977. This followed a newspaper report and questions in the Legislature regarding a political contribution in 1974 by one of the relevant companies and the activities of the Ministry of the Environment in relation to landfill sites north of Metropolitan Toronto.

The investigation and hearings of the commission found no wrongdoing or improper conduct. The report of Mr. Justice Hughes says: "I have to say categorically that I am unable to find that there was any wrongdoing or impropriety or any improper influence brought to bear on members of the Ontario government or its public service on the part of officials of Waste Management Incorporated, Disposal Services Limited and affiliated companies in respect of applications for landfill sites by them from 1971 to the present day."

At another point in his report, Mr. Justice Hughes states: "I recommend no criminal prosecution or punitive action of any kind against any person arising out of this inquiry." In the final chapter he adds: "I am happy to have presided over a searching inquiry in a case of some notoriety and to have found no evidence of corruption."

In connection with the contribution to the Progressive Conservative Party of Ontario, the report points out: "There was in 1974 nothing improper in making large contributions to political parties and there was nothing unlawful about what was done."

Mr. Justice Hughes found no connection between the contribution and the activities of the Ministry of the Environment in this regard. He says: "All the evidence is to the effect that no one at the Ministry of the Environment, from the minister down, knew anything about the donation until three years later; or that what was done was not as consistent with absence of knowledge or of influence as with their presence, and of the latter there is not a shred."

Mr. Justice Hughes has made two recommendations arising out of the evidence relating to the Ministry of the Environment. The government is now considering these recommendations.

Finally, in his concluding chapter, entitled Reflections, Mr. Justice Hughes makes observations about the registration of political parties and the limits on fund raising established in the Election Finances Reform Act, 1975, which members may wish to note.

Mr. Nixon: It's harmless.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DOW CHEMICAL

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'll direct my first question to the Attorney General. Can the Attorney General respond to the request, which he somewhat avoided last Friday, to table the internal or external legal opinions which prompted the Ontario government to launch the suit against the Dow Chemical Company? Since this government has, from time to time, tabled internal opinions—and it's a good practice, in our view—would he table that for two purposes: first, so that the public can be guaranteed that this was not some type of public relations exercise from the beginning; and second, so that we can have those opinions around which to help construct new and better environmental legislation with teeth in it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there is nothing internally in any of the files that is inconsistent with Mr. Robinette's opinion. I haven't had an opportunity to peruse these files as far back as 1971 and with respect to any legal opinions that may have been circulated at that time. Certainly as of this time, I am confident that there is nothing contrary to what was clearly indicated by Mr. Robinette in his opinion to me, namely, that there was an arguable case. The major issue seemed to turn on the issue of damages. But I will be happy to review this matter and to advise the Leader of the Opposition and the members of the Legislature further.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: If the opinion of Mr. Robinette was basically that the arguable case, as the minister puts it, could at best be argued for perhaps $1 million in damages—if that is really the only opinion that was in the possession of the ministry at any time, would the minister care to—

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That's not what I said, and you know that.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm sorry. Apparently I have misunderstood the minister.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There are two issues: liability and damages.

Mr. S. Smith: I understood the minister to say that all the opinions within the ministry are somewhat similar to those of Mr. Robinette. That's what I heard the minister to say. If that is the case, if all the opinions felt as Mr. Robinette did, that the best the government could do was $1 million, would the minister care to explain why the government sued for $35 million and made a big show of it?

On the other hand, if the minister had other opinions which could legitimately have led him to believe that a $35-million suit at that time was a reasonable legal course to follow, then would the minister be so kind as to table those opinions, for two reasons: first, so that we could see them and believe them and, secondly, so that we could construct better environmental legislation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, as I think the Leader of the Opposition appreciates, there are two issues in any lawsuit of this kind: the issue as to liability and the issue as to damages. These are two quite distinct issues. I don't think it's in the public interest for the Leader of the Opposition to—

Mr. Kerrio: To ask questions.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: —to seek, inadvertently or otherwise, to confuse these issues. With respect to the issue of liability, the legal opinions throughout have been with respect to the fact that the government had an arguable case. The issues as to liability were dealt with by Mr. Robinette in the opinion that I have tabled. I will review that in relation to the issue of liability.

What I tried to make clear to the members of the Legislature is that the issue as to damages is a distinct and very different issue. As I said on Friday, at the outset it was feared that these commercial fisheries had been destroyed forever, or for at least 50 years. That was a very vital issue in relation to damages. It now turns out that, with the benefit of the passage of time, these fisheries may be opened as early as 1980 as opposed to being irretrievably lost. That obviously has an enormous impact on the quantum of damages that would be awarded by a court, even assuming that the action was successful.

Mr. Cassidy: What a bunch you are! That is only 10 years out of some people's lives.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The second major issue with respect to the issue of damages was the issue of whether or not it would be necessary or appropriate to dredge the bed of the St. Clair River. The wisdom, the best scientific advice as of the early 1970s, was that this would have had to be done. That was estimated at a cost of $10 million.

With the ongoing scientific assessment of the situation there, the wisdom and the advice from the scientists is that this is not necessary, but would cause more harm than good by reason of the settlement of the sediment. This was established by the fact that these fisheries are likely to come on stream by 1980 or the early 1980s. Those are the two major issues in relation to damages. It was only with the passage of time that it was possible to ascertain what a likely quantum of damages would be. There is nothing unusual in that because in many lawsuits one determines whether there is an issue in liability and commences the action on the issue of liability, claiming a global amount for damages but not knowing because only the passage of time will determine what the likely damages are going to be.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, no. The government said that for political reasons. It never intended to carry it through.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: In this particular case, it's quite clear that the passage of time has indicated that the global amount for damages was, fortunately, what would have been awarded or assessed regardless of liability; because the court when called upon to assess the damages, regardless of any finding of liability, was only going to assess a small fraction of what was feared. Fortunately, the passage of time demonstrated that the worst fears of the government in relation to the damages were not as pessimistic as was reasonably believed to be the situation at that particular time.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: I don't think the Attorney General's revisionist reinterpretation of history will stand up, because I think that $35 million suit was originally picked for political purposes, but without the intention to carry it through.

I'd like to ask the minister, in view of the apparent inadequacies of the law which have been revealed during the course of the ministry's rather dilatory conduct of this particular suit, has the government been studying revisions to the law of Ontario in order to ensure that in future in such circumstances the polluter will pay, and will be liable for the damages which the government has been ineffective in collecting in the Dow case?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Obviously, the law and regulations in relation to environmental concerns of this nature or other areas of concern are under constant and continuing review by the government. It's quite clear, in my view, that they're quite adequate.

Mr. Cassidy: In other words, no; that means no. In other words, the Attorney General hasn't looked at it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: One could assume in the context of partisan politics not to admit, or find it difficult to admit, that the government ever does anything right. I've only been a member of this government for something under three years but I find it ironical that hardly a month goes by where we don't receive a brief from some segment of the industry in this province complaining about how tough we are in relation to our environmental regulations.

Members opposite support these concerns when it suits them. As the Premier previously pointed out, when it comes to cans and bottles where are their environmental concerns?

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are great environmentalists over there.

Mr. Cassidy: The government is not reviewing the law at all.

[2:15]

Mr. S. Smith: If I may ask a final supplementary, since the matter of liability and the matter of damages, as the Attorney General said, could be considered separately, and accepting that Dow did not admit liability—it seems a part of the deal was that it didn't have to admit liability to settle these damages—and so we can focus on damages.

For the sake of allowing the public of Ontario to understand what really went on in this instance, could the Attorney General provide to this House more detailed information concerning the makeup of that $35 million? Apparently $10 million was for dredging, which is now not necessary. The other $25 million was for the fishery, I presume, which now turns out was only lost for maybe 10 or 15 years. It still seems to me there is a lot more money than the $250,000 involved. Could the minister table with this House how the $25 million, apart from the other $10 million for dredging, was arrived at and how he feels that the fishermen have been damaged over the 10 years? Could he table what the government damages have been and whether the $250,000 has really paid for that?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I will assist as much as I can by tabling a memorandum as to why it was felt advisable at that time to make a global claim for the $35 million.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, would the Attorney General not be prepared to concede that the law at the present time is deficient with respect to those causal sequences in tort law and that this government's environmental law needs a fairly thorough revision?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Attorney General has indicated that we have had an arguable case throughout, and that a good deal of the delay, as I understand it, was occasioned by the fact that we could not determine the parties, would he table the legal opinion which was given to establish against whom we had an arguable case to begin with?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't understand the question, Mr. Speaker. I think it was quite clear that the lawsuit was commenced against the defendants who were believed to be the appropriate defendants in the case. I don't know, specifically, what more the member is seeking in the way of information in that respect.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, if I could be helpful—

Mr. Speaker: In the interest of fairness, we will listen to the member for Beaches-Woodbine.

Ms. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a supplementary for the Attorney General. In the negotiations for the settlement, did the government specifically ask for reimbursement of the $400,000 given to the fishermen to tide them over their period of unemployment as the result of the close-down of commercial fishing?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That was not a provable part of the government's claim.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that the parties were not originally ascertained—that it did take some time to ascertain the parties against whom the action would be taken? That being the case, could we know what the opinion was originally as to who the appropriate parties were against whom we had an arguable case?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Again, I would review the matter with respect to any problems that did occur, certainly with respect to matters of environmental pollution. The determination as to who is responsible, I concede, is always a very difficult task. I am quite prepared to share with this House the process with which the law officers of the crown and the very knowledgeable counsel who were retained went through in order to make that determination.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: Now that we have seen the end, at least for some considerable time, of the property tax reform idea, could the Treasurer share with this House what the future is going to be for some of the groups that were waiting for property tax reform? Sarnia and Windsor have been mentioned, and I would like to hear about them. But I specifically want to quote from the budget which says that, according to the Charter for Ontario, to reduce the municipal tax burden there would be "a basic tax credit to senior citizens enriched from $290 to $510" and this would be "in conjunction with the implementation of property tax reform." What happens to the seniors?

Mr. Conway: He is raising the rent.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that's a two-part question and if I knew the answer to either one I would be glad to share it with the House. I honestly don't know the answer at this moment to either one of them.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the budget statement itself states very clearly that "we propose to build on this proven system to meet our commitment in A Charter for Ontario," and since it's outlined very clearly that the enrichment of the property tax credit for seniors will go from $290 to $510, albeit that it was supposed to be with the implementation of reform, is the Treasurer, in fact, prepared to stand behind this commitment from the charter, a commitment repeated in his budget, or have the seniors lost out completely as part of this lack of willingness on the part of the Treasurer to proceed with this package?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I stand completely behind the charter, which is one of the finest documents to have been produced in a long time.

Mr. Peterson: No one is behind you.

Mr. Warner: Don't stand behind it. Why don't you stand on it? It's the only thing it is good for.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Whether that section of the charter will be implemented in the fall of 1978 for taxation year 1979 or somewhat after that, is a decision which has not yet been taken.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that assessment equalization factors in the province have been frozen since 1970 because of the delays of the government in making decisions about market value assessment in general, and in view of the fact that the equalization factors are, in fact, a separate question and that that's what's hurting in western Ontario, is the Treasurer prepared to bring in legislation now in order to unfreeze the equalization factor, as this party has already recommended, and ensure that those municipalities that have been hurt by these delays can get a reasonable kind of arrangement in equalization from Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, that's a question that should be put to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I will redirect the question, but I can't conceive how the Minister of Revenue has taken over the Treasurer's role of responsibility for equalization in municipal grant policy.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Minister of Revenue have a response to that?

Mr. McClellan: It is the boss's job.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to respond to the honourable member. We don't have the equalization factors frozen in the province of Ontario, we have the assessment frozen; equalization factors are not frozen.

Mr. Blundy: A supplementary question for the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker: Given the Treasurer's previous statement that he could not provide transitional grants to certain municipalities which were seriously affected by the present transfer system, now that property tax reform has been shelved, is the Treasurer prepared to meet with the mayors of Sarnia, Windsor, St. Catharines and other municipalities so unfavourably affected to work out some future course to provide an equitable distribution for these municipalities?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cooke: When?

Mr. Laughren: Before the Treasurer decided to shelve property tax reform, did he have consultation with the Minister of Revenue to discuss the problems in the assessment review courts in view of the fact that they are clogged with appeals and, in fact, are going to cause a shift to the residential sections as those appeals are won by the large corporate taxpayers?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: How does the Treasurer plan on accommodating cities such as have been mentioned by the member for Sarnia—Windsor, Sarnia, St. Catharines—in the way of alleviating some of the iniquitous tax burdens that the citizens have had to pay over the last three or four years?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the most appropriate thing to do would be to have the meetings suggested by his colleague from Sarnia.

Mr. Cooke: When are you going to tell us something? We've been waiting for years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He's being polite.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: Given that the council of the city of Cambridge has been meeting with the Treasurer over the past two years, how long do these municipalities have to wait before he decides to take some action and give some relief to the people who are paying these taxes?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No one is more aware of some of the problems in some of the municipalities and of some of the home owners and/or tenants in some of the municipalities in this province. I think the statement speaks for itself. There is not a sufficient degree of consensus at this moment to proceed. How soon we will be able to proceed, I don't know. Nor is the provincial well so bottomless that we can simply say we'll solve some problems and not worry about creating others.

Mr. Bounsell: Just be equitable.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre with his first question.

Mr. Cassidy: It's the second question, Mr. Speaker; but I'll take a third one if you wish.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You've never been known to be greedy.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Energy, arising out of the letter which was sent on Friday by the chairman of the royal commission on the future of Hydro in Ontario to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle), of which I assume the Minister of Energy is also aware.

In that letter, Dr. Porter raises questions and says he has serious concerns with respect to the safety of existing nuclear power stations in Ontario—information which had come to his attention during the course of the past week. He continues: "We are further concerned that information relevant to this vital subject may not have been brought to the commission's attention by the responsible organizations."

My question to the minister is: Is he aware of any information relating to the safety of existing nuclear power stations in Ontario which could and should have been brought to the attention of Dr. Porter's commission either by Hydro or by the Ministry of Energy but which was not brought to their attention?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: No, I am not, Mr. Speaker. I was just recently made aware of this letter. I will look into it and report back.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the minister advise the House as to what steps he has taken to investigate the safety of our existing nuclear facilities, and will he undertake an immediate investigation of the responsibility of Ontario Hydro, in order that the safety of existing nuclear power stations is ensured?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can certainly assure the House that I will advise the House of any appropriate information that we happen to have or that we can find out about. I will report back to the House.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of the other study referred to in Dr. Porter's letter, a study commissioned by the Canadian Nuclear Association, which indicates some doubt about the viability of the nuclear option as an option? If he is aware of that study, could be table it in this House?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am not altogether familiar with that study, but since I am addressing the Canadian Nuclear Association tomorrow night in Ottawa, I am sure I will be able to get a copy of it at that time.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs will be looking into a number of these areas over the course of the summer, will the minister undertake that the information he does file with the House will be made available to the select committee so that it does not have to wait to look into the question of nuclear safety until after the publication of Dr. Porter's interim report, which has been delayed from June until some time in September?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can only assure the member opposite that we will table in this House all the information that we feel is relevant on this particular subject. As I indicated a few days ago, the whole philosophy underlying safety in nuclear energy is for full publication of this information.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I would like to ask the minister, since the tone of this letter conveys the clear feeling by Dr. Porter that there is information available to what he calls other responsible bodies which was not made available to the Porter commission, will he give an explanation to this House how such a matter can occur and whether the same kind of lack of information has been the case in this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can again promise that I will pass on to this House any information we have that might be relevant to this subject.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Does the minister not find it worrisome in the extreme that a royal commission set up by this House has had information withheld from it; and does the minister not feel that he should do more than merely pass on information that is available, but move heaven and earth to get the information that was withheld from a royal commission of this Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: If my investigations confirm that this is true, yes, I will be as indignant as I suspect the member opposite will be. We will take some steps to do something about it.

Mr. Warner: Check with the chairman of Hydro.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SCHOOLS

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Premier. Has the Premier received from ACFO a request to arrange an emergency meeting to discuss relationships between the Premier and ACFO as a result of his intervention in the matter of Bill 89? If so, is the Premier prepared to entertain ACFO's request for an emergency meeting to discuss the matter?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't say whether I have received a request. It's possible I may have. I told the representatives of ACFO not too many weeks ago, if memory serves me correctly, that I was quite prepared to meet with them early in September, prior to their annual meeting here in Toronto in the latter part of that month.

If ACFO wishes to meet prior to the September meeting that had been suggested, subject to other responsibilities I've never been reluctant to meet almost any group and I certainly have never been reluctant to meet with ACFO.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: As ACFO indicated over the weekend that one of its continuing concerns is knowing what the government's position is going to be with respect to that part of the Mayo commission report which recommended a French-language school board for Ottawa-Carleton, can the Premier indicate in the House now to ACFO, and to members of the Assembly, whether or not a decision on that very important matter has been reached and if it has been reached, what the result is?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can tell the honourable member that no decision has been reached. If this is really what ACFO wishes to meet us about, both myself and the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) would be delighted to meet with them. However, I'm not sure we would be in a position to give them any decision on this particular recommendation.

I also sense from the way the member has phrased his question that he obviously is in support of another school board in Ottawa for French education. I take that to note as representing the policy of the Liberal Party of Ontario.

FEDERAL HOUSING PROPOSALS

Mr. Cassidy: Could I bow to your judgement, Mr. Speaker, about the number of questions, because I had asked supplementaries prior to my first question?

Mr. Speaker: That's right.

Mr. Nixon: You can have a third if you want.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Premier arising out of questions which I asked in this House about a month ago to the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), relating to the increase in the rent-to-income scale for public housing tenants and for senior citizens in the province of Ontario.

Could the Premier say, rather than acting in due course, as we were told at that time, Ontario is now intending to go ahead at full speed on the increase in rent-to-income scales? Can the Premier say how the government justifies a 20 per cent increase in the rent scale for senior citizens who are getting the guaranteed income supplement and a 32 per cent increase for a single-parent with two children who is earning the minimum wage in the province of Ontario? How does the government justify those very sharp increases in the rent-to-income scales?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The ministers of housing are meeting at this precise moment on a number of issues. I sense this is one of them. I think the honourable member opposite is assuming something that really has not happened. There has been no decision made. There won't be any decision made until after the meetings today. When a decision, if any, is made on the subject we will inform the House. I think the honourable member is not only being premature, he may be erroneous as to the outcome.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the Premier aware, regardless of what he's just said now, that a month ago in this House the Minister of Housing stated Ontario had agreed with Mr. Ouellet that the rent-geared-to-income levels should rise to 25 per cent, but at that time he said it should rise in due course? Does that not appear to the Premier like a decision in principle which has already been taken on behalf of Ontario by his Ministry of Housing; and can he explain why the "in due course" is apparently turning into a decision that those increases should also take effect at a very early date?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision that any increases should take place at an early date. There has been no final determination of this by the government. As I said to the member, this is one of the issues that the ministers of housing from across the country are discussing, at this moment, I think, if they didn't do it this morning.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Would the Premier assure the House that should the rent review program continue and should there in fact be an agreement among the ministers of housing to settle at 25 per cent the rent-geared-to-income rents, that the way in which those increases would occur and be phased in, if they did, would at no time, in any way, be beyond those increases that would be permitted under the rent review guidelines such as may exist at the time?

In other words will the rent review, in effect and in spirit and action, apply to those houses as well as all others?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think any discussion of this nature is premature until the Minister of Housing for this province, after consultation with the other ministers and the federal minister, suggests what may or may not become a national sort of approach to this situation. I think it is premature to have any discussion as to how any rent control program will work, even the program being advocated by that great free-enterprise Liberal Party of the province of Ontario, which is advocating its continuation for another two years, even knowing it will prejudice the tenants and the development of new accommodation in the province of Ontario I think.

Mr. Cunningham: You are against it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly you're prejudicing the tenants; you're prejudicing the whole program.

Mr. S. Smith: Make clear your position on the matter.

Mr. Duksza: Supplementary: Is the Premier aware that the informants at the Ministry of Housing have suggested that the memorandum of agreement has already been signed and that the minister himself has stated that the minimum for rents may be as much as 25 per cent—minimum, not a maximum?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'll say once more, there has been no final determination by the government of this province on this issue. It is being discussed at this moment.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since it is reported in the press that the Minister of Housing is meeting with the provincial counterparts in this position in order to present Ontario's position at the provincial level, first to achieve some consensus and then go to the federal scene; if the Premier is familiar with that would he tell this House exactly what position the Minister of Housing is presenting to his counterparts from other provinces on our behalf? What position is Ontario taking in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm delighted to hear the Leader of the Opposition say the Minister of Housing is presenting a position on everybody's behalf.

Mr. Foulds: Maybe on your behalf, not on ours.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm delighted to hear that you've finally accepted that principle; that you finally have accepted that principle.

Mr. Conway: The question is, does Claude know what it is?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I may be quite wrong, Mr. Speaker, but I was under the impression—I could be wrong in this—that actually Mr. Ouellet was at the discussion or is at the discussions today; I may be wrong in that. If he is there and I am right, then perhaps it will be discussed with the federal minister of housing once again today.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary; the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the Premier aware that in addition to jacking up the rent-geared-to-income scale to a flat 25 per cent or beyond, that the ministers of housing are also agreeing to increases in the income on which those rents are based from an adjusted basis to a gross basis? Would the Premier give this House a commitment that rather than putting the balance sheet first in the provision of housing, the housing in the province, provided through Ontario Housing, be based on people's needs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The needs of people have always been the paramount concern of this government. It is very easy to give that commitment. Not only has it been the case, it will continue to be the case.

Mr. Warner: Tougher to follow it up.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would question whether the member can find a jurisdiction where they've had the same measure of success with respect to senior citizens' housing—or any other form of housing, for that matter—or where the people have been dealt with more equitably than in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: New question. The member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Excuse me. They got out of turn there. I think the next should go to the New Democratic Party. The member for Oshawa.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I think the leader confused you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The leader of the New Democratic Party thought he had put two original questions when in effect he had put only one. Then we went to the Liberal Party for a new question. The next sequence goes to the member for Oshawa.

HEALTH RECORDS

Mr. Breagh: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Health. I would like to ask the minister if he has an explanation as to how confidential medical records from Wellesley Hospital were found blowing around a parking lot at Sherbourne and Richmond this morning?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, but I will check into it.

Mr. Breagh: In the course of this investigation and in reporting back to the House, could the minister report on the procedures used at Wellesley that would allow this to happen to these records, which contain people's names, addresses and the precise nature of whatever surgery had taken place? Certainly, some of the records are not ones you would like to have spread around to the public. In addition, could the minister provide us with whatever guidelines his ministry might have sent out to hospitals that would allow such a thing to happen?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would be glad to. If the honourable member would send me copies of whatever he is waving about, it would assist us in making a speedier investigation.

SEX OFFENCES

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Attorney General. Has he prepared any position on behalf of his ministry in response to the recent recommendations of the Law Reform Commission with reference to 1. the elimination of rape as a criminal offence, 2. the elimination of incest as between consenting adults and 3. the reduction of the age of consent?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No, Mr. Speaker. There is a provincial Attorneys General meeting at the end of this month in Edmonton, and we have been actively working on a response to the amendments to the Criminal Code that were recently introduced in the federal Parliament.

As regards the recent paper published by the federal Law Reform Commission, we certainly will be reviewing that over the summer, once we get by this particular meeting. But I can't say at this particular point in time whether we will have a formal response or not. As the honourable member knows, the working paper of the federal Law Reform Commission is not a product of the federal government. We normally don't consider a formal response until the federal government itself determines that it may be interested in moving in that direction. Certainly we are going to review those proposals very carefully. It may be an interesting subject for discussion during consideration of our estimates in the fall.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Will the minister assure this House, even if the yet-to-be-tabled Wyatt report on the financing of the Workmen's Compensation Board contains various alternatives and options which the minister and the government may not be able to choose amongst and legislate immediately, that the minister will introduce legislation to be enacted this month, even if those long-overdue increases for injured workmen must be based upon the present act?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I have already made that commitment to this House. Indeed, I have said that will be introduced before the end of this session. Specifically, the increases to the benefits will be the area which we will be concentrating upon.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: When may we expect the Wyatt report to be tabled and may we expect the legislation to be introduced that very same day?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes, in answer to the second question, and as soon as we can have it ready.

[2:45]

Mr. McClellan: May I ask the minister whether she will give us the same commitment that the increase she grants will take into account the full increase in the cost of living since the last WCB benefit increase, and adjust the rates accordingly?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it most certainly takes that factor into account along with some other factors—yes.

TEACHER LAYOFFS

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. I am sure he is aware of the seven week long strike that was held between the Essex county separate school teachers and their board. In view of the fact that this strike had to be settled by final selector, how could it be that only a few days after his selection was made, the board saw fit to lay off 19 teachers and cut many programs? Could the minister inform the House if these selectors take into account the board's ability to pay? If this is so, how could such drastic action follow his decision?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the teachers are presently going to grieve under the contract concerning this matter, and that there may be legal action involved.

I have met with the teachers' association. They have presented the situation to me and I think that the remedies for them are there in the contract and perhaps in a legal sense.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary question: Mr. Speaker: Could the minister inform the House if Bill 100 has been contravened?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The contravention of Bill 100 could easily be one of the legal matters that would have to be considered. I am not a lawyer and I wouldn't venture to give an opinion on that.

Mr. Mancini: One more supplementary, Mr. Speaker: just to get some added information, could the minister inform the House in answer to part of my first question if these selectors take into account the board's ability to pay before they make their final selection?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would have to ask the selector if he did or if he didn't.

Mr. Mancini: Isn't it standard policy?

Hon. Mr. Wells: There is no standard policy. If my friend will read Bill 100 I think the financial situation that pertains in the community is a matter that could be put before the selector. However, in a final offer selection he may not have taken this into account. I couldn't comment on that. We would have to ask the selector whether he did.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister make a recommendation to the cabinet that in cases like this the cost of the pension benefits that result from contracts, which the province has to guarantee, be part of a requirement that the selectors take into consideration when they arrive at their decisions?

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, I wouldn't do that.

HOSTELRY INSTITUTE

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

The minister, no doubt, has received a communication from the chairman of the governors of Niagara College of Applied Arts and Technology, Dr. Sturgeon, concerning reports that the Ministry of Industry and Tourism plans to establish an institute for the training of hotel and restaurant personnel at an estimated cost of $17 million or $20 million. Will this new program be included as part of the existing training program that is now available in community colleges, such as Niagara College? Or should I assume that it will be a duplicating program within the two ministries?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is correct: I have received that communication along with communications from other community colleges across the province since I have made it known that we were considering the possibility of establishing a hostelry institute.

The studies have been completed, and discussions are now being held between officials of my ministry and officials of the Ministry of Colleges and Universities who have the responsibility for the community colleges and the programs. As well there will be discussion with the board of regents of the community colleges.

It is not intended that there be a duplication of services whatsoever. It is simply an interest on the ministry's part to be able to provide sufficient training facilities to provide an adequate number of skilled people who are required in that industry at the present time.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: Can we take it then that those responsibilities will be left with the different community colleges across the province?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I wouldn't want to say they will be left with them. If it can be worked out that they can, and I will be in a position to provide the necessary training—if they have the necessary facilities—then there is no point in having a duplication of services. However, if it is found that they are not able to carry out that particular part of the program as efficiently as we would like to have it, then I'm sure the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott) and myself will be able to discuss in some detail how we can reach that final point.

Mr. Laughren: He has already made up his mind.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Does the minister understand at this point in time that the reason why the separate institute was requested was that the hotel and restaurant people were dissatisfied with the program that's presently being offered? If that's the case, does he understand that the present programs will be upgraded?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That is not correct and is certainly not my understanding. The hotel and restaurant people have indicated that the programs that are now being carried out in the community colleges are very efficient and that they do their job to the best of their ability. Something like 92 per cent of those persons who take the courses in the community colleges find employment.

Mr. Laughren: That is only eight per cent unemployment. That is lower than the average for the age group.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The difference here is that they are not meeting the needs.

Mr. McClellan: Is eight per cent the new target?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It has been identified that there are around 5,000 unfilled jobs. Therefore, the programs themselves are just not able to meet the demand. That's what we are working towards. We're trying to meet that demand.

Mr. Warner: It sounds like your unemployment target.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why not use the facilities you have?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: It's very difficult to hear the honourable member because he's filtering it through that thing under his nose. I don't know what he is saying.

Mr. Breaugh: That's a good one, but don't use it again. It's not that good.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: If he has any comment to make, I'd say he should stand and ask an intelligent question for a change. I would simply state that we are not intending to duplicate any programs.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you criticizing the Minister of Health?

Mr. Cooke: You never give intelligent answers.

Mr. Breaugh: You never made that remark to the Minister of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We want to make sure that the needs are being met. If they can be met through Colleges and Universities, all well and good, because then the program will meet its goal, that is, to fill the vacancies.

Mr. Cassidy: Why do you keep fighting all the other ministers?

KINDERGARTEN PROGRAMS

Mr. Grande: My question is to the Minister of Education. Given the fact that there is some interest by some area boards in Metro Toronto regarding instituting full-day kindergarten, could the Minister of Education share with the House what is his ministry's policy regarding full-day kindergarten?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Under the present policy of the ministry, as my friend knows, compulsory attendance at school begins at age six. Therefore, kindergarten programs are offered but no one is forced to attend those programs. The Education Act, however, does allow school boards to offer senior kindergarten programs and junior kindergarten programs. There are presently many half-day programs and some full-day programs. A number of the full-day programs in northern Ontario are on an alternative day basis. There are a number of them in areas like Ottawa-Carleton where they are a part of the immersion program.

Our policy at the present time, as I think I reiterated in our estimates a short while ago, is that what a board does about kindergarten, be it half day or full day, is its business. As far as grant regulations are concerned, they will only pay for half-day kindergartens, beginning next year.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary: Could the minister tell us then on what basis does his ministry fund full-day kindergartens to some boards for approximately, I understand, 7,500 kids around this province and deny equal access to funds to other boards that may wish to institute full-day kindergartens? How does this inconsistent application of the policy of his government square with his understanding of the principle of equal education opportunity?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It squares in this way in that if all boards in this province were to institute full-day kindergartens, we would have to find another $65 million in grants. That $65 million would not come in extra money, but would come from the regular program. In fact, boards would have to get less money for the total programs they are offering. That would not be a consistent thing to do at this time. Therefore, we have suggested that there is no extra money available for full-day kindergartens at this point in time. However, we would not take away anything that anyone has. Therefore, while it may be inconsistent, and I would certainly agree with that, the 7,500 or so pupils who are now in full-day kindergartens would certainly not have their programs jeopardized by removing any of that grant.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health has an answer to a question previously asked.

OHIP FRAUD CHARGES

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On May 30 the members for London North (Mr. Van Horne) and London Centre (Mr. Peterson) asked about the circumstances surrounding fraud charges laid by the police against Dr. Anthony Corrigan of London.

The question from the member for London North dealt with why it took, in his words, the Toronto office of OHIP "nearly three months to provide the claims in question" to the police.

On September 16, 1977, the London city police contacted the OHIP office in London and discussed the charges laid three days earlier against Dr. Anthony Corrigan by the London city police.

As the investigation proceeded, I am told that in December 1977, at the request of the London city police, the Ontario Provincial Police asked the professional services monitoring branch for the claims submitted during the year 1976 by Dr. Anthony Corrigan.

In January 1978 the OPP again contacted our professional services monitoring branch, this time requesting Dr. Anthony Corrigan's claims for the first part of the calendar year 1977.

Later that month, the OPP asked for the claims up to the summer of 1977.

It is worth noting that when a physician sends in medical claims, they are filed under the patient's OHIP subscriber number, not by physician.

Since physicians have six months after service to send in claims, and since after that six months' more time is required to file claims by individual physicians in the computer, up to nine months can elapse before an individual physician profile is available on computer.

So, in January 1978, only the claims from Dr. Anthony Corrigan for the 1977 months of January, February and March were available from the computer.

It was then necessary for the four clerks in the OHIP professional services monitoring branch to pull together all of Dr. Anthony Corrigan's claims for the subsequent months. This meant searching through, by hand, thousands and thousands of claims received during that period, filed by patient number, to pull out the more than 6,000 claims which had been made by Dr. Anthony Corrigan.

This task took the four people several weeks to accomplish, and the record was turned over to the OPP late in February 1978.

Considering these facts, three months does not seem an unreasonable length of time to supply the information.

The second question from the member for London North was about "any . . . peculiar circumstances around this case which would demand that it be delayed for eight months before it was, in fact, dropped."

I know of no peculiar circumstances. I am advised that Dr. Anthony Corrigan left Canada on September 12, returning some two months later, in November 1977. There is no doubt this delayed the police investigations, and I have already explained the time required to draw the necessary information from the computer and from our records.

Finally, the member for London Centre asked who laid the original charges. Dr. Anthony Corrigan's case was referred for review to the medical review committee of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons by the OHIP professional services monitoring branch on March 9, 1977.

OHIP requested the review because of what appeared to them to be an unusual billing pattern in this particular doctor's claims.

After an investigation by an inspector of the medical review committee—a doctor—the London city police were informed and laid charges against Dr. Anthony Corrigan—charges which, as the honourable members have already stated, have subsequently been dropped.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the minister think there was something untoward when the amount in dispute was some $120, which I gather was normal with that number of billings and that number of pieces of paper? Does the minister not think he wants to be more precise on exactly who laid the charges and with what information in hand before that information was laid?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I said, in the first instance, it was referred by the professional services monitoring branch in March 1977 because of some concerns about the billing patterns and in particular about the volume of visits being paid to residents in a particular home for the aged.

The inspector from the college, Dr. Milton, I believe, was brought into the review, since it had been referred to the MRC and, on her advice to the police, the charges were laid by them.

[3:00]

Mr. Van Horne: Because of the unusual nature, I would like to pursue this and ask the question: if this isn't an emergency—that is, someone's reputation being put in considerable jeopardy through the laying of the fraud charge—then what kind of emergency would lead the OHIP people to come up with the information in a shorter period of time? In other words, is this three-month period of time not disconcerting to the minister, that a person's time to wait would be at least that plus the other time taken up through the legal process, so that in fact we have a person charged in September and the charge dropped in May? That's a pretty long time and I am very curious about the slowness of this particular operation.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well, the member will recognize, I am sure, that this is a rather peculiar aspect of this, inasmuch as the three doctors Corrigan left the country in early September which delayed things considerably. It wasn't until November—

Mr. Van Horne: One was charged.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes.

Mr. Van Horne: Just one was charged.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, charges are pending against one of the others. But the point is that they wanted exact information and in order to give exact information we take it off computer. But that, as far as being exactly correct, is six months behind. In order to give it right up to the point which they wanted, it meant they had searched, which obviously takes a great deal of time. It was done, I can assure the member, as quickly as possible, recognizing the gravity of the situation.

Mr. Peterson: The minister said in his answer that the investigation was delayed because Corrigan left the country. Now, surely that isn't necessarily the case because he would not have to be in the country in order for the minister to continue with his investigation. The minister also said that there were perhaps some irregularities in the billing procedure or at least that there were some irregularities in the number of bills submitted and the way they were submitted. But clearly that is not evidence of criminal culpability and indeed a charge—

Mr. Speaker: That's not a question either.

Mr. Peterson: Yes, it is—it's going to be—would you not agree?

Clearly a charge was laid and then withdrawn with all the subsequent embarrassment when in fact there was only about $120 in dispute. Doesn't it speak more to the inefficiency of the billing system and the potential abuse inherently built into it than it does to any criminal culpability? Doesn't the minister think that particular example speaks very strongly to the need for a better and more efficient system of billing?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No, I don't agree. I think if the member will again check my answer he will find out that when our people were contacted for information, they did, given the nature of the system, react really very quickly to assist.

Mrs. Campbell: Given the nature of the system.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This was a peculiar situation in that the family, as it were, did leave and it was only a few months afterwards when they had returned that the OPP did then contact them and asked for further information. When they asked, they got the information as quickly as possible.

HYDRO CORRIDORS

Mr. Stong: I have a question for the Minister of Energy: Now that the people in the southern communities of the region of York have had an insight into what is in store for them in terms of the construction of the massive maze of hydro transmission lines through their area and more particularly at the entrance of the town of Richmond Hill, is the minister prepared at this time to consider alternative placements, including the burying of a mile and a quarter of those hydro lines through that corridor?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I am not ready to respond in any specific way to that question but certainly I will take it under advisement.

Mr. Mancini: Don't be too specific, Reuben.

PAPER MILL CONTROL ORDERS

Ms. Bryden: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment: Now that the Dow Chemical sellout settlement has proved that the court route for protecting our environment and making polluters pay is useless under our weak environment laws, is the minister prepared to step up the use and enforcement of control orders? In particular can he tell us what he is doing about one of the worst polluters on the Ottawa River, the Canadian International Paper Company at Hawkesbury, which I understand has met only the first two provisions of a 1974 order against it and has not met the December 31, 1977, deadline, and yet has been discharging BOD in 1977 at four times the 1965 guidelines and discharging suspended solids at almost twice the guidelines? Can he tell us what he is doing and whether he is considering allowing that company to extend its deadlines?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, would I be allowed to dissociate myself from that statement?

Mr. McClellan: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: It was in the form of a question. I listened very carefully.

Mr. McClellan: That's environment protection, is it?

Mr. Speaker: If the minister has a brief response I will allow him to make it; otherwise the time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. McClellan: That's very reassuring.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: I would like to bring the attention of honourable members to a guest in our gallery: Mr. John Gogo is the MLA for Lethbridge West constituency in the province of Alberta. Would you welcome him to our gallery, please?

REPORTS

HEAVY WATER PRODUCTION

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am tabling this afternoon a copy of the document entitled, The AECL-Hydro Heavy Water Pool Agreement as requested by the Leader of the Opposition in the House on June 8, 1978. This document is already in the public domain, as indicated to honourable members on June 9. It was filed by Ontario Hydro with the Ontario Energy Board on March 6, 1974, as docket number HR1, exhibit 202.

Mr. Speaker: Point of privilege, the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. S. Smith: The Minister of Energy has just attributed to me the request simply for that document. I would draw his attention to Hansard of June 8 which says, "Will you table in writing not only the agreement but any of the reasons why the pool agreement has been terminated and any documents and correspondence related to that agreement and to that termination?"

Will the minister be tabling that information, the reasons and all documents and correspondence related to that agreement as he was requested to do in this House?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that it is a point of privilege; it is probably seeking additional information. If the honourable Minister of Energy would care to respond?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would agree to provide any reasonable information; yes, of course.

Mr. S. Smith: You mean you have information that is not reasonable?

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

On behalf of Mr. Philip, Mr. Lawlor from the standing administration of justice committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr26, The City of Thunder Bay.

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill Pr13, The City of London.

MOTION

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Ms. Bryden: Under section 27g I would like to register dissatisfaction with the answer from the Minister of the Environment to my question—

Mr. Warner: A non-answer from the non-minister.

Ms. Bryden: Yes, a non-answer, really—and ask that the question be debated tomorrow night at 10:30.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before calling the orders of the day, just to share with the House, while most of us are here, the order of business for today as set out on the sheet which we have on our desk, I want to indicate one change that has been agreed upon.

Following second reading of Bills 96 and 108 we go into committee of the whole. The order of calling legislation in committee of the whole has been changed somewhat. We will start with Bill 86, then Bill 96, Bill 91, Bill 85 and Bill 180, if necessary.

It is also my understanding that once we get into committee of the whole House, any recorded votes that are required will be stacked for 5:45.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

Mr. Young: I rise this afternoon to support Bill 96 in principle, although being a bit unhappy with some of the provisions of that bill.

I was one of those who some years ago introduced a private member's bill in this House, on at least two occasions, to lower the age of majority to 18. It was debated in this House, although at that time it was not allowed under the rules of the House to come to a vote. My feeling on this was rather pronounced. I felt we should lower the age of majority and with it all the benefits that go therewith.

When the actual age was lowered in 1971, I think none of us realized the thing that was going to happen and that did, in effect, happen following that action. The 18-year-olds were given the vote and they were given all the privileges of citizenship. At that time and just before it, the industry moved in with its powerful lifestyle advertising to capture that group of 18 to 21-year olds and younger in order to make the profit they saw out of that group becoming consumers of their product.

The result was that we saw a tremendous upsurge in the drinking patterns of the younger group as a result of, in large measure, the lifestyle advertising and the feeling that was spread abroad that in order to assert adulthood, to find happiness and satisfaction in life all this had to be achieved through the haze of alcohol.

At the same time, governments right across the board, not only here in Ontario but everywhere, did not take this into sufficient account and they did not embark upon any kind of educational program to mitigate the results of the lifestyle advertising. We might have done a great deal if we had realized what we ought to do, but nobody seems to have taken that course.

I know it has been pointed out here time after time that some of the teenagers, before that time up to 21, always drank. Some did; but not the majority. And always, not drinking in large numbers, that drinking was a bit furtive and it was rather seldom done. It was not a thing which was engaged in by the majority of young people under 21.

They were not, in large measure, in the beer parlours and the taverns during those years. They were not allowed there by law and they did not find their way into those places except perhaps on a few occasions where a young person was able to borrow somebody else's birth certificate or in the cases where the young people looked much older than they were.

But with the law and with the advertising, young people came flooding into the drinking spots and along with that, drinking became more or less common—as we heard time after time in this House—in the high schools. It entered that particular phase of life and spread from the 18-year olds down to the 17 and 16-year olds and below that.

The results are apparent today. I'm not going to dwell on them. We've heard a great deal about them.

The one thing that's rather interesting. The detoxification centres and the ARF clinics are finding that while they got less than two per cent of their patients from that younger age group prior to 1971, today they're getting about four per cent—double the number of young people—as clients.

We find today that about 40 per cent of boating accidents are related to alcohol, and the vast majority of those involve young people. We find that in fatal traffic accidents 43 per cent of the 14-to 64-year-old age group has been drinking, but 68 per cent of the 18- and 19-year-olds have been drinking—a very high proportion. We also know that there has been a marked increase in snowmobile accidents. Snowmobiling became popular about this time, and a great number of those people who are killed in alcohol-related accidents on snowmobiles are, of course, the younger people.

At the time when we began to see what was happening, this government commissioned a group to look into the whole drinking-driving problem. They reported in August 1974. I just want to read a couple of excerpts from that report, commissioned by the government of Ontario at that time. The report says this:

“The dilemma facing government is that two separate activities [that is, drinking and driving, both okay by themselves], which it is seen to sanction and profit from, combine to form a hybrid activity that is a criminal offence and has damaging consequences. The government therefore has the responsibility to establish a public awareness of the drinking-driving problem and to become actively engaged in effective countermeasures. Protection from antisocial behaviour is one of the primary responsibilities that a government owes to its citizens."

The report goes on to say:

"It is possible to identify three distinct groups of drinking-driving offenders. These three groups are: 1. young drivers, 16-24 years. This group is worthy of special attention in that they are inexperienced at drinking, inexperienced at driving, inexperienced at drinking-driving. In 1973, the proportion of young drivers in alcohol-involved collisions was higher than that of all older age groups. [This was two years after the law was passed.] While the proportion of drivers in alcohol-involved collisions is remaining constant for the older age groups, the proportion of young drivers in alcohol-involved collisions is increasing." That was 1973.

The report of the Addiction Research Foundation, which came at a little later time, in 1974, using the 1973 figures, says this:

"Prior to the change in the drinking age, young drivers had low incidence of alcohol-related collisions compared to older drivers. Further, the proportion of total collisions where alcohol was involved ranged from about two per cent among 16-to-17-year-olds to about five per cent among 20-year-olds. [This was prior to the law being changed.] With the change in the drinking age, the incidence of alcohol-related collisions increased dramatically. In comparing the period prior to the change in the age of majority (January 1968 to July 1971) to the two years after the change in the drinking age (August 1971 to August 1973) alcohol-related collisions increased 162 per cent among 16- and 17-year-olds, 339 per cent among 18-year-olds, 346 per cent among 19-year-olds, and 156 per cent among 20-year-olds. These increases are in marked contrast to the increases of only 20 per cent experienced by 24-year-olds, a category of people not affected by the change in the drinking age."

Bringing the figures up to 1975, we have this report by Paul C. Whitehead, PhD, University of Western Ontario, who was commissioned by and his report published by the Department of National Health and Welfare in Ottawa. He says this: "Large numerical increases in alcohol-related collisions occurred among 18- and 20-year olds during the first year after the legal change. Such increases are not manifest among drivers aged 16 and 17 [It didn't happen the first year among that lower group.] or by those aged 24. In subsequent years, collisions involving alcohol continue to increase among 16 to 20-year-olds, but do not increase among 24-year-olds until the third year after the change. Total collisions involving 18 to 20-year-olds increased abruptly in the first year after the change and again during the third year."

These are the figures which he gives for the years surveyed, from 1968 to 1971 and from 1971 to 1975, the years before and after the change. He goes on to say: "Alcohol-related collisions increased by 469 per cent among the 18-year-old drivers and 445 per cent among the 19-year-olds, while their rate of total collision increased 66 per cent and 61 per cent respectively. Sixteen and 17-year-olds experienced a 304 per cent increase in alcohol-related collisions and a 50 per cent rise in total collisions." In the first year after the change, an increase was not apparent, but within two years it started to rise up very steeply.

Twenty-year olds show a somewhat lower rate of increase, namely, 180 per cent for alcohol-related collisions and 37 per cent for total collisions. Twenty-four-year-olds at this time register much lower increases for both types of collisions. When we compare all young drivers with a 24-year-old comparison group, we find that the younger age categories demonstrate an increase in alcohol-related collisions that is six times as great as the 24-year-olds and an increase in total collisions that is almost twice as great as the 24-year-olds. Nevertheless, the standardized increase in the total number of collisions among younger drivers exceeds the increased number of alcohol-related collisions by a ratio of almost five to one.

More than that, Dr. Whitehead points out, the data clearly indicates that alcohol-related collisions are associated with a greater degree of damage than those that do not involve alcohol. The result of all this is seen in the figures, part of which was quoted the other day in this House. In 1967, the 16 to 20-year-old group had 5.5 per cent of all alcohol-related collisions. We changed the law in 1971. In 1973, the figure for 16 to 20-year-olds in alcohol-related collisions was 15 per cent, three times what it was in 1967. By 1975, that same group showed a 37.2 per cent of all alcohol-related collisions.

It is still rising. Following the decrease in the voting age, many of us had hoped that the increase in drinking-driving and the increase in the number of collisions in which that younger group was involved would perhaps steady and then decrease. Instead of that, we have seen a steady increase of that proportion from 5.5 per cent back in 1967 to 37.2 per cent in 1975 and it is still rising.

Then the startling figures also show that the 18 to 19-year-olds are 70 times more likely to die in an alcohol-related accident than are the average non-drinking drivers. The 16 to 17-year-olds are 165 times more apt to be involved in alcohol related collisions than the average non-alcohol-related driver in this province.

These are the figures that startled those of us on the select committee on highway safety. While I point out that I was one of those in the early days of my membership in this august assembly to introduce bills to lower the age of majority, I faced these facts—

Mr. Nixon: Including the drinking age?

Mr. Young: At that time, I don't think many of us thought very much about the involvement of drinking in that whole process—

An hon. member: We were looking at the voters.

Mr. Young: We just didn't think about it too much and didn't consider what might happen. We felt the young people would handle alcohol as well as the vote, I think as well as anything. But these figures certainly have brought some of us to realize that something should be done. So the suggestion was made that the drinking age should be raised from 18 to various figures. Actually many of the jurisdictions that have faced this wanted to raise beyond the age of 18 to 19, 20, 21, but politically it was rather a difficult thing to raise it more than one year.

One thing that emerged in our select committee findings was that those years from 16 to 19 are the crucial years in a driver's history if he starts at 16. In the first three years, his accident record drops rather dramatically, and by the end of five years he is down to about the average for the rest of his life. But those first three years are crucial. The first two years the drop is not that much but by the end of the third year, when he is 19, the drop is more dramatic—he has overcome some of the bad habits that he built up during those early years of driving.

We felt, and I think all those who have looked into this carefully feel, that if a young person begins to drive at 16 and then doesn't drink until he is 19, he at least has a tremendous advantage in that he has formed better driving habits than he will have by 18. His chances of survival and his chances of not killing someone else, and his chances of being able to handle both the alcohol and the driving are also much improved.

So we came to these conclusions because of this evidence. Certainly I was impressed and I believe that today this legislation which is before us is important legislation in the total package. Let me stress that fact: that it is a total package which our committee recommended. We must not think that simply lowering or raising the drinking age will have a magic effect. If we push it from 18 to 19, that's part of it. If we could push it to 20 politically, it would be better still according to the records. But we are not asking that because likely that may be very difficult for them to do.

Along with raising the drinking age, we recommended the probationary licence which the ministry has already accepted. However, I am not happy that our recommendation for a full two years of probationary licence has not yet been fully adopted by the ministry. It is a matter of regulation and we wait with bated breath to see what is going to happen when the minister makes his announcement in this regard.

Then, of course, another thing which we recommended was that the lifestyle advertising on TV be banned and the minister has already announced that this is going to take place. How far the banning will occur, we don't know yet. We are waiting again to see what is going to happen there, but we have the minister's word that that kind of persuasion of young people—linking alcohol with the good life—will be cut out in Ontario advertising.

Then there is a program of education which must be undertaken, and again the minister has indicated that this is going forward.

There is the matter of the alert device: the person who has 0.05 to 0.08 on his breath, as shown by the alert device, will be ruled off the road for 24 hours. The whole emphasis here is to prevent an accident which might well happen. All research shows that once a person passes the 0.04 mark, he becomes pretty dangerous, and by the time he has reached 0.08 he is beyond the place where he is safe on the highway in any way we might define that phrase.

[3:30]

Then, of course, the other thing was the frequent recommendation which we made for both the social drinker and the person who is an incorrigible drinker, who just can't overcome his own habit and needs a very great deal of help. These together, we think, will help tremendously in changing the pattern of drinking-driving. But let's not be under any illusion that simply by raising the age to 19 we are going to solve that problem at all.

What our committee did, of course, was to recommend these matters. We have not the power of legislation; it is up to this Legislature to balance cost, balance the civil rights involved in some of these recommendations—some people are disturbed in that regard—and balance what their program might be and then bring forward the legislation. But we would hope that all the legislation we have recommended would come in and perhaps as something more which we had no time to look into.

I think also we have to recognize that the public is ready for this change. It is interesting; I had, as all the members had, a letter from the—

Mr. Nixon: Except the public directly affected.

Mr. Young: Yes. Many of the 18- and 19-year-olds are not too happy.

But the Ontario Interfaith Liquor Legislation Committee, representing the Anglican, Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian, Pentecostal, Roman Catholic, Salvation Army, and United Churches, has recommended to us that we should immediately create legislation which would prohibit the legal sale of alcoholic beverages to people who are under 20 years of age, and subsequently for people under 21 years of age. In other words, they want to get it right back to 21, which, of course, as I pointed out, would likely be a difficult proposition to carry out.

Then we had a survey carried forward by the ARF people that says this—and the survey is a pretty extensive one across the province: 68.3 per cent favoured raising the drinking age to 19 or over, while 26.5 per cent favoured the present drinking age of 18, and only 1.8 per cent wanted it under 18.

The interesting thing here is those aged 18 to 29 expressed a 36 per cent opinion in favour of leaving the drinking age at 18, while 57 per cent wanted it raised to 19 or over. Of the people aged 30 to 49 years of age, 73.1 per cent wanted it raised to 19 years of age or over, as did 73.8 per cent of the people aged 50 or over. Those aged 18 to 20 years of age, in the additional sample interviewed, were 61 per cent in favour of the present drinking age, as my friend has just pointed out, but 34 per cent wanted it raised to 19 or over. So over one third of even the young people themselves did want the change made.

An interesting thing happened. This survey showed that 26.5 per cent favoured the present drinking age of 18. In the questionnaire which I sent out in my latest report, I asked the question: "Shall the drinking age be 18, 19, 20 or 21?" This is what I got; exactly the same proportion, 26.5 per cent right on, said it should stay at 18. Nineteen, only 9.2 per cent; 20, 19.3 per cent; and 21—45 per cent said it should be back up to 21. So the vast majority did want the drinking age raised, although the majority of the young people concerned wanted it to remain the way it was.

So by and large, according to the surveys we had, and certainly by the surveys which this government has already taken, there is no question that the people of Ontario are ready for this legislation.

I think the thing which more than anything else makes us realize the importance of this legislation, is not only this tremendous increase of drinking-driving, death and injury on the part of the young people who are drinking, but also the fact that they are killing others than themselves in these accidents. And this spells tragedy for themselves, for their families and for others and their families who may be perfectly innocent. We're dealing in human life. While I know there's no way we can balance things and say we can prove so many people will die next year because of the 18 age level and less will die because of the 19 year level, the fact remains that all statistics do show that a significant number of young people will live, because of the action which is being taken here today, who otherwise would not have lived if the law had remained as it was.

Young people will still drink. I don't think any of us are under illusions that this will stop drinking among young people. But over a period of several years, I think that younger group will gradually be weaned away from their dependence, which they seem to have today, upon alcohol as the factor which gives them a happy, carefree life, and wealth and prosperity in the future, particularly if the education program is carried out the way it ought to be done. The cutoff will be at 19 and, from that point on, alcohol will become a factor in their lives. But, by that time, as I pointed out, at least those who start driving at 16 will have established good driving habits.

The records show that at that point they're much safer drivers and they will be safer drivers from that point on. Perhaps their own ideas of what constitute health and happiness will have been a bit more carefully formulated. While I say that I'm not too happy with some of the clauses of this bill, on this main part of the bill I stand today to support the raising of the drinking age to 19, and in principle to support Bill 96.

Mr. Nixon: I was very interested in the remarks of the member who just spoke, since I served on the committee on highway safety with the honourable gentleman as chairman. Certainly I recall being very much impressed by the statistics that were presented to us and particularly by the views expressed by the Addiction Research Foundation. I had the feeling that sometimes they were expressing an opinion rather than a view that was backed up exclusively by the statistics associated with their research. In this instance having to do with the drinking age, they certainly took a strong stand before our committee, one that was so strong that we really felt compelled to include this recommendation in our report.

One of the interesting aspects was their feeling that young people, particularly young men, have difficulty coping with learning to drink and learning to drive at the same time. We don't really mean the action of raising the glass to the lips or turning the key in the ignition, but all of the things associated with it. The other thing that stuck in my mind was the fact that young women are not unnecessarily troubled by the combination of these two learning experiences.

With regard to the advertising which we have criticized so strongly, the quality of life-type advertising, I feel that the essential criticism should be directed to the macho-lifestyle advertising. Nobody finds a young girl drinking too much as anything but an offensive situation; yet a young man drinking too much is usually associated with all the virility of a young man and a two-fisted experience in life as it really is. The peer pressure on young men to drink is far, far greater than on young women. There is still the attitude in the community, which, and I hope is strengthened and not weakened, that applies a lot more social pressure against young women drinking. Maybe they object to this but that is certainly the way I perceive it.

Mr. Grande: Don't be a sexist.

Mr. Nixon: Accident statistics show clearly that the young women are not a threat on the road and that accidents associated with alcohol do not involve them statistically in any way that should really be brought to our attention. They're sort of the innocent bystanders in this part of the legislation because it's the young men who clearly are responsible for the statistics which we have.

Mr. Grande: Why do you make it a double standard?

Mr. Nixon: The honourable gentleman who is interjecting, whose name I can never remember, has obviously missed the point. This is not an observation of mine, other than it is an observation of the statistics that are present and available for any interested member to peruse.

It happens to be a difference in our social customs in this jurisdiction; and it is an interesting aspect, particularly when the member is considering, as he should and must, some more control on the thrust of advertising in this jurisdiction. The concept is of a bunch of the boys getting together to throw around a football, and have a few Blues, or whatever, or a bunch of the boys getting together to have a few hands of rummy or something, or getting together to fix the boat. It is not the girls hanging around to file their nails or to go shopping, or something like that—

Mr. Warner: Or to fix the boat.

Mr. Nixon: The concept of a bunch of the boys getting together to have a few brews is really—I wouldn't say it was as a menace, because I find the concept particularly attractive sometimes on these boring afternoons right here. There have been a number of members from this very House—maybe some of the ones who are not in their seats right now are having a few brews somewhere.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Speaker won't even allow coffee in here.

Mr. Nixon: Frankly, I hope so. I would hate to think they are all spending their time in irrelevant pursuits.

Mr. Hall: Would you mind naming those of us who are here?

Mr. Nixon: The member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall) is in his place.

Mr. Warner: How unusual.

Mr. Nixon: It is a matter of concern that a lot of the control legislation, in this jurisdiction anyway, obviously has to be directed towards the protection of young men, or the protection of the community against young men, because the community expects young men to be two-fisted, hard-drinking people. I believe that is regrettable.

There are other aspects in this legislation which concern me. I am glad we are pulling the act together so that it is not legal for people to be walking down the main street or in a public place with an open bottle, or even with a glass of liquor in their hands. It seems ridiculous that, after the last series of amendments, that became legal. There have been instances, which the minister is probably aware of, where the police have been mocked by the inadequacies of the legislation.

On the other hand, the minister no doubt saw a few days ago at the opening of the Stratford Festival the pictures in the newspapers showing some of his very high-class friends, no doubt from Toronto, with their lace cloths spread on the tables at Stratford and their ringed fingers around icy goblets in which there was wine. They were what you call alfresco. I think, under our laws, you are not supposed to do that on the grass. It worries me that our laws are so strange that we can permit these people—and I would include myself with them if I had the time and the wherewithal—to have a picnic on the grass at Stratford, to watch the swans stream by on the beautiful Avon, and to have some ice-cold champagne. You just can't drink ice-cold champagne out of a brown paper bag. I am sure the honourable minister would agree.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I've never tried it.

Mr. Nixon: It seems to me the only place that strange little aspect of the law is enforced—and my honourable friend the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande) should concern himself with this—is when perhaps some Italian families take some of the wine they made in their own basement, over to Centre Island and want to have a picnic there. That is when the constabulary seem to be a little concerned about it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's in my riding.

Mr. Nixon: Okay, then, the minister should be concerned about it. I wish we could somehow use our collective wisdom to pass some sort of a law which will permit the drinking of wine at a picnic. It is ridiculous that we cannot have a statute that will permit that. I can't see anything wrong with that. Why do we continue to keep calling that illegal?

Certainly the minister's friends from Rosedale, when they go out to see Shakespeare, are not bothered by that, and I would expect that the cops in Stratford are not instructed to poke around to see who is messing around with an open wine bottle down there by the swans and the River Avon. Even in Niagara-on-the-Lake there is quite a nice spot, they tell me, overlooking Lake Ontario just where the Niagara River comes out on a park. The place is littered with those expensive corks that pop all over the place, they tell me. I think we ought to legalize that sort of thing. [3:45]

There is one other matter that concerns me that is not dealt with specifically by the amendments in this bill, but it is dealt with by the—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member can't continue to talk about something that isn't in the bill.

Mr. Nixon: It should be in the bill. Actually maybe it is—there is some fine print in the bill I still haven't read—but it has to do with our local option methods. I don't want to spend a lot of time on this but the chief electoral officer is here and he's the expert on local option in these matters; he knows all of the instances where the voters' list has been very small indeed, as a matter of fact vanishingly small. I believe the smallest was two on the voters' list in a referendum held recently.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did they get 60 per cent?

Mr. Nixon: The arithmetic would get complex if the man and wife didn't agree, but it's not my argument. It's that where a municipality is presented with the various alternatives in a liquor vote, there should be an alternative added whereby the municipality can vote in favour of the sale of alcoholic beverages in their jurisdiction without at the same time giving the liquor board the right to approve a licensed establishment. There are many areas where the community is probably not that keen to have an establishment open up either with or without food and serving liquor, but they find that the community customs, mores, do require the sale of alcoholic beverages at certain community functions such as hockey dances at the South Dumphries community arena.

Mr. Speaker, you may never have been to the St. George community arena but believe me it is a very fine establishment indeed, and there are a number of social events which are of the highest calibre. You, sir, coming from Schreiber, would feel right at home there. I would take this opportunity to invite you, sir, to some of these events. The minister as well, if he wants to come, but—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would feel right at home as well.

Mr. Nixon: —but for a time we had a certain difficulty with the liquor licence board in approving what had become the custom of the community. I don't want to go into that in detail but this has now been regularized by the passage of an affirmative resolution under the local option statute. I think the whole thing is absolutely ridiculous—but that's another speech which I have made before and undoubtedly will make again under other circumstances.

I do believe that the municipality should have had an opportunity to vote whether or not they could have liquor for sale at these public functions without at the same time approving the licensing of retail outlets. This may or may not be something that they would want to approve, but I feel if you are going to have local option the spectrum of alternatives is not sufficient.

The bill before us I intend to support. I have some concerns, as every member here must have, about the drinking age. It's either too high or too low depending on where it is at the present time. I think it is judicious for us as members of the Legislature to raise it to 19, whatever 19 means when the statute is finally carried. I think that is probably something the force of public opinion—if not our own good judgement—is requiring at this time.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I am very very concerned about the amount of drinking and the degree of alcoholism that we have in our society. Therefore with that very heartfelt concern, it may seem a bit of an anomaly that I rise to speak in opposition to the increase in the drinking age.

We should never have decreased the drinking age from 21 to 18. I opposed that. I wasn't here in the House, but I opposed that move at the time. Having done that, however, are we justified in increasing it? For what reason are we justified in increasing it? Will that increase have any effect whatsoever; or are we just kidding ourselves that we are doing something about the drinking problem by fiddling with the ages of when you may legally commence to drink rather than attacking the problems which cause people to drink, attacking the societal pressures, the stresses and boredom which give rise to that drinking? Or should we be attacking—and I am sure we should be—the peer pressure which occurs with the 15-, 16-, 17-, 18- and 19-year-olds in our province? Should we be attacking the causes of that peer group pressure which creates the feeling they should be drinking?

That, I feel, is where we should be addressing our efforts. I am very much concerned that on the passage of this bill, by just increasing the drinking age from 18 to 19, many people in our society will tend to say, "There, we've done that" and will sit back and relax. Yet we are even further away from the type of educational program, the very sensitive stuff that should be going on in our public schools and in our high schools—

An hon. member: And in our homes.

Mr. Bounsall: —to educate young persons about the seriousness of drinking; why it is people drink; and that so many people use drinking as a crutch—not a security blanket, which has a positive connotation to it, but as a crutch to solve the problems of their life, instead of looking at themselves and their problems and trying to remove or solve those problems.

One may have problems such as a very boring work place, which one can't get out of very easily. The solution for that person is not to drink before they go to work because they can't face it, or to drink after work because they have just gone through one of the most boring experiences of their life—and unfortunately it occurs day after day. Those persons should find some other outlet for the abilities which are the basis for their boredom in a particular work place, one that does not offer a challenge.

I am afraid that by fiddling with the drinking age, raising it from 18 to 19, we are going to feel we have accomplished something in Ontario, and further remove the sensitive, sane discussion which should be taking place with our young people, and with the adults in our society, about why it is we drink; look individually at why we drink; and to see if some other solution can be found when we know about the dangers to our health from drinking, and that the resulting alcohol problems are among the major problems of our society at this time.

Having surveyed my constituents a couple of years ago, I am very well aware that the majority of them would be appalled, if I wasn't explaining in words and concepts that they will understand, if they thought I am taking the position that the drinking age should not be raised. Of the people replying to my questionnaire 75 per cent wanted the age raised, no question about it.

Interestingly enough, most of the other 25 per cent who said "no" gave the comment, "Enforce the current drinking age," implying, as we know the case to be, very widespread under-age drinking—undetected perhaps because of laws that are unenforceable. Those are the ones who said "no."

We are recognizing that problem. If there is widespread under-age drinking at the moment, let's not kid ourselves that increasing the drinking age by one year is going to affect that fact one iota. All that will occur when we have increased it by a year is that more illegal drinking will take place.

If there is enforcement, as these people would wish, on those who are drinking illegally, what is going to happen is that there will be more hassling and harassment of 18-year-olds in our province, a hassle they do not get now, by the forces of authority in our province, the police. We have enough problems in certain areas, not in all areas, in retaining respect for the police. Why would we add a further opportunity for a loss of respect for police in our society by increasing the drinking age and providing a further hassle point between the police, who are invariably in a different age group than the youth they will be hassling. I see more problems that way in our youth understanding our society and being able to get along in it because of the enforcement of an increased drinking age. I don't want to see any increase in that cynicism about the authorities in our province or any increase in the hassling of that particular age group in our province.

Alcoholism, if it results, and it seems to in too many cases—a surprising number of cases—is a social problem, not an age group problem. The problem just isn't going to go away by increasing the age. It's a social attitude and a reflection of the social environment in which one lives or the pressures which a person has exerted upon him.

One week ago today, last Monday morning at 10 o'clock, I had a question hour period with two grade eight classes in Oakwood School in Windsor. The drinking age was one of the questions that they wanted to deal with in depth. They were quite interested in what my stand would be if I participated in the debate and if a vote should take place. I covered with them some of the things I'm mentioning here today.

The consensus of that class—these were children aged 12 to 14—was that the drinking age should not be increased. They weren't drinkers yet and none of them is necessarily planning to be a drinker or to become an alcoholic or to become a drinking problem in our society. All that will happen is a forced increase of illegal drinking in our province.

Their question to me was why would we have an act come into force that is inevitably going to be more breached than what it is at the moment? I must admit for grade eight students they had a pretty fair logic in that argument which they were presenting.

Responsible drinking and drinkers occur at any age—at 18 as well as at 30, 45, 55 and 80. Responsibility is not tied to an age. We do insult to the youth of our province, those 18 year-olds, when we say in this bill: "You are not responsible. You are not capable of looking at the drinking problem and deciding what to do about it. You're not responsible enough to decide whether you should have a drink and how much."

We do insult to that group in our province, that age group in our province. We should never have lowered it, but having lowered it you don't do insult to the integrity, the responsibility and the thought processes of that age in our province.

If any real progress is to be made about drinking and alcoholism we need to attack the problem and what causes it, deal with the cause and remove the cause. For some people, it's stress. What in heck is wrong with our society that we put so much stress on people that they must escape in this way? What is it about our work places—boredom in so many instances—that causes people to feel they must drink to face it or to get rid of the thought of it once they get away from it?

We should be attacking our whole work place concept and what is required of people to perform a useful job in our society; involve people in the decisions around their jobs and involve people as far as possible in that job; not only in the decisions but how best to create the end product which should be resulting.

Let's attack the problem, let's not attack the results of having the problem. I fear the whole program of attacking the problem is being set back by thinking that we have done something—taken a step forward by increasing the drinking age.

I've been aware of some of the arguments made, that increasing the drinking age by and large gets the drinking out of the high schools. It may. Statistics show that only two per cent of the 19-year-olds are in our high schools in September, so there isn't a very large group of them is on our high schools. But if the illegal drinking is as widespread in our society as we hear, I again don't think we've solved the problem.

What are you going to have, Mr. Speaker, if the 18-year-olds in your grade 12 or grade 13 classes have endeavoured by some way to have a liquid lunch and are now back in the high schools in the afternoon? Do you think the teacher, who's trying to fill their heads with something good, something positive and is talking to them and teaching them about society and how to relate to it through whatever particular course he or she is teaching, is going to turn those people in and blow the whistle on them? Of course they're not. You're not going to have enforcement at the teacher level in the high schools any more than you have now, Mr. Speaker.

It shouldn't be happening there. Any teacher who has that reaction to it needs more help than the pupils in the class who are drinking under age, having endeavoured to acquire in whatever ways a liquid lunch. We're not going to get it out of the high schools. There's going to be no real enforcement there.

If we have pictures on the drivers' licences—which are coming, I gather—and the bar and tavern owners say you either have to show that or the age of majority card, which is available through our liquor stores, if all that happens and if it's enforced by the tavern and liquor owners more so than it is now, then we will have less drinking by that 18-year-old group in our formalized drinking places in the province.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to be personal because I don't know, of course, between you and myself, but I would say to the members in this House, when most of us, by and large, were at that age, the drinking age for most of us at that time was 21. I ask the members of this House, can anyone honestly stand up and say in this House that they did not take a drink before age 21?

Mr. Bradley: I can't believe the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) did.

Mr. Bounsall: Hansard might note that the Speaker half rose. Maybe he wasn't sure what he was drinking prior to age 21, whether it was alcoholic or not. Maybe it was only—

Mr. Bradley: Freshie, right?

Mr. Bounsall: Yes. How many of us can stand and say in this House that before the age of 21, when we were legally able to drink, "I never went into a pub or a beer parlour or what have you in this province and bluffed my way through as being age 21"?

Mr. Nixon: We've got to include the press gallery.

Mr. Warner: I couldn't get away with it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Premier can.

Mr. Bounsall: The Premier can, eh?

Mr. Foulds: The member for Port Arthur can.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Port Arthur, the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick.

Mr. Bounsall: Oh, come on. I see the grins over there when all this is rolling out.

Mr. Foulds: He couldn't. He's too short.

Mr. Bounsall: We all drank illegally.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can't do it now.

Mr. Warner: You were just too short.

Mr. Bounsall: I would say there are very few persons in this House who have not drunk illegally, so what do we think increasing the age by one year is doing?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Criminalizing it.

Mr. Bounsall: I agree with those grade eight students; there is just going to be a bit more of illegal drinking, as we all did—perhaps not very regularly, but from time to time we did.

Mr. Bradley: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Bounsall: There are so many—I see the big grin from the last interjector. I'm not here for the purpose of comparing how many times we did this, but it occurred.

To those who say, "It will get the problem out of our schools," I don't think the problem is solved in that way. It's still going to be there. Those who say, "The high school dances have disappeared. The things which we remember in the past, that we all toddled up to on a Friday night and enjoyed so much, have all disappeared." No one wants to come to a high school dance because he can't purchase alcoholic beverages at a bar in the school. Therefore, the older ones in the school go out and drink somewhere else and wouldn't be caught dead at a high school dance. Therefore, that has finished high school dances.

Do they honestly think that increasing the drinking age to 19 is going to bring all that back—those high school dances that we remember nostalgically? No, in those areas and communities where those have disappeared, they are not going to return. The social milieu, what 18- and 19-year-olds do with their time has changed. What we think of nostalgically in the past is gone. It has been lost and will not return. Anybody who thinks it will is just kidding himself.

But at those high school dances on the Friday nights that we look back to with so much nostalgia—although the school didn't have a bar anymore than they do now—there was one heck of a lot of alcohol consumed around the corner of the school and behind the bushes, no less than what is being consumed now.

The point that I am making to those who look at it nostalgically and think this will make it come back, is that the high school dances have disappeared—and there was drinking at them anyway. There was drinking at them when the drinking age was 21.

Mr. Haggerty: Even at the beach parties.

Mr. Bounsall: Let's look at the other side of the coin. Let's say we have scrubbed drinking from our schools by this change. There is still a fair proportion of our young people in colleges and universities who are there at age 17. They are the more academically adept—I won't say bright—among our young population. These are the people who have indicated, either by hard work or by more finely-tuned thought processes than their peers, they are able to be in that position at a younger age. Are we saying to those people who are now at college and university, you are going to have to wait a year and a half, maybe two before you can legally take a drink? Are we going to say to them your thought processes are good enough to have you in that situation at age 17 but you are not responsible about making a decision on whether to drink and how much to drink until you have reached age 19?

There are also many 18-year-olds at both of those institutions I mentioned. What you have done is moved a problem from the high school to the college and university level where it is assumed that people have a bit more responsibility. I don't know why that assumption is necessarily made but it is there in our society. We are saying there is going to be a portion of our colleges and university students not able to have a drink and not responsible to decide whether or not they should and how much. That is a real insult to the youth of our province who are in colleges and universities.

What are the authorities going to do about it? Are they going to enforce that strict separation on college and university campuses and pubs; that strict 19-year-old line which is going to result from passing of this legislation? Because I am so very concerned about drinking and the alcoholism which so often results, I hope that there is enforcement at whatever age it is. But I can see the problems that will occur in those locations, in picking and choosing among bright people—on the basis of age for heaven's sake—which one of them can drink and which one of them can't drink; it makes no sense whatsoever.

Mr. Nixon: Do you think it should be on the basis of IQ?

Mr. Bounsall: I might say in conclusion that I sat on the highway safety committee, as did the previous two speakers. One of the recommendations in that report was to increase the drinking age. I must say I had a most uncomfortable time from time to time in that committee in deciding whether or not I could sign the report or whether or not I should make a dissent at that point. I want to share with the assembly why I did not make a dissent at that point and why I felt I could sign the report with that in it. There are basically two reasons why I was able to sign that report or not make a dissent at that point.

From the very narrow viewpoint of highway safety, with all the facts and figures we were presented about the drinking-driving problem, I felt that a committee charged with looking at one whole sector of its work, the drinking-driving problem, could make no other recommendation. But it was a very narrow mandate we had. When one placed the drinking-driving problem in the context of the whole society—again, I could not recommend it in terms of the whole of society. If there was one committee and if it was being responsible, being faced with the facts and having to comment on the drinking age, the highway safety committee could not do other, in the narrowness of its mandate and the narrowness of its view, than find that drinking is detrimental to our young people as they are driving.

It was finally quite clear to me that, faced with the facts, that was what I had to recommend on that committee. The member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) has certainly outlined quite capably in his remarks the problems that we learned on that committee about drinking and driving. There is no question, for our young people, that the more we separate the drinking age from the learning-to-drive age, the more society will benefit in having fewer crashes and fewer injuries and deaths. Without question, that was the conclusion we had to draw. As members of that highway safety committee, saying "What can we do for highway safety?" and having already decreased the speed limits and caused safety belts to be mandatory in the province, with drinking-driving as the major problem left in this province, we could not do other than to recommend as much of a separation as possible. But that assumed, of course, that from age 16, when most people start to learn to drive, to age 19, when the bill before us would allow them to start drinking, that no one was going to drink illegally in that prior period. We thought about that on the committee as well and we instituted various other suggestions in that committee. Anyone drinking under the legal drinking age, whatever it is, whether impaired or not—just found drinking—whatever else might happen to him because of being found in that situation, would have his probationary licence be reinstated.

I had real difficulties on that point in that committee. The probationary licence is an early intervention system only, to have the bad habits of the early driver brought to the attention of that early driver as soon as possible. If we were interested, as we were, in separating the drinking age and the driving age, surely for most people that same three-year period should have been the length of the probationary period. I almost dissented in the report on the drinking age for that reason alone. I could have done it there, or under the probationary licence period. If one is going to have an effect, the period between the starting-to-drink age, which will be 19 if this bill passes and as was our recommendation in the report, and the learning-to-drive age, which is 16 for most drivers, should be identical with the probationary period.

Mr. Samis: Except Wednesday nights.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: Depends on how he behaves tonight.

Mr. Bounsall: The current situation before the ministry is that we have a two-year period, and the minister is trying to decide whether or not to make it one or two years, which I gather is the situation. It really should be three years to have the proper effect, because that is a three-year period if we are going to bring it up to drinking age 19.

Mr. Bradley: The member for Cornwall is not listening.

Mr. Samis: I'm listening very carefully.

[4:15]

Mr. Bounsall: We did a lot of other nice things in that highway safety report which spoke to the drinking-driving problem: The Alert system, which just gets people off the road, if they are over 0.05. There are ways in which people can be tested to see whether they are just social drinkers or problem drinkers as they turn up on our highways. There are ways we know in which they can not only be separated, but also dealt with. That whole thing as a package would be useful in Ontario, of which increasing the drinking age to 19 is only one part and basically the most unimportant part. It is the rest of the package that makes those recommendations useful.

I have gone on for longer than I intended. I would end up by saying that if real progress is to be made about alcoholism we have to attack alcoholism and the drinking problem, the whys and the wherefores. We have to remove the causes and talk sensitively and meaningfully to all people in our society, not just our young people, about the crutch that alcohol is; what it is they are doing when they drink; do they really feel that insecure about themselves and do they really feel that bad about themselves that they have to resort to the use of that type of crutch?

That is what we should be doing. I fear that progress in that area is being set back or delayed because of what people think to be progress in fiddling with the age, rather than dealing with the problem and helping to remove the problems which cause the drinking.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to add my comments on Bill 96. I listened with interest the other night to the member for York Centre. I concur with his views that he expressed last Thursday evening. I am deeply concerned about the matter of raising the age of majority for drinking purposes only from 18 to 19. I am not convinced that it is going to solve the problem by moving it ahead one year. I think next year we will be introducing further amendments to the bill. It will be age 20, and the following year it will be 21.

We are holding many of our young adults on a shoe-string, dangling them up and down. We don't know what direction we should follow.

The matter of drinking and alcoholism is a serious problem in the province of Ontario. I have listened to other members discussing the problems and quoting statistics and facts which do relate to the number of fatal accidents that happened on our highways, not only in Ontario but across Canada. Other health problems are related to alcoholism and there is no doubt this adds a costly item to our health bills in Ontario.

As to the carnage on our highways, Canadian studies have shown that alcohol is involved in approximately 40 per cent of the highway fatalities and about 25 per cent to 40 per cent of cases of non-fatal highway injuries across Canada, which is rather alarming. It is also noted in statistics and evidence has indicated that over 75 per cent of the fatally injured drinking drivers had a blood alcohol concentration of 0.1 or greater, that is, in excess of the 0.08 level which is legally defined as impairment.

We have seen that alcohol, as indicated by previous speakers, is related to crime in Ontario and medical problems. Alcohol was involved in more than 40 per cent of all murders in Canada between 1961 and 1974. That is alarming. Alcohol is also frequently involved in suicide and suicide attempts. Studies indicate that about 25 per cent of attempted suicides are related to a drinking problem. It can be included in this particular area; alcohol is one of the problems here. Alcohol is also related to people committing suicide in the whole general population across Canada. One of the major reasons that would encourage people to move in that direction is if they were under the influence of alcohol. It adds to the violent criminal behaviour in Canada.

Other studies relate to a recent roadside survey conducted by the federal government which disclosed that in the late evening one out of five drivers was under the influence of alcohol and one in 20 was legally impaired.

When you look at the bill it doesn't actually get down to the root of the problem that is facing society. We as legislators, and the law enforcement agencies, have concentrated more effort on drunk driving or persons who have been legally charged for impairment. There is nothing in the bill, Mr. Speaker, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975, to change the person's ways of thinking or living to suit the code of moral ethics, but as legislators we are compelled to change the law to suit the person. I find that this relates more to this bill than any other bill that is before the Legislature.

I do not believe that the raising of the drinking age to 19 is the solution to the problem of the consumption of alcohol. I think the matter of the consumption of alcohol and its related problems lies directly within the family and the parents. I have enough confidence in our 18-year-olds today. They are better educated; they are mature, but when I use the word "mature" I am suggesting that they follow the principles that are set down by parents and other members of our society that drinking is the answer to all our problems.

I can see that the bill before us doesn't cover every area relating to the enforcement of the Liquor Control Act. Perhaps in the near future almost every person entering industry for work each day will have to have a breathalyser test because, again, studies have indicated the influence of alcohol as it relates to the driving of an automobile also relates to the number of accidents in industry. Industry is deeply concerned about the matter of drinking by persons entering into their plants daily and it is causing a serious problem.

I can recall making an appeal to the Workmen's Compensation Board with regard to a gentleman who had a serious accident. His prognosis wasn't that promising. But every response that I received from the Workmen's Compensation Board was that his problem wasn't related to the accident but was related to drinking. After reviewing the medical information and consulting with the family physician and arriving at some of the problems with the gentleman, I appeared before the board to appeal his case.

I remember one of the board members throwing out the interjection that his problem was drinking. I said to them, "What is causing that problem? What is the cause of it?" Too often our society doesn't look at the root of the problem. What is driving people to drink?

I thought that I had better be prepared for the appeal that day. When the board member threw the interjection I said, "I like to quote from the good book." So I threw this quote to him: "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish and wine unto those that be of heavy heart," and I based my argument upon that.

The board member was not quite satisfied; he kept throwing in the interjection about drinking. I said, "What is the cause of it? If you lose your job and have no source of income, I suppose that drinking is the easiest route to take and to dissolve yourself on that matter—to perish."

Then I threw him another quote from the good book and I will read it: "Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more." The more I look at society today, the more I am concerned about this.

Mr. Nixon: How about "Take a little wine for your stomach's sake"?

Mr. Haggerty: That is a good quote too; with a little honey.

I am concerned about this particular matter of the problems of alcoholism in Ontario. I don't have to quote the huge profits of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario; last year alone they had about $395 million in gross sales. You find very little of that spent in rehabilitation, Mr. Speaker. I think about $10.69 million goes to the Addiction Research Foundation. The detoxification centres receive a little over $3 million.

We don't go to the root of the problem: What is causing the drinking problem in the province?

I have some strong reservations about drinking, but then again I suppose it is based upon the person's choice whether he wants to drink or not. I think many of the problems that are caused by heavy drinking in Ontario are caused by those persons perhaps living in poverty, who have no hope of being elevated to some other level in our society. Then we have those at the other end, at the top level, who are being pressured with the stress involved in day-by-day business. In this particular area it's a matter of a few drinks a day, but I suppose it all adds up at the end of the year although if you have a certain tolerance level you can live with it. Beyond that level it is going to cause other problems in our society. I don't have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, about the problems and the costs in Ontario's social and community services or those related to health. It is an enormous cost.

I suggest to the minister that the bill doesn't go far enough. It doesn't deal with the issues themselves. There is nothing in there to indicate some form of education program in our schools—and I am talking about grade levels and secondary schools. I think we are lacking a program in this area to teach a respect for alcohol; there is nothing in this area.

The minister hasn't gone far enough. I suppose there are other areas we could get into but other members have spoken on the bill. I am not convinced that raising the age of majority for drinking purposes to 19 is going to solve the problem. The problem, again, relates to the family and that is where discipline has to take place, within that family.

Again, I suggest the minister must provide enough facts, enough information to the schools to warn future adults of the possibilities of the hazardous problems that may exist in heavy drinking. When you buy a package of cigarettes today it has a warning that they are hazardous to your health. We see nothing of that related to the problems of alcoholic beverages.

I suggest to the minister that this is one direction he should be moving into, better informing the public of the serious effects over-indulgence in alcohol can cause to the individual.

I am not too happy with the bill, but as a number of my constituents have informed me they think that raising the drinking age to 19 is going to solve the problem I will support the bill, but honestly I don't think that is the answer.

[4:30]

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill, Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975, and my particular feeling on this bill is that I will be voting against it.

I am not going to be very long. As a matter of fact I am going to be rather brief because a lot has been said. It appears to me that the two reasons that have been mentioned over and over again as to why there is a need for this kind of bill, particularly the clause which raises the drinking age from 18 to 19, are, first, that it would take liquor, booze, out of the high schools and, second, that because of the fact that there are so many accidents involving young people who apparently have been drinking.

Those are the emotional reasons which cause the minister to draw the conclusion that in order to stop young people from either killing themselves on the road or from drinking in the high schools what we should be doing is bringing in the punishment technique and saying, "We are going to control your behaviour because we are going to raise the drinking age so you will not be able to do it until you are 19."

I happen to think that the negative principle embodied in this bill—and, by the way, it happens to be embodied in every law; law is punitive by its very nature. I happen to think that it's not the correct approach at all. I happen to think, Mr. Speaker, that if we were really interested in getting liquor out of the schools, if we were really interested in stopping 18-year-olds from drinking, then perhaps the logical step to take is to ask ourselves the question, "Do we force our young people to stay too long in the school system to begin with?" We should ask ourselves the question, "When does the age of maturity really come about? Is it some magic number, at a magic age of 18, or 21, or 19, whatever it is?"

Mr. Lawlor: It's 183.

Mr. Grande: Is there something magic about a particular period in our lives where somehow we will be considered to be adult? I don't think that that magic number exists. I have known people in their so-called middle age who are not mature. I have known students of 14 and 15 who are very mature and very much capable of making their own decisions and acting in a responsible way.

Therefore, for this legislation to be coming before us and for us to be saying to our young people in this province that we really do not trust them, that we really do not think that they are responsible enough for their actions and so therefore we are going to curtail their actions, I think that is indeed the wrong tactic.

The only big reason is that so many young people drink and then drive and so therefore they get into accidents, accidents that will destroy the individual, accidents that kill. That's the emotionalism—the human life there. Who on earth would get up in this House and say, "Well, I am for killing people." No one, of course.

However, I don't suffer from the perspective of having been on the select committee—of having been fed a tremendous amount of information so from that information I would lose the perspective of the whole society within the province of Ontario. I happen to think that, once again, if we are serious about curtailing the drinking driver, and the drinking driver who is 18 years of age or under, then it would seem to me that rather than stopping that particular individual from having a drink what one does is increase the age at which a young person can drive on the road. You don't give a 4,000- or 5,000-pound weapon to a young person who is not responsible, who is not yet mature. There is where the real problem lies.

As my colleague the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) was suggesting, we have to be tackling basic causes here. I truly have had enough with just tackling the surface symptoms.

It is a fact that within the educational system, when students are in grade eight and go on to the high school system at 13 or 14 years of age, we ask them to make a monumental decision. That decision is, "What am I going to do with my life in terms of my educational goal, my educational pursuit?" Somehow, we believe that students at that age are capable of making such a decision.

When students go to the high schools, we tell them, "You can choose the courses you think you may want to take; the courses for which you have a particular aptitude; those you are best in." Those courses will determine the vocation of that young person. In other words, in the educational system we can say to students, "You are capable of making decisions that will affect your life," and yet we are saying to them at age 18, "You're not able to decide in a responsible way"—thousands upon thousands of them do act in very responsible ways—"whether you do indeed want to have a glass of wine."

I talk about a glass of wine because that happens to be part and parcel of my culture. I grew up at age six, seven, eight, with my father encouraging me to have a glass of wine and at this particular point in my life I certainly do not abuse the stuff. As a matter of fact, I don't even think about it. It's part of the attitudes that we have, which somehow indicate to us that prior to a particular age you cannot touch the stuff and after that particular age you can get bombed, as the expression goes.

I really do not think that that's the way things ought to be. There is a progression; there is a decision-making process; and every step of the way counts. There is no magic age of 18 or 19 or 21, at which that maturity comes about.

The other evening the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea) was trying to suggest, to me at least on this side of the House, that 90 per cent of the inmates of Ontario correctional institutions have a problem with drinking. He left it at that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I didn't say that; you know it. Get it right.

Mr. Grande: Of course, the emotionalism that is raised, the implication, is that the reason why 90 per cent are there is because they have a drinking problem?

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's not right.

Mr. Warner: That's what you said.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, I said alcohol-related. I specifically said it wasn't a problem. Now get it right.

An hon. member: Pay attention.

Mr. Warner: Look who's talking. You missed the message on coffee.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If you are going to use me to bolster your case, get it right.

Mr. Grande: The minister then ended his comments by saying that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations displayed courage in bringing about this bill.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You got that right.

Mr. Foulds: One out of two isn't bad.

Mr. Samis: That's not what he showed the day he read it to us.

Mr. Grande: Well, if he displayed courage in bringing about this bill, then I say that that courage is rare indeed. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and all the people on the other side of the House and at the other end of this side of the House, decided that this legislation was going to be brought in three years ago. It was coming.

Even though I do realize there are concerns across this province about drinking, about the abuses of alcohol, I really, truly, do not think that by singling out the youth in the province it's going to have any effect whatsoever. It is an attitudinal problem. It is a problem of the whole society. It is an educational problem, Mr. Speaker, and you do not encourage maturity in an individual, you do not encourage individuals to be able to make good decisions, by punitive approaches.

Mr. Bradley: I rise in support of the bill and many of the provisions within the bill.

Speakers to this point have dwelled on the raising of the drinking age as being the most controversial and perhaps the most important or contentious aspect of the bill. I think if we examine it carefully we find that it is only one aspect of the bill and that the minister has attempted to incorporate in the bill many positive steps that he hopes—and I think members of this House hope—will serve to alleviate at least part of the problem with drinking in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Lawlor: And certain negative ones too.

Mr. Bradley: Those of us who support the raising of the drinking age to 19 recognize that it isn't the entire solution by any means, that it's only one small part of the solution. If we look back 10 or 12 years, I cannot agree with those speakers who would suggest that the drinking problem among young people was as great as it is today, particularly among the very young group.

When I began teaching school I can recall that students in the 12-, 13- and 14-year-old age group spoke little about drinking, discussed it very little and did very little drinking. There were very few problems with drinking among those students within elementary schools and junior portions of high schools. It was something that was confined, at least by law, to those who were over the age of 20. Therefore, those who tended to break that law were those who would be one, or two, or perhaps even three years under the age of 21, if there was a breaking of that law.

At the present time, we see a trend towards younger and younger people developing alcoholic habits. As a teacher until 1977 I could see this trend coming about. Students now in the elementary grades, or in the junior high school grades are more and more drinking at dances and other social activities; more and more are smuggling alcoholic beverages into school premises for whatever reason, consumption and spreading them about. The entire problem seems to have reached almost a crisis, at least according to many of the parents and teachers and others who are observers of our society.

Raising the age to 19 does not remove these possibilities. However, it does alleviate part of that problem—particularly looking at the high school level and the habit that some have of going out in the lunch hour, consuming certain quantities of alcohol and returning to the classroom.

The member for Oakwood, or perhaps it was the member for Windsor-Sandwich, made a rather interesting point. One of them indicated that it is very difficult to assume that secondary school teachers are going to want to assume responsibility for enforcing the liquor legislation in the province of Ontario by drawing to the attention of the principal, or ultimately to the police authorities, the fact someone has consumed alcohol under the age of 19 and is at that time in a classroom.

Nevertheless, there are those within the teaching profession who are prepared to assume responsibility for ensuring that the laws of the province are upheld, indirectly or directly, and will find this a benefit in terms of the other students in the classroom who do not choose to partake of alcoholic beverages before coming to that particular classroom. It may have some effect at least in making the teaching of lessons just a little easier and the discipline problem within the secondary schools a little better than it has been in the past.

I recognize this as not only my experience in the teaching profession for a number of years, but also from my experience as a coach in hockey and baseball. It used to be that we took our midget age players, who are 15, 16 and 17, to tournaments out of town. When the age was 21, there was very little discussion of the potential for drinking or there was very little danger of that happening, of them getting into premises where they would be served alcoholic beverages or being able to procure alcoholic beverages at this time.

At the present time, it's very difficult to take different teams of that age, 15, 16 and 17, to tournaments without the knowledge that somehow they're going to be able to obtain alcoholic beverages. The focus will be on something other than the sport they are involved in and much more on the kind of rowdiness that might take place when they are out of town. This presents a real problem. Despite the onerous activities and duties that are part of being a member of the Legislature, I still have managed to find some time to coach a team again this year. I find that I simply am not in the position of being able to look forward to taking that team out of town for any overnight tournaments, simply because there is no real insurance that they are not able to procure alcoholic beverages somehow because they are very close to that legal age of 18.

The argument can be made, I suppose, that 19 does not improve the situation that much. It does, however, improve it a little bit. The chance of a person 19 supplying liquor to someone under age is just a little less than it would be in the case of a person 18. Most people who are of the age of 19 are either out in the work world or have graduated and are participating in activities in post-secondary education facilities. Therefore, it does diminish that possibility, even a little bit.

The minister has suggested as well the problem of drinking and driving, as have various committees, particularly the committee on highway safety. I think we recognize with more and more young people of the age of 16 now having their own vehicles, or with access to vehicles than was the case in the past and with the drinking age presently at 18 and the ability to procure alcoholic beverages fairly easily under that age, there is a tremendous increase in accidents. The death toll is appalling and the number of accidents, including personal injury, is appalling in this particular age group. It is reflected in the amount of money they have to pay in terms of premiums on the problem of drinking and driving among the young people in this province.

An interesting observation as well in terms of the physical fitness of young people is the age at which the waistline begins to expand since the the drinking age has been reduced from 21 to 18. When the age was 21, one often noticed people about the age of 23 or 24 beginning to accumulate a good deal of excess weight around the waist, often due to excess consumption of alcoholic beverages. We find now that the fitness of young people has diminished to a certain extent when one sees a pot belly on a person who is 19 and 20 years old from consumption at the younger age. Whether that is sufficient in itself to ensure support of this bill is questionable, but it is a sad observation nevertheless.

It is a sad commentary—the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) discussed that—that when members of the Legislature go to elementary schools or secondary schools to discuss issues of a provincial nature, one of the issues asked about the most is drinking. I can recall having members of the Legislature visiting when I went to Grantham High School in St. Catharines. As a matter of fact the member for Windsor-Walkerville was a guest speaker at one time. He was on one of the committees on youth at that time. We have had several committees on youth activities. At that time I cannot recall any questions which were directed to him concerning drinking ages and the problem of drinking. It simply was not the issue that it is at the present time.

I think it is rather a sad commentary that so many of our young people now are concerned about when they can start drinking legally. Perhaps this is partially because of the kind of advertising we see—the lifestyle advertising that the minister has now suggested will be reviewed very carefully. Perhaps there are other factors—the drinking age being one of them. Nevertheless, it seems to me to be a rather sad commentary that this is the case.

I pay tribute to my friend, the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) who brought forward a bill in the fall which initiated action. Also the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones), who was given credit by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations in his release. When I produced a little article for a newspaper that I produce each week, I substituted the name of Terry Jones with Remo Mancini to ensure that the proper credit was given for initiating the action in this House.

Mr. Warner: More fair than the Tories, they wouldn't do that.

Mr. Bradley: The minister now has been compelled as a result of the member for Essex South's initiative to bring forward this kind of legislation under the pressure of the people of this province.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is called the de-Stalinization of Remo Mancini.

Mr. Bradley: The minister, in fairness, does not look exclusively at raising the drinking age as being the final solution to this problem. I do support a provision he has made which I think is a commonsense provision. That is, allowing those who are the age of 18 and who must work in premises where alcoholic beverages are sold to continue to do so—

Mr. Warner: If they can get a job.

Mr. Bradley: —in order to earn more funds for various reasons.

I think the provision that we must have a card with a photograph on it or a licence with a photograph on it is going to make it easier for those who own premises, or those who retail liquor, beer and spirits, to determine those who can legally purchase these. No longer will they have the excuse that some kind of proof was provided but they did not have the photograph on it. I think this is a positive step which will have some results in enforcing this legislation as it presently exists, as well as when the age is raised to 19, as the member for Windsor-Sandwich suggested was necessary.

I also strongly support the stronger penalties which will be imposed on those who own these premises for serving those who are under age. I think anybody strolling into many of the licensed beverage rooms in this province would find that they are serving people under age. Although I don't find occasion to do this often, I have been told by other members of the Legislature who find time for this activity that the number of people under age who are presently being served—

Mr. Warner: Next time we will wake you up and ask you to join us.

Mr. Bradley: —in these premises is rather startling. I am told there are 15-, 16- and 17-year-olds being served at the present time. Only through more meaningful penalties and stronger enforcement are you going to find any improvement in this regard. The minister has provided for this in his bill and should be commended for that, even though it was done at the prompting of the members of the opposition.

I know the police authorities have had another problem involving the abuse of alcohol, and it is a genuine problem in terms of enforcing it in parks, and that is determining whether the container is open or closed.

Unless the police officer or someone in charge of enforcing the liquor law were to see a person actually consuming the alcohol, there was very little he could do about it. As soon as the police officer turned his back the alcohol would continue to be consumed. There has been open taunting of police officers in this regard. We have overcome this problem for people who wish to use these facilities without being bothered by large groups of people who have consumed alcoholic beverages in excess and are not interested in any constructive activity. I think it was necessary, so that the police were able to enforce this to provide for those who could responsibly consume alcoholic beverages and those who choose not to do so at all.

As a member of a municipal council, I can recall that municipalities often had problems in their own recreational facilities with those who might choose to consume alcoholic beverages and as a result of consuming them in excess caused many problems for the other customers who are there. By providing enabling legislation for various municipalities to prohibit alcohol in specific parks except under licensed conditions or arenas or other recreational facilities we are at last giving them the chance to be able to enforce a law which they felt was very important to again allow the responsible majority to enjoy these facilities in some kind of peace and quiet.

Also the provision to bar those who are well-known troublemakers in a community from licensed premises gives a break to those who wish to drink in moderation and in some kind of peace and quiet, even though sometimes these facilities have music which is certainly not defined as allowing you to enjoy peace and quiet. At least it allows the owner to prohibit those people from entering the premises or allows him to eject these people from those premises on a legal basis.

The bill itself does not solve the problem of alcoholism or of near-alcoholism in Ontario. It will not eliminate cirrhosis of the liver or other diseases which are associated with alcoholism or the consumption of alcohol in excess, but it does provide us with a step in the right direction. With the rest of the package the minister has announced it will have some effect, I believe, in alleviating this problem.

Education is necessary and the minister has indicated in his statement that he feels that much more education is necessary, and not only in the secondary and elementary schools. Time and again we keep saying the schools should be doing this or doing that. But there is also the kind of education that can take place in the home and in clubs or other organizations to which people belong. Of course there is also the setting of example by the adult population for those who are young, and by people in the family to assist in alleviating this problem.

I support this bill. I see no real problems with it. In committee we may find certain provisions that have to be adjusted slightly, but I see no real problems with this specific bill. It is a step in the right direction and I commend the minister and the government for accepting the advice of the opposition.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the members will be disappointed to learn that the pressures of this place necessitate that my three-hour speech be limited to 10 minutes. However, we will try—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's usually the reverse. Your 10-minute speeches take three hours.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Resign.

Mr. Warner: I knew the members would be disappointed.

Mr. Samis: Don't provoke him.

Mr. Warner: The minister, who perhaps now is trying to persuade his friends from Rosedale to attend the Blue Jay games in addition to the Stratford Festival and by so doing help to get us beer in the ballpark—I know he is working hard on that. Perhaps some of his cabinet colleagues will contribute along that line too, since there is a bit of a split in the cabinet, I believe, over that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Unanimous, no split. Nothing like your party is going to be on this vote.

[5:00]

Mr. Warner: I am very pleased to take part in the debate. I am also pleased to know, as I have sat through almost every speech that has been made on this bill, that all the members who have spoken have shown their concern over the issue. I think it's safe to say that every member of the assembly is concerned about the issue, although each member may define the issue a bit differently and may have a different solution to the problem.

I'm extremely disappointed with what the government has brought forward. I think it is making a mistake. I think it's one of two things: Either they don't understand the problem well enough or they're simply taking the easy way out.

As you recall, Mr. Speaker, there was a bill a while back—I don't remember the date of it—from the member for Essex South which received a great deal of publicity at the time. It proposed raising the drinking age to 19. His bill dealt solely with that matter. It created a great deal of interest in the public. Like other members of the assembly, I received telephone calls and letters from people interested in the issue. Some were in support and some were against.

I would have to say honestly it was a 50-50 split between those opposing and supporting the private member's bill of the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini). So it was easy for the government, over the kind of reaction they got, to simply mirror that bill instead of addressing the problem. I think that's the key to it: they're not addressing the problem.

I will be opposing the bill on the basis that the government is simply tinkering. That's all it's doing. In fact, it may be playing political games with it instead of looking at all the problems that are involved and trying to deal with them in a very straightforward way and trying to get at the root of it all.

The root of it is lifestyle. It's a lifestyle that we may not be able to easily identify in all of its forms, but it's a lifestyle. Just for a moment or two I think it's noteworthy to take a look at some of the lifestyle problems that we have foisted upon ourselves.

The good member for Cornwall (Mr. Samis) mentioned earlier Canada's national magazine, Maclean's, and what it does towards the advertising of alcoholic beverages. It's not just that so many pages are taken up with ads, but it's the nature of those ads.

We have one manufacturer, Premium, saying: "The reward of achieving . . ." There's something significant about that. We achieve if we're allowed to drink. It's a sign of achievement. It's also a reward. It's out of their ad on the second last page of the June 12, 1978, edition.

In the same magazine, on page 63, it says: "The only thing more rewarding than giving it is sharing it—Seagram's Crown Royal."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Say that again?

Mr. Warner: "The only thing more rewarding than giving it is sharing it—Seagram's Crown Royal."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It sounds like socialism.

Mr. Warner: Socialism is so much deeper, I wouldn't expect the minister to understand it.

On page 39, Dewar's Scotch Whisky advertises: "You deserve a Dewar's." Again, the concept of reward.

The one that really grabs me is the one that's placed on page 11 by the minister's good friends; it talks about mixing: "You just add water and mix." The ad goes on, and what it's trying to do, of course, is to promote the company. It's not a liquor ad. It's an ad placed by Imperial Oil. It shows a cocktail glass with a stir stick in it, and it's talking about oil. That's how far we've gone in this society that we not only try to get classy, slick ads on drinking, but we try to get that associated with all other products because drinking is such a highly prized ability in our society.

Mr. Samis: We used to settle for a tiger in the tank. Now we are up to this.

Mr. Warner: I think that is pretty sad.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suppose that is the government's fault.

Mr. Warner: As my friend said, it was a tiger in the tank and now we want scotch in the tank. That is the movement that has taken place, even to the front of the magazine and its covering article, which I gather is the single's myth. There is a story here about the myth of being single.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you want us to censor that?

Mr. Warner: The picture on the front is of a young woman resplendent with a glass of wine and a cigarette in her hand.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you think we should censor that?

Mr. Grande: It would be more useful than some other things you have censored.

Mr. Warner: Again, the connection that has to be made is between the story on the singles and the drinking. It is obviously in a bar because one can see in the background the bar table, bottles of beer and other drinks.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you favour censorship?

Mr. Samis: The minister is bringing out green herrings.

Mr. Warner: Why I bring it to the minister's attention—

Mr. Grande: The minister is not listening.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: After two hours?

Mr. Warner: When the minister is ready to listen, what I am trying to bring to his attention is the fact that this kind of lifestyle advertising not only promotes drinking in our society, but says it is something we should work towards, something we deserve, drinking is a reward for us. I am really quite offended by that. What we seem to have got away from is the fact that drinking—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Did you write Maclean's about their cover?

Mr. Warner: They are not the only culprit and the minister knows it, but he probably is not going to do anything about this.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not going to censor it.

Mr. Samis: He can't anyway and he knows he can't.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you going to write a letter to the editor? I will look for your letter to the editor about this.

Mr. Warner: He is not going to do anything about the lifestyle advertising.

Mr. Foulds: Would the minister stop heckling? Does he want this bill through?

Mr. Warner: Surely the kind of thing the government should be taking a look at and this Legislature should be taking a look at is all of the ingredients that go into our attitudes about drinking in our society, starting from the very beginning.

I will recall to the Speaker and the minister what has been related to me from my children, both of whom are pre-schoolers. They have had, I would say, an excellent reaction to those ads on television by the cancer society about the problems related to smoking cigarettes because of the statements they will say to me: "I am glad you don't smoke cigarettes. Smoking is bad for you. Smoking is bad for your health, isn't it, Dad?"

Obviously, their exposure to television and those ads, coupled with the fact that they took the cigarette ads off television, has been a very positive thing in the life of my children. I don't understand why we can't parallel that kind of approach with alcoholic beverages.

The minister has put nothing in the bill to deal with that. He has never made a statement to deal with that, and that is part of the roots of it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What section of the bill?

Mr. Samis: He wouldn't know.

Mr. Warner: If he really wants to get serious about the problem, that is one of the things he should take a look at. He should take a look at what he is going to do in the schools. How serious is he about the problem in the schools? I would think if the government was really serious about what it perceives to be a drinking problem in the schools, it would treat it the same way it says it is going to treat drinking while driving.

When one drinks while he drives, presumably the government is now going to get tough. They haven't been in the past but they are going to be in the future. Those drivers who are out on the roads and have been drinking while driving are going to get clobbered by the law before they clobber someone else in their car, according to the government. We have yet to see any evidence or much evidence of it.

Mr. Cunningham: On the Don Valley Parkway.

Mr. Warner: But that is going to happen. We also know if he is drinking while working—unless he is an executive, in which case it is excused as part of the job—the worker on the assembly line who has a problem with drinking is sent home. There are often repercussions for him. I don't understand why we don't take the same approach to those who are supposedly learning.

If they are in the classroom and have been drinking, do something about it. Get them out of the classrooms and find some suitable way to punish them for what they have done. But don't use it as an excuse to single out the 18-year-olds as a class, as a group, and say to them, "You're responsible for the problems in our society. You're responsible for all the drinking problems and we are going to punish you for it."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We didn't say that.

An hon. member: But the legislation says so.

Mr. Warner: That's precisely what the minister is doing in this bill. He is not addressing the problem.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Don't be silly.

An hon. member: You are not even addressing the bill.

Mr. Warner: I have said to the minister before—I said it back in the fall of 1975; it wasn't the present minister—"Get tough with the drinking drivers. Get them off the road. Impose a jail sentence if you feel it's warranted."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You will support our other legislation?

Mr. Warner: "But don't allow those people driving around on the roads after they have been drinking too much."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You will support our legislation in the fall?

Mr. Warner: The government didn't see fit to do that but it did see fit to bring in a seatbelt law, and after the seatbelt law had been in for a year—I applauded; I supported the legislation—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Progressive government.

Mr. Warner: —and after the seatbelt law had been in and the speed limits had been lowered, the Minister of Transportation and Communications was able to stand in this House and present a report which said that the accident rate and serious death rate had declined, because—

An hon. member: Serious death?

Mr. Warner: —of the seatbelt law and lowered speed limits.

Mr. Bradley: The former member for St. Catharines doesn't agree with that.

Mr. Warner: The government was willing to take a tough stand on that one and intermittently they actually enforced the law on seatbelts. I wish they would do it more thoroughly.

Mr. Speaker: Meanwhile, back to Bill 96.

Mr. Warner: Well the relationship, I am sure—

An hon. member: We are getting there.

Mr. Warner: I don't want to say that the Speaker wasn't listening, but the relationship is if the government is willing to be tough on that, then why can't it be tough on the drinking and driving?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the fall.

Mr. Warner: In the fall! It's always in the fall. But a year ago or more than a year ago we had the seatbelt legislation and it has been quite good.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Will your caucus be split on that too?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Yours is split also.

Mr. Warner: If the minister has a problem in the bars with minors—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Another free vote?

An hon. member: You are never split over there?

An hon. member: Beer in the ballpark, Larry.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, this isn't the time to discuss the minister's split personality. If there is a problem in the bars with minors being served, then he should solve that problem by dealing with those who are breaking the law. Don't solve it by moving the age up a year. The minister knows as well as I do that almost every teenager in this city can give you a list of the bars to go to where you will be served.

Mr. Bradley: That's right.

Mr. Warner: They know it; they know which ones will serve them and which ones won't. Crack down on those bars that are serving minors. Do something about the establishments instead of taking it out on the 18-year-olds. That's the place. The minister should deal with the problem he has at hand, but he is not doing that. It's far easier to simply raise the age by a year.

Let him do something about the educational system. How is he going to handle the dissemination of material that's necessary so people have a little different perspective about drinking and don't view it as a reward, don't view it as something to achieve the moment they turn 18 or 19 or whatever age the minister decides on? There has to be a different approach to alcoholic beverages than what we have now.

I wonder if the minister's aware—I would imagine he is—of the pub system in England where a couple of things operate. For the most part it's cheaper to buy beer and alcoholic beverages in a pub than it is to get it at the retail store, the liquor outlet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is it 10 minutes yet?

Mr. Bradley: It was up at 5:09.

Mr. Warner: The minister is interested in the time more than my speech obviously, so I—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Right! Carried, carried.

Mr. Warner: —will address my remarks through the chair to the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea) who always listens to everything I have to say.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He didn't even hear you say that.

Mr. Warner: In England what they attempt to do, Mr. Speaker, is to say that the alcoholic beverages are going to be a little cheaper in the pubs than they are in the retail stores and then control the hours that the pubs would be open, so the pub closes at supper time and workers when they finish their job go home; they may come back to the pub in the evening but they go home; they are not going straight to the local pub to sit there and drink.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you in favour of that? Is that your party's position?

Interjections.

[5:15]

Mr. Warner: And secondly, while at the pub, rather than being waited on at the tables, if they require a beer they go to the bartender and ask to have a beer. They don't have the situation we have in some of these places that are nothing more than watering holes, where they come around and put two, three or four beers at a time on your table. I understand that's illegal, but it's done. Even if the person's head is resting on the table they will still plant two, three or four beers on the table in front of the person. Totally illegal though I imagine it is, they still do it. There's no law against it.

The approach in England has always been quite different. You want the beer, you go up to bar and ask the chap to serve you one. Also, the pubs are usually within walking distance from the person's home, people don't have to get in their cars.

Mr. Cunningham: That would take a lot of rezoning.

Mr. Warner: What does that involve? It involves a different approach to planning, obviously.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you agree with that? Are you in favour of that?

Mr. Warner: You can't do all of that unless you are willing to tackle the entire problem, which the government isn't willing to do. The government simply is not willing to do it.

Interjection.

Mr. Warner: The government would rather single out the 18-year-old and say that he or she must be 19. Raise the drinking age and then say the problem has gone away, we have solved the problem. That's a lot of baloney.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We didn't say that.

Mr. Warner: Quite frankly, it really is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And in conclusion; to sum it up.

An hon. member: Have you been in an English pub?

Mr. Warner: The minister probably won't want to comment on this, but I think the government has got to take a look at the hours of service, the hours that the bars and pubs are open. They are willing to adjust it for the airlines now, to accommodate the businessmen so they can have a drink while in the air between cities.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Only businessmen fly, right?

Mr. Warner: —but is the government willing to take a look at the hours of service in the bars here in the city and throughout the province and think about cutting them back during the week, Monday to Friday? I doubt it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What's your position?

Mr. Bradley: You're the government.

Mr. Warner: The system here is we ask questions, the minister answers them, remember that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What's your position?

Mr. Warner: My position, to the minister, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister should table in here—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's a position.

Mr. Warner: —every single aspect of this drinking problem we have in Ontario and how he intends to deal with them. I would certainly be quite happy to challenge the minister, I'm able to do that and I am willing to do that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What are the hours?

Mr. Warner: I am willing to draft a list of all of the components of this drinking problem that we've got in Ontario and suggest how we approach it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I look forward to it.

Mr. Warner: I will have to do it because the government won't do it.

Mr. Bradley: The minister can't even control the liquor board.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When will I have it?

Mr. Warner: That's the whole difference here. This bill is going to be debated some more; it's going to be passed, because the majority of members in the Assembly will pass it. The government will proclaim it, and the government will say: "There; we wash our hands of it. The problem is solved. Now that we have moved it from 18 to 19 the problems are going to dissipate somehow and we don't have to do anything more."

Mr. Bradley: We won't let them do that.

Mr. Warner: I say the government is wrong. I will oppose this bill because it is short-sighted; because it is piecemeal; because it does not address the real problem. It is tinkering with the system, nothing more.

I will welcome the day when the government or a committee of this Legislature deals with the problem in depth; deals with it thoroughly and can recommend a procedure, not just to the Legislature but to the people of Ontario, whereby we can alter our lifestyle over a period of a couple of generations, we can alter our lifestyle and by so doing help solve the problem of alcoholism instead of singling out 18-year-olds and attacking them as being irresponsible.

Mr. Bradley: Bernie, I mentioned you in an earlier speech.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: So you don't have to speak, Bernie.

Mr. B. Newman: I don't intend to be at all lengthy. Practically everything that one could possibly think about has been said, not once, twice, but a half a dozen times. Some of the things I will bring up will I think be new because they are the results of a questionnaire that I sent out in my own constituency. I'll try to show members the thinking of different age groups—the high school student, the community college and university student and the general public.

I don't care how many laws we pass in this province concerning alcohol and its control, we're not going to resolve the problem of alcoholism. I can recall that I grew up in the days when practically every second house in certain sections of the city was a blind pig. They sold their own brew, their own alcohol. I can recall aircraft landing at the airport in the city of Windsor, flying it over to Detroit at some remote airport, unloading their cargo and coming back to the Windsor area for a second load.

Mr. Haggerty: That's free trade.

Mr. B. Newman: I can recall when they used to smuggle alcohol into the United States by means of boats in the La Salle area and other areas of the Detroit River. We were dry then, we had an alcohol problem. We introduced two per cent beer, we still had a drinking problem. Even though there was two per cent beer, there was always the stronger beer available in certain establishments.

We didn't have the sale of alcoholic beverages—I shouldn't say alcoholic beverages, we didn't have whisky and the exotic names for liquor and whisky available to the public, but they got it. There was no problem getting the thing after some fashion. It's a problem that only you yourself can start trying to resolve. If the will isn't there and if you can't leave that temptation to get involved in the better life as advertised in television, you're not going to resolve your own problems.

I happen to be fortunate—or unfortunate, take it as you will—as one who doesn't have that problem because as a youth I was involved deeply in physical education. As a result, I found better ways of burning up my energy and spending my spare time. But I don't think others should live the way I live. If they want to live and enjoy the good life by consuming any type of alcohol-containing beverage, that's entirely up to them.

I was on the select committee on youth that looked into this problem. Even that committee at that time was split as to whether we should lower the drinking age or leave it at 21. We did make recommendations. I happened to be one at that time who didn't want the drinking age lowered. I thought it was good enough at 21.

Mr. Bradley: A man of foresight.

Mr. B. Newman: As I say, I don't think that because I don't want it that others shouldn't have it at the age they wish. When the Mancini bill was first introduced, everyone was all hepped up with the raising of the drinking age from 18 to 19. Then all of a sudden some political bodies in the county thought that since we've taken 19—how about taking 20 instead, we'll go half-way between 19 and 21. Several of the councils in the county of Essex suggested that the drinking age be raised to 20. Sandwich South was one, Kingsville another, and also Essex county separate school board. All passed resolutions suggesting that the drinking age be raised to 20.

I sent out a questionnaire, and I identified the questionnaire in sending it to high school students, to get their reaction as to whether the drinking age should be raised or lowered; to community college and university students or post-secondary students; and to the community generally. I don't think this is indicative of the thinking of all the secondary school students, but this is the sampling I sent out and here are the results of the questionnaire sent out.

I sent out the questionnaire to 472 secondary school students. The question read: "Should the drinking age remain at 18 or should it be raised?" In reply, 54 per cent of the high school students said that it should remain at 18 and 46 per cent said it should be raised. When I asked how high it should be raised, naturally the 54 per cent that said it should remain at 18 said that it should be 18. The others were split between 19, 20 and 21.

When the same question was asked of post-secondary school students—that is, students at the community college and the university in the city of Windsor—"Should the drinking age remain at 18 or should it be raised?" 27 per cent of the post-secondary students said it should remain at 18, while 73 per cent said it should be raised. Asking them to what extent it should be raised, 22 per cent said the age should be 19, 10 per cent said it should be 20, and 41 per cent said it should be 21.

We can see that the high school kids didn't want the drinking age raised, but the community college kids and university students—I shouldn't call them kids—wanted it not at 19 or 20 but up at the top of the figures I've indicated; that is, 21.

Mr. Samis: They wanted to keep those kids out of the bars.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Of course, those kids are all 25.

Mr. B. Newman: When I asked that of the community in general—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Based on 12 responses.

Mr. B. Newman: —I received 4,098 returns, or 16.3 per cent of the questionnaires that were sent out were responded to by the citizens in Windsor-Walkerville. Asked "Should the drinking age remain at 18 or should it be raised?" 22 per cent of the residents in Windsor-Walkerville said it should remain at 18, and 78 per cent—3,212 out of 4,098—said it should be raised. To what age? Twenty-two per cent of the residents said to keep it at 18, three per cent said to raise it to 19, 14 per cent said to raise it to 20, and 61 per cent said to raise it to 21. I didn't indicate any other figures other than 18, 19, 20 and 21, but 10 people indicated they wanted it at 25. But the majority wanted it raised to 21. The high school students said to keep it at 18, the community college and university students said to raise it to 21, as did the general public. I don't think any of these types of figures were provided in the debates up to now; so I thought I would let the members of the Legislature know how one riding reacted to it.

I will vote for the bill raising it to 19. I don't think it is the resolution to the problem. I think we'll have it regardless of what age we raise it to or to what age we lower it. I would prefer to have the age raised, because at least with 19 it will be out of the high schools to a greater degree than it is today. We hope it will lessen the number of accidents on our highways as a result of making it maybe a little more difficult. Mind you, if you want to get an alcoholic beverage, there is no way of stopping the individual from getting the beverage. He'll find a way of getting it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I have listened now to three days, I guess, of some of the members opposite suggesting—quite inaccurately, I might add—that this government has come to the conclusion that young people are irresponsible and can't handle liquor, and that we're taking all the sins of the population out on the 18-year-olds.

However, I noted that those persons who had given more study to the history of the development of this legislation, who had read the Jones report, or who had sat on or read the report of the highway safety committee, did not deal with it on that basis.
[5:30]

Indeed, they dealt with it much on the basis that the Premier dealt with it last November 10, when subsequent to the private members' vote he said as follows: "The rationale"—and this is what I think has to be explained to young people—"is that when you are 18 years of age, you are in a school environment where those ages run from 13 to 18. The bulk of their social life is within that same peer group. The influence of the senior members of that group, their habits and their lifestyles, have an impact on those who are a year or two or three younger."

That is exactly what we have been saying throughout this dialogue. We have not been saying, at least on this side of the House, that young people have failed any sort of test. We know the figures and the figures indicate all the things that some members have referred to. The member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) and others have quite properly read out those figures. They obviously show some increase in alcohol-related accidents by young people and obviously an increase in the use of alcohol by young people.

Mr. Grande: Isn't that the test the minister is talking about?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: However, what we are talking about is to what extent the alcohol involvement in high schools in creating those figures. To what extent are the 15, 16 and 17-year-olds being unduly influenced in a way that they wouldn't otherwise be influenced by those 10 or 11 per cent of the people in high schools who are able to drink lawfully.

As we said many times, we are not entirely sure that this will cure all of those problems. We have been very clear in saying that this is not being held out as a cure-all and an end-all. That simply isn't the case. I want to quote again from the Premier's (Mr. Davis) statement of last fall.

Mr. M. N. Davison: He doesn't do too good on statements after private members' bills.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He said, "I want to make it clear that I don't believe raising the age itself is going to resolve what is a significant social problem."

Mr. Samis: What about the Brampton charter?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "I was impressed by the discussions I heard this morning. I heard people, who felt as I did in 1971, that with the age of majority should go the legal right to consume alcoholic beverages." The Premier went on interestingly to ruminate on the wider and larger problems, as some other members have this afternoon. I believe the member for Windsor-Sandwich, who is not supporting this legislation, expressed some of these same views.

The Premier went on: "But I want the public to also understand that, as parents, if we feel that we can really pass off some of our responsibility for leadership and direction by legislating away the situation, then we really are fooling ourselves. Parents and those of greater experience in terms of age have a responsibility not just in terms of the guidance they give or the leadership, but also in terms of the examples they set."

That is precisely true. At no stage in this dialogue have we been suggesting we can turn things around, take an onus which is properly on the shoulders of parents and lies in the homes and in the schools and solve all those problems by this piece of legislation.

We have through the debate been critical, quite frankly and openly. My colleague, the member for Mississauga North (Mr. Jones) has appeared in untold numbers of schools and has told those schools directly that if they have problems with youngsters drinking on the front lawn, if they have problems with students coming back after having had too many drinks or even a single drink for lunch, then it is within the power of those schools to solve that problem.

Government is now again faced with the problem that, in spite of our repeated efforts, some schools have not reacted sufficiently strongly. It is an age-old problem as the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) indicated. Alcoholism is a problem that is with us and will likely be with us for a long time to come. There are no easy answers to it.

If there are answers, those answers are obviously going to lie in the homes and in the families and, to some extent, in the schools. As long as we blindly ignore what the figures show us with regard to the presence of some alcohol in high schools, then I think we are derelict in our responsibilities if we do not act.

It is clear that raising the age to 19 may have somewhat less effectiveness than going to 21, but at the same time we think we should look closely and move carefully in this area.

Mr. M. Davidson: It will have no effect at all. Why don't you be honest about it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If it isn't working five or six years from today, then it is time to look again. We either abandon the 19 trial or experiment, or we go higher, up to 20; that's the time when you assess it.

Mr. Warner: You won't run a trial of beer in the ballpark.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Lest anyone think that we think the problems will go away this November or, I guess quite properly, next March or April, we do not think that. But we do have the opportunity now to reflect back and say that 10 years ago, before the drinking age was lowered from 21 to 18, there appeared to have been a heck of a lot less alcohol in the high schools than there is today. Now we feel it is time that we moved the age up one year and see whether reducing the amount of lawful drinking in high schools to two per cent of the high school population—

Mr. M. N. Davison: In September.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In December—may begin to move us back to that situation 10 years ago, when there was a heck of a lot less alcohol present in the high schools.

Mr. M. Davidson: You have no figures to substantiate that.

Mr. M. N. Davison: There are more drugs in the high schools.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We hope it will work. But to do nothing in the face of that situation would, I suggest, be an abrogation of our responsibilities. It is peer pressure, it is there—

Mr. Makarchuk: There's a little bit of advertising involved too. Don't forget that.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you take on the ads?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —it is giving access to a lot of alcohol to a lot of young people who might, at drinking age 19, not have that access or availability.

Mr. Makarchuk: There's a good profit motive there too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to emphasize once again: No one on this side of the House has suggested that young people have failed any test, that they have not been able to handle their liquor responsibility—

Mr. Grande: You just did.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —because those problems go throughout the length and breadth of age groups in our society.

Mr. Warner: Nonsense. That's what the bill says.

Mr. Samis: That's why you brought the bill in.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But we do think that a longer-term solution is the type of introduction to alcohol, if you are going to have any at all, that my friend the member for Oakwood had and indeed that I had in my home and so many people have had. That is likely a better way to have alcohol introduced and handled and dealt with than the current fashion where, quite frankly, our perception is that it is very prevalent in high schools where it was not 10 years ago.

Mr. Warner: Promoted by the ad agencies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has been pointed out that most of the arguments have been covered on all sides of this issue, and I might say that one of the ones I did want to deal with in wrapping up was the argument that we should have a single age of majority. In looking for some guidance, I looked back to what is, for me at least, a rather unusual source and came upon the remarks made in this august assembly by Mr. Singer, the then member for Wilson Heights, I think it was then. I quote Mr. Singer; this is June 24, 1971, page 3203:

“What real relationship lowering the drinking age to coincide with the age of majority has, I do not know. Does it make any particular sense that a person should not be able to drink until he has the right to make a contract? Does that make any sense?”

He goes on to say further:

“Why does the minister take refuge in the thought, and why do his colleagues take refuge in the thought, that all of these things have to be done together? If you are old enough to fight a war, surely you can be old enough to vote? If you are old enough to do a variety of things, surely you might be old enough at 18 to have a drink?” That's interrogative, I might say. In any case, the member at that time certainly rejected all of those arguments.

Mr. Samis: Some authority, Larry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I might say that quite apart from those who accept the argument of Mr. Singer, I also want to say that I think the public of Ontario is entitled to a little bit more leadership from any government—

Mr. Warner: We aren't getting much from you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —than to have that government say, “Listen, we think it is nice and consistent and easy to have one single age.” I don't think those persons who agree with us that there is a high degree of alcohol involvement in the high schools would be satisfied with an answer that said: “We think if you can vote and make contracts and fight for your country, you should be able to drink. We want it consistent. We are not prepared to raise the others; so we are going to stand pat on that.”

I think they are entitled to have the leadership from this government that says: “Yes, we understand that there will be some persons who have some difficulty with this concept, with the breaking up of this consistent age, but we do acknowledge a problem, and a specific one: alcohol in high schools.”

Mr. M. Davidson: An overall problem.

Mr. M. N. Davison: This is an exercise in fear.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: “Therefore, we will proceed and not fob off our responsibility on something called a nice consistent age of majority and we will act. We will have the courage to move in there and act.”

That is precisely what we've done. We acknowledge this is a difficult area and I think the difference in feeling—

Mr. Grande: Ah, you are inconsistent in one speech.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —that many people have gone through is reflected by society at large.

I referred back to the debate on lowering the age of majority in 1971. I was astonished to find out it was passed on July 27. Lord knows what they were doing sitting on July 27.

Mr. Bounsell: It was just prior to the election. There was a whole backlog of legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That was before the election. But I wanted to quote Mr. Singer again.

Mr. Warner: Why do you quote people who are not here?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He said: “As my leader indicated, we will be offering an amendment that will bring into effect the act and probably the sections relating to voting age and drinking age immediately.”

Mr. Singer further stated: "While this is going on and we say hurrah for the government, this is long overdue. The government is no more ready for this now than it could have been two years ago."

Mr. M. N. Davison: Boy, do you love the year 1971. Weren't those the good old days?

Mr. Samis: Why don't you quote seatbelt legislation?

Mr. Foulds: Why do you quote the deceased like that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Such was the temperament in 1971.

The member for what was then Essex-Kent, now called Essex North (Mr. Ruston), went on to point out in the same debate, and I quote: "In a survey that I have had done in my own riding, there was some reluctance to approve this although as far as the adult population is concerned it is almost 50-50—a little lower for drinking."

Mr. Foulds: No legislator should be held responsible for statements he makes on July 27.

Mr. Bradley: Very selective.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So it would be safe to say that there was a fair amount of sympathy. It was the tenor of the times and indeed, the bill passed in under two hours. It could have been on account of the date, July 27, but the entire age of majority bill affecting drinking, contracts and so on, passed in two hours.

Mr. Warner: Only because you weren't here to be provocative.

Mr. Haggerty: You weren't here making a speech then.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wanted to quote some of the remarks made by the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) in that debate. However, as is always the case with the member for Lakeshore, he had three pages in this Hansard, 1971. I understood none of it. But he apparently supported the bill then and I was happy to find his support for the change we're making today.

I have a couple of quick comments with regard to the comments made by some of the members who have spoken earlier.

Mr. Samis: That's your fault, Larry.

Mr. Warner: That's your responsibility.

Mr. Samis: That's your deficiency.

Mr. Duszta: I'm glad to see you admit your inadequacies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) pointed out the problem with the age-of-majority cards. I want to assure him that when the photo-drivers' cards come into effect we will be using those cards and for those persons who do not hold drivers' licences, those same cards will be adapted to serve the dual purpose. I would point out his remarks that he has confidence in the ability of the local police forces to act responsibly and effectively—

Mr. Cunningham: Especially in Kitchener.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). He pointed out quite reasonably earlier today the problem in some public parks as opposed to the stadia where some members of this assembly and others have been noted imbibing in Stratford in a public setting. I suppose, at the present time, all we can do is one of two things:—

Mr. B. Newman: Use soft drinks.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —rely upon the good judgement of the officers involved and—

Mr. Foulds: It certainly wasn't at the Shaw Festival.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's a part of the problem.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —secondly that we understand—

Mr. Makarchuk: It's known as a cultural experience.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It will be a cultural experience.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and I know the members of this House will understand, the problems in drafting some legislation which will work to cover all of the instances that we're talking about. The legislation should permit those persons who are consuming alcohol in a public park, Centre Island being one, to do so in certain circumstances. We would, quite seriously, be pleased to entertain any suggested drafts to the regulations—

Mr. Warner: Why don't you do it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —which would be able to take in all the instances while not permitting that consumption in public parks which would create difficulty—for example, what we've seen in the provincial parks. Yet the legislation should permit the consumption of alcohol in those settings which are very appropriate in those same parks.

Mr. Warner: What a flimsy excuse.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have tried and have not been able to come up with it. If any members have any comments or suggestions with regard to how by regulation we may deal with that, we would be very happy to accommodate that.

[5:45]

The member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) and other members have pointed out the need for education and wider steps to solve the problem in society at large. I would refer him just for a moment to page eight of my statement on introduction of this legislation. I said as follows: "We also think that education is important in the attitudes of young people toward drinking. The Canadian distilling industry has agreed to finance a conference next year to explore ways to improve curriculum guidelines on alcohol education in our schools."

Mr. Bounsall: Abdicate to the liquor companies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "And I am pleased to announce this conference will be jointly sponsored with the Ontario Association of Curriculum Development. In addition, my colleague, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), will be proposing the allocation of funds to reinstitute a television advertising campaign on alcohol moderation—the 'Be your own liquor control board' ads."

Mr. M. N. Davison: You can't leave education to the liquor companies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "It is our hope that between the government and industry we can provide the public with more information on the dangers of alcohol abuse for the whole population, not just minors."

The point I wish to make quite clearly is that we now have an initiative in development of some teaching resources on a wider basis and a better-funded basis and curriculum guidelines for the schools.

Mr. Warner: You won't take on the ad agencies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Secondly, the Minister of Health is stepping up the "Be your own liquor control board" advertising campaign—evidence, I suggest to you, of our intention to solve and deal with the wider problems.

Mr. Warner: You won't confront them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) complained as did some others, about the lack of policing of our current regulations. I have in front of me a list of just some of the hotels and taverns that have had their licences suspended in the past year for serving minors: The Wallaceburg Hotel in Wallaceburg, 10 days; Elmhurst Hotel, Newcastle, 10 days; Rivalda Tavern, Toronto, 15 days; Kingsway Hotel, Chatham, 21 days; Colborne Hotel, Sarnia, 21 days; Cornwallis Hotel, Cornwall—the member for Cornwall has left—30 days.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No he hasn't.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He has just moved, sorry. And on and on. It is a rather lengthy list.

Mr. M. N. Davison: How many in Metro?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The final point I would like to deal with—

Mr. M. N. Davison: How many on the list?

Mr. Warner: What is the total on your list?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With regard to the remarks of the member for York Centre and the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne)—do you want to sit and listen to them all?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Give us the number.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for London North complained that liquor control board outlets and brewers' retail outlets do not ask for identification and that licence holders under the Liquor Licence Act do not ask for identification.

I would like to point out to the House that we did a survey of licensees. A total of 2,860 replied, an outstanding return. By the way, 54 per cent of the licensees who responded were in favour of increasing the age.

Mr. Warner: What were the bars?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Seventy per cent of the licensees said that they already used the age-of-majority cards.

With regard to liquor control board stores and brewers' retail, the brewers' retail, for one, keep a record of the number of people that they ask for identification and the number of people it turned away. Last year the brewers' retail alone in 1977 challenged 203,339 persons who were trying to buy beer.

Mr. Foulds: Were there any repeats?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There were 73,927 turned away for being under age or for lack of suitable identification. So of those charged with the responsibility of selling those beverages, 70 per cent of the licensees who responded are age-of-majority card premises, while on behalf of the Brewers' Retail, and the Liquor Control Board stores, I can assure members that they are watching carefully. The figures have been presented to you and they are there for your information and advice.

Finally, I can only reaffirm to the House that I would hope most people would read carefully, before we get to committee stage, the Jones report, the highway safety report and the debates that have gone on in the last few days in this Assembly and last November 10. I would ask members to reflect upon the problem and to really understand that this government believes this small step—indeed it is a small step—

Mr. Warner: I was right. You won't take on the ad agencies. Not a single word about them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—can have some effect in the high schools. We believe it can. This small step is simply pointed towards that peer pressure in high schools. We will be dealing with the wider problem in other sections of the act, other than the drinking age section, in other legislation and in the guidelines for advertising.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Thousands of 18-year-olds are out working and not in the high schools.

Mr. Warner: You make marshmallows look like cement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In closing, I want to disabuse anyone of the understanding or belief that we think the minors have failed any tests or that we are picking on them. We simply think this is one small step worth trying at this time.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of second reading of Bill 96 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "ayes" have it.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

MUSKOKA AND PARRY SOUND TELEPHONE COMPANY LIMITED ACQUISITION ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 108, An Act to acquire the Assets of the Muskoka and Parry Sound Telephone Company Limited.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have a statement?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Very little, Mr. Speaker. When I introduced the bill about two weeks ago, I made a statement to the House at that time explaining the necessity for this bill, which is somewhat unusual, to take over the assets of a private telephone company. I believe that statement and the compendium of information and background that were tabled with the bill pretty well set forward the reasons and the total situation of the company at this time. It is unfortunate that this company is unable to maintain anything close to a satisfactory level of service to the 800 square mile area and the 1,500 or so subscribers that the company has. It is with regret that I find we have to take the action this bill brings about.

Mr. Cunningham: I sense that the minister and the ministry may have been reluctant to involve themselves in this particular activity, and I do sympathize with them. They are concerned about the people in that area who have not been receiving proper or adequate services. I know they have made an effort in the past to try to negotiate with the owners of the company. It's regrettable that this legislation has to come forward, but I believe it's a necessity if the people in the area are to obtain the services they require.

Certainly I don't think there's anybody in the House who would argue that the telephone today is not a necessity. I would like to ask the minister—and this may eliminate any necessity on our part to see the bill go to committee—to indicate to us what his intentions are after acquisition, whether it's the intention of the government eventually to dispose of the company to Bell Canada, or failing that to try to operate it at a profit or to keep the costs comparable to that of Bell.

The only other concern I have—and possibly I don't understand it—is with section 6 of the bill. I am somewhat concerned about the ministry's commitment to spend $50,000, that that amount of money will have a priority as opposed to other debts that might have been incurred prior to the expenditures of those moneys by the province of Ontario. If that's the case, that may be somewhat unfair. I am unclear on that and I seek the minister's guidance. Above and beyond that, we are supportive of the bill.

Mr. Foulds: I rise in enthusiastic support of the bill. In fact, I suspect that my enthusiasm for the bill is far greater in ideological terms—

Mr. Makarchuk: At a government takeover?

Mr. Foulds:—than either the minister who is moving the bill or the critic, because we have to recognize that the bill is no more and no less than a nationalization bill, even though it is one small area of nationalization.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Inco's next. If we get this one through, we are going to try Inco.

Mr. Foulds: Is that a commitment?

Mr. Laughren: They're privileged.

Mr. Foulds: I would have liked to have seen us include Bell Canada within the geographic boundaries of Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: We are moving that amendment.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let Hansard note that the minister had a smile on his face.

Mr. Foulds: Even if that were not necessary—and I am speaking rapidly so we can get the bill passed—I certainly would have liked to have had the Capital Telephone Company Limited, which has the telephone system in Maberly, directly north of Kingston, and is a wholly owned subsidiary of Bell, brought under public ownership. This small telephone company, operating in Ontario, has assets that include two executive aircraft, as well as five fishing trawlers that it leases to the Newfoundland and Labrador Development Corporation; it is obviously a very profitable operation. Once in a while, I would like to see the Tory provincial government, and the Liberal federal government, nationalize a profitable corporation for the benefit of the people of Ontario, as well as the losing ones.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Then it would no longer be profitable.

Mr. Foulds: Ironically, the government has found circumstances where this process, nationalization, is not so repugnant to them as it likes to indicate in its dogmatic rigidity when it attacks the New Democratic Party.

There are four clear statements in the minister's statement of June 2, which I won't repeat because of lack of time, that indicates those reasons. One of them is very clear: Where the public good is greater than their commitment to private enterprise, because private enterprise, unfortunately in this case—

Mr. Laughren: There goes Inco.

Mr. Foulds: —is inefficient and unworkable, they will move. I commend them for that, because there are circumstances, no matter the good intentions of the private individual owning the company, where no service has been adequate.

We in this caucus have talked to some of the people in the region. I have talked to the member who ably represents the riding.

Mr. Laughren: Name one.

Mr. Foulds: The Minister of Revenue represents Parry Sound. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, my good colleague from Nickel Belt is one of the fans of the Minister of Revenue.

In a sense it is a pity that the private individual couldn't have made a go of it.

Mr. Bradley: He could make a go of it for what he has paid for his licence plates.

Mr. Foulds: What worries me, frankly, is that we are going to take it over, through the Ontario Telephone Development Corporation, which has extensive powers that we should use more frequently, and then sell it back to private enterprise once we have upgraded the system and made it profitable. I would hope, even when the Conservative government does that with the collusion of the Liberal Party, that they do that not to Bell Canada but to another independent or consortium of independents—

Mr. Bradley: It must be nice to be perfect over there.

Mr. Makarchuk: We are not apologizing for being perfect.

Mr. Foulds: —because a number of the private companies, such as the City of Thunder Bay Telephone Department, make a very good job of their operations.

But there are arguments when safety, health, emergency and fire calls are necessary, and they are necessary in this area, are not getting through in this system. It's not just public convenience, it is public safety and health that are at stake in this case, and we enthusiastically support the government in this action.

It is a pity that section 2(2), with its extensive powers, is necessary in the act. I wouldn't have thought that section was necessary. It would never have struck the socialist hordes to include such a section in the bill, even when taking over Inco. But obviously it is necessary, and we thank you for giving us the model for when we come to power.

Mr. Laughren: It's a bit too confiscatory for us, but we will live with it.

Mr. Foulds: We would like to see, as I said, the Ontario Development Corporation used more, not just as a holding company but, as it was originally intended back in 1955 and 1960, as a development corporation for the development of good telephone service throughout the province where that is not now happening.

On motion by Mr. Sweeney, the debate was adjourned.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege and information for the members of the Legislature. Yesterday in question period I answered a question from the leader of the third party in which I indicated that equalization factors were not frozen in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Breough: And of course they are.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I wish to correct that statement. They are frozen in the province of Ontario—

Mr. Breough: Absolutely.

Mr. Wildman: A small mistake.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —under section 96(2) of the Assessment Act.

DEATH OF SCHOOLBOYS

Mr. Havrot: Mr. Speaker, might I ask leave of the House to rise on a point of privilege. I would ask all members to join with me in expressing our sorrow and condolences to the families of the 12 youths who drowned so tragically while canoeing last weekend at Lake Timiskaming on a school outing. The religious faith of these parents has probably never been so strongly tested as in the past two days.

I would ask the honourable members of this House to join me in assuring the parents of those brave boys from St. John's School at Claremont, that they and their sons are in the thoughts or prayers of people across Ontario.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yesterday, the Prime Minister of Canada tabled a white paper on constitutional reform. I also had an opportunity yesterday to discuss the federal government's proposal with the Hon. Hugh Faulkner, who had been asked by the Prime Minister to meet with me.

The paper that was tabled yesterday deals generally with an approach to constitutional reform. I was pleased to see, in this introductory paper, a recognition of a number of points which had been put forward in recent years by Ontario and other provinces—I need only refer to its emphasis on the need to improve the practices of our federation through a clarification of existing responsibilities and elimination of duplication.

Because the details of the federal proposals will only be released later this month, it is too soon to comment in specifics on the federal action. Once the detailed proposals are made known, this government will give them intense study and will take a constructive and open approach into the intergovernmental discussions which will follow. I expect that this province, and myself, will take an active part at both the premiers' conference in August and the proposed federal-provincial meeting in September when constitutional matters are dealt with. This is in keeping with Ontario's past approach to constitutional discussions when the provinces always work towards agreements that would meet the needs of Canadians in all parts of the country.

I do believe that action to implement proposals to change some of the basic elements of our federal system must only follow intensive public discussions and a high degree of consensus. The constitution requires broad acceptance if it is to have the legitimacy to make it effective.

DIAGNOSTIC SCANNERS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable members are aware, our health care system is a system in transition. One of the key elements undergoing rapid change is new diagnostic technology, especially computerized axial tomography units, or CAT scanners, as they are called.

These units use a narrow beam of x-rays, radiation detectors, computer science and video display to provide a cross-sectional view of a selected portion of a patient's body. A CAT scanner provides information clearly, quickly and without the discomfort associated with some other methods of diagnosis.

As well as being an extremely efficient diagnostic tool, CAT scanners are very costly. A single head-scan unit costs up to $400,000, while a whole-body scanner costs as much as $800,000. Annual operating costs can reach as high as $250,000.

In times of cost constraint it is imperative to control the proliferation of high-cost technology. I am therefore announcing a new policy covering the placement and funding of CAT scan units in Ontario.

The CAT scanner was invented only six years ago in Great Britain. The first unit in Ontario was installed at Toronto General Hospital the following year, 1973. It soon became obvious that, to ensure their equitable distribution throughout Ontario, the Ministry of Health would have to formulate a policy to regulate the placement and funding of CAT scanners. Therefore, in 1975, a ministry task force was asked to consider the problems posed by this new technology. The task force brought together experts from the Ministry of Health, the Ontario Medical Association, the Ontario Council of Administrators of Teaching Hospitals and the University Teaching Hospitals Association.

Early in 1976, the group published its report recommending the initial placement of CAT scanners in each of the five health science centres, with an eventual goal of one unit for each 500,000 population. The capital cost of each unit, the report said, should be the responsibility of the hospitals acquiring it. The report also recommended a review of the situation within the following year.

In October of last year I announced the approval of five additional CAT scanning units. Previously, scanners had been approved for Hamilton Civic Hospital, London Victoria Hospital, London University Hospital and the Ottawa General, as well as the unit at Toronto General that I have already mentioned.

The October approvals were for units in Kingston General Hospital and in Princess Margaret and St. Michael's Hospitals in Toronto, as well as one in Thunder Bay which is now assigned to the McKellar General, plus a second unit for Hamilton, the hospital location to be determined by the district health council.

Since then, a ministry review of the CAT scanner issue, as recommended by the 1976 task force, has been carried out. It is from these recommendations that the following policy has been developed, supported by changes in regulations to the Public Hospitals Act and to the Health Insurance Act.

Briefly, the effect of regulation changes will be to assist my ministry in controlling the proliferation and unauthorized usage of CAT scanners. I will summarize the key changes as follows:

One, since CAT scanners are a regional resource, we are creating a new category of hospital—group M hospitals, those that may charge and accept payment from other hospitals for the performance of CAT scans.

Two, another regulation change will prevent unauthorized hospitals and private clinics from receiving ministry funding for CAT scanners by prohibiting all hospitals from charging patients for CAT scans and permitting only group M institutions to charge other hospitals for scans performed for patients of those other hospitals.

Three, additional regulations permit OHIP payments to physicians for professional interpretation of CAT scans only when such scans are carried out at a public hospital.

Furthermore, new regulations list specific hospitals approved to operate CAT scanners and to have the operating costs, including depreciation, funded by the ministry. These are Hamilton Civic, London Victoria, Ottawa General and Toronto General Hospitals, approved for head scanners; and Kingston General, McKellar General in Thunder Bay, Princess Margaret and St. Michael's Hospitals in Toronto, approved for whole-body scanners.

Other group M hospitals have also had scanners approved, but because of financial constraints operating costs for them will only be paid at a later date as funds become available. They will, however, be permitted to charge other hospitals for scans done for their patients. These approved but presently unfunded hospitals are Toronto Sunnybrook, a hospital in Hamilton, one in Windsor and one in Sudbury for head scanners; and London's University Hospital, Ottawa Civic, Toronto General, Toronto Western and the Hospital for Sick Children for whole-body scanners.

Because of ministry cost constraints, all hospitals will have to provide initial capital costs for a CAT scanner from their own resources. However, those approved for funding will receive, in addition to operating costs, a depreciation allowance permitting recovery of capital costs over a five-year period.

The professional fee will be paid for each scan permitted under OHIP and carried out in a public hospital. However, those institutions outside of the group M category will not be able to charge other hospitals for CAT scans. Their annual budget will not be adjusted to reflect CAT scan operating costs, nor will they be able to charge a patient for a CAT scan. Any CAT scan performed by a private hospital or private outpatient clinic will not be considered an OHIP-insured service. Such facilities would not receive any funding from the ministry for CAT scan work.

To summarize, among the hospitals I have mentioned are seven newly approved for CAT scanners, to be paid for with their own capital and operating funds. These will be located in Ottawa Civic, in Toronto Sunnybrook, Toronto Western and the Hospital for Sick Children. A whole-body scanner to complement its existing head scanner is approved for Toronto General. As I've said, my ministry will also approve CAT scanners for Sudbury and the Windsor area. I'm asking the district health councils to advise us as to which hospitals in these areas should receive scan units.

The existing and newly approved CAT scanner installations represent, I believe, an equitable and cost-conscious distribution of this technology in Ontario. The choices have been based on demonstrated regional need, using three criteria.

They are a population density of one unit per 500,000 population—it is worth noting that the listing just outlined totals 17 units, representing approximately one per 500,000 population as recommended by the task force report; second, sufficient patient load and the existence of the appropriate professional staff of neurosurgeons, neurologists and neuro-radiologists; and third, geographical factors such as access to the unit by other hospitals and sharing of the unit on an equitable basis to provide access for all patients regardless of hospital affiliations.

While I have listed the hospitals designed to provide this valuable service, it should be emphasized that the service will be of a regional nature. All other hospitals in an area must have access to the program for those patients who would benefit. The hospitals selected must develop mutually agreeable policies to make CAT scan services readily available to all citizens.

As a guide to the future, all approved hospitals have agreed to a formal, ongoing evaluation of the use of the scanner by my ministry. This evaluation project will permit us to assess the degree to which the currently approved scanners have been used, as well as the financial and clinical efficiency of their operations. I expect it will take some 18 to 24 months before we get a clear indication of the patterns of CAT scanner usage. Only after this evaluation is completed can we consider additional CAT scanners for hospitals in such areas as northeast and northwest Metropolitan Toronto.

In recent months, I have frequently described our health system as being a system in transition. I have discussed the need to manage the changes taking place in the system. I believe the phenomenon of the CAT scanner is an excellent example of our response to the need to manage change while maintaining Ontario's health care system as one of the finest in the world.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Yesterday, the leader of the New Democratic Party asked questions of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Baetz) with respect to a letter which had been sent to me last Friday by Dr. Arthur Porter, chairman of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning. Since the royal commission reports to me, I would like to advise the House that I have asked Dr. Porter to clarify precisely what information has come to his attention and precisely why he is concerned. I and my staff will be discussing this matter with him in detail over the next few days.

I am pleased that Dr. Porter has made himself available to the media this morning to explain the contents of his letter to me. In so doing, he indicated that the Atomic Energy Control Board is reviewing current reactor safety principles and criteria with the objective of clarifying the existing situation. The commission, therefore, intends to inquire further into the conclusions of this review in order to supplement information already made available to it by the board. He added that safety standards in Ontario's nuclear plants are second to none in the world.

In the meantime, I would like to remind members that the full responsibility for determining the safety standards of nuclear reactors rests with the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada. When I obtain more information, I will be pleased to report back to the House.

COMMUNITY SERVICE ORDER PROJECTS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 8, I signed a contract for the funding of a community service order project to be administered by the Elizabeth Fry Society, Peel-Halton branch. This signing was significant for a number of reasons, which I would like to share with members of this Assembly.

This contract, plus the two with native organizations in London and Kenora which I announced on May 30, brings the number of community service order projects for funding by my ministry to nine.

By way of a progress report, I am pleased to report that as of April 30, 1978, a total of 451 community service orders had been issued by the judiciary, of which 213 were in six project areas and 238 in the remainder of the province.

Community support for the concept of community services has been excellent. We are indebted to the judiciary for their innovative use of community service orders and to the agencies who have worked to ensure the projects succeed. To these agencies, through our probation staff, has fallen the responsibility of searching out appropriate service activities and work to be assigned to offenders. Amongst these placements, social service tasks predominate. But physical work placements have also been used. Several offenders have been offered jobs who have continued on as volunteers as a result of their community work.

The number of hours to be worked on community service orders has ranged from between eight and 600, with the greatest number of orders falling in the 50- to 150-hour range. Most offenders carried out their assignments in the evenings or on weekends. Community service placements have included reading books on tape for the blind, helping the disabled to learn horseback riding, assisting on wards and recreational programs at psychiatric hospitals, cooking at weekends at a hostel and working as a receptionist in a senior citizens' home.

On the basis of present information, it is estimated that approximately 1,500 persons will be placed on community service orders in the next year and similar numbers and perhaps many more will receive this type of disposition in future years. Not all of these persons would otherwise have received prison terms. However, it seems reasonable to assume that approximately half of them would normally have been sentenced to two months or less. In other words, the community service orders as an alternative to incarceration will save the taxpayers the many millions of dollars that would have been required to build, staff and operate at least one new correctional facility. Incidentally, community service orders are already helping to relieve overcrowding in institutions.

Mr. Sargent: You should take some of those millions of dollars and build a decent jail in Owen Sound.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Perhaps more important than the saving is the impetus which has been given to the movement away from the institutionalization of petty offenders. As a result of various initiatives by my colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), in co-operation with the judiciary, steps have been taken to increase the use of alternatives to incarceration. In my view the use of community service orders is one of the most important of these options and I am anxious to see their use greatly expanded.

A community service order provides a sentencing mechanism for distinguishing between lawbreaker and criminal. It provides a much-needed and appreciated help to the community as well as repaying the community for the expenses incurred as a result of wrongdoing by the offender. Community service also teaches the lawbreaker to accept responsibility for his deeds.

From my perspective as Minister of Correctional Services, it is highly desirable that wherever possible nonviolent offenders should be permitted to remain in the community rather than be sent to costly correctional institutions. There will always be a percentage of the offender population who must in the interests of public safety be housed in secure correctional facilities. These persons would include those on remand awaiting trial, sentence or transfer to institutions, as well as the relatively small number of persons convicted of violent offences who must receive treatment and training in a secure setting. However, society would be better served if many petty offenders were diverted to community service rather than being sentenced to institutions.

Our goal should be to return prisons to performing the main function for which they were established: the protection of society from the violent and dangerous. A community service order is not a panacea but is one of a number of alternatives which can help us to achieve this goal and, although we have a long way to go in reducing the large number of male offenders being sent to correctional facilities, there is every reason to be optimistic about the possibility of dramatically changing the situation as it relates to female offenders.

In this context, the contract with the Elizabeth Fry Society to operate a community service project takes on increased significance. As members know, the Elizabeth Fry Society has an outstanding record of achievement for its work with female offenders who are returning to the community after a period of incarceration in prison. The project involving the Peel-Halton branch not only marks the entry of the society into providing services to male offenders, because both men and women qualify for such orders, but it also moves the society into working with offenders who have not been sentenced to institutions.

It is my confident hope that through the sentencing alternatives such as community service orders, and with the assistance and help of experienced organizations such as the Elizabeth Fry Society, we can move towards the goal of de-institutionalizing all but the most violent female offenders within the next two years.

Mr. Peterson: The only decent minister you've got, Bill. You should promote him.

Mr. McClellan: One decent minister over there.

Mr. Warner: The rest of you should resign.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Only when you do, David.

VEHICLE PURCHASING POLICY

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to inform the House that the government of Ontario has revised its purchasing policy on motor vehicles, a policy my ministry will be implementing this year.

Mr. S. Smith: What about smaller cars?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Cabinet has decided that beginning with the purchase of 1979 model vehicles this fall, all government passenger cars and light commercial vehicles will be purchased directly through local dealers by open tenders on a district basis. As I am sure the honourable members are aware, the government's present practice is to purchase vehicles from the manufacturer and have them delivered through dealers designated by the manufacturer.

Mr. Laughren: About time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: This new policy will bring our vehicle purchasing practices more in line with the government's overall policy of assisting small local businessmen whenever possible.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I might add that MTC will continue to be responsible for all specifications and the purchasing of all government motor vehicles.

Ms. Bryden: What about the gas?

Mr. Peterson: What are you backing off of today, Darcy?

NORTHUMBERLAND RESTRUCTURING

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On May 11 I introduced Bill 79, An Act to Restructure the County of Northumberland. That legislation came about because of a request from the Northumberland county council.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order: I have received the statement now, Mr. Speaker, but I wonder whether the Treasurer could follow the practice now adopted by other members of the cabinet and ensure that statements are delivered in advance of and not after his statements to the House.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The rule says, "at the time of."

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I had read all of two lines.

Mr. Laughren: What a difference minority government makes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: After two earlier votes favouring restructuring, the county council in Northumberland on June 12 voted against restructuring.

I have on several occasions indicated that we would abide by the wish of the county council on this matter and that the government of Ontario was not going to impose restructuring on the county. Bill 79 was based on local initiative from the county and depended upon the continued support of county council. Consequently, the government of Ontario will not be proceeding with the legislation.

Because developments in the Northumberland area will continue to put stress upon the fabric of local government in the county, the government of Ontario will be prepared to consider future municipal reform initiatives from the area. However, I want to stress that the initiative for reform must come from the municipalities themselves.

Mr. Peterson: You have been running backward so much lately that your heels are backward.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of Energy: It pertains to the question asked by the leader of the third party yesterday, and also Dr. Porter's statement on the radio this morning.

What is the information that the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada came in possession of that triggered this particular reassessment of the safety factors regarding the nuclear reactors in Ontario? Can the minister give us that information; and if he can't, can he tell us basically what its nature is? Is it in any way related to the exchange of correspondence for which we put in a request in December 1976, the so-called background notes to do with the Bruce and Pickering safety report?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As my colleague has already indicated, he is in the process of really finding out from Dr. Porter just exactly what he did mean by his statement. Until we have that kind of information, I suppose, we have to go on a great deal of conjecture. I frankly don't know.

Mr. McClellan: This is absurd.

Mr. Roy: You are only the Minister of Energy, you are not expected to know.

Mr. Warner: You only know what the chairman of Hydro told you?

Mr. Bolan: You won't last too long there.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I do know that on February 22, the Atomic Energy Control Board—which as has been indicated is responsible for setting these standards of safety and for daily supervision of them; it's not the responsibility of Ontario Hydro, these are standards set by AECB. As I say we have been informed in the last few days that AECB did present a very detailed submission to the Porter commission on reactor criteria studies on February 22 and 23. This appears as exhibit 318 and is now a public document; we do know that. I would find it difficult to answer in detail the questions of the Leader of the Opposition until we have a more precise statement from Dr. Porter as to what triggered him to delay the submission of the report to the Legislature. We're trying to find out what it was.

Mr. Deans: What do you mean by you are trying to find out?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have established that the Atomic Energy Control Board did make a submission and did present evidence. As my colleague has indicated, we have heard this morning from Dr. Porter himself, confirming something we knew all along, that Pickering and Bruce are the safest reactors in the world.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you make a phone call and find out?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: To get back to the question, I don't really know what triggered him. Certainly there was no deliberate attempt on the part of Hydro or anybody else to withhold information.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, I didn't ask what triggered Dr. Porter's objection, as we know what triggered his objection. He says clearly he's concerned that the Atomic Energy Control Board did not disclose to us the fact that it was carrying out a reassessment of the safety. That's what he's upset about.

Could the minister tell us whether such a reassessment is under way; and if so, what triggered that reassessment? If he doesn't know that, does he mean to say he has not bothered to ask Hydro this in the last couple of days, given that Hydro is a party to the reassessment?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I indicated, we have established the fact, which was not at all apparent in Dr. Porter's statement of yesterday, that the Atomic Energy Control Board did, on February 22, submit a brief to the Porter commission, dealing with the very subject he is now raising questions about. Until we hear from Dr. Porter in more detail, we really don't know what more information he wants.

Mr. Deans: The minister is getting progressively worse.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Hydro also appeared on the panel in March and was prepared to speak to this presentation of AECB of February 22, but no questions were raised. Therefore, we are at a loss to know what more information Dr. Porter really needs or what he wants.

Mr. S. Smith: Did the minister ask Hydro if there is going to be a reassessment?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There is an ongoing assessment. That was fully documented in the brief submitted by AECB on February 22 to Dr. Porter's commission. For that reason, we are at a loss to know what more the gentleman wants at this time.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister say what discussions have been taking place between Ontario Hydro and AECB over nuclear reactor safety criteria; whether there have been new discussions initiated as a result of the February 22 document or for some other reason within the last three or four months; and what has been the result of those particular discussions, particularly as regards the safety of existing power stations and as regards the possibility of dual failure accidents, about which the AECB has obviously got to be concerned?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In conversations with the chairman of the board of Ontario Hydro in the last 24 hours, I have had reconfirmed and reiterated the fact that the whole question of safety of the reactors is not a one-time thing. It's not a sporadic thing, it's an ongoing thing.

The supervisors of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada are daily supervising the generating plants to make absolutely certain the standards established and approved by AECB are maintained. It's an ongoing thing—

[2:30]

Ms. Gigantes: That's right, it's an ongoing problem.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —and even the assessment of the criteria is an ongoing thing; it isn't a one-time shot at all.

Mr. Foulds: Are those standards adequate?

Mr. S. Smith: Could I, by way of supplementary, be sure I understand the minister correctly, because this is an important point.

Is the minister saying that, as far as he knows or has been able to find out from Hydro, the only assessment going on is a kind of continuing assessment to which reference was made on February 22 and an exhibit of which was filed with the Porter commission; therefore the minister himself is at some loss to know why Dr. Porter is so surprised, since this is an ongoing assessment that has already been referred to? Is that basically what the minister has heard from Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is not basically what I have heard from Hydro, that's basically what I heard from the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada. At a news conference in Ottawa this morning at 11:30, AECB said essentially the same thing. They frankly don't know why Dr. Porter suddenly feels he needs more information, because he has been getting all the information. He got it February 22. AECB is there to give him the details. Any more details he wants he can have.

Mr. Sargent: So he is a bad guy now.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: So we really don't know; probably it will be clarified when he responds to the letter of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle).

Mr. Cassidy: Is the government now prepared to table the Bruce safety reactor notes which were requested by my predecessor in this House back in December of 1976, which clearly have a vital bearing on the questions of safety; not just to the Bruce plant but also at all comparable nuclear installations in the province, and which the government refused to table at that particular time?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am assuming that if it has to do with safety we would be ready to table any piece of information that will confirm to this House, and the public at large, what we already know: that Pickering and Bruce are, by world standards, the safest reactors in the world.

OHIP BENEFITS SCHEDULE

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of Health: Can the minister tell the House whether there has been a policy adopted whereby OHIP will no longer pay for certain experimental and as yet unproven forms of treatment? Has there been a change made in the OHIP schedule of benefits, which is now different from the OMA schedule, which has removed from OHIP payments for certain experimental forms of treatment? Is this a policy?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In the OHIP schedule of benefits which has recently been published—and the interim schedule was negotiated with OMA—there have been several changes in terms of adding, for instance the intermediate assessment, and taking a few things out. I don't have the list with me. If the member would like an indication of the changes, I will be glad to get that for him. I don't recall any particular one off hand.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, what I really want from the minister is some indication as to whether there has been a policy of removing experimental and as yet unproven methods from the OHIP benefits schedule? If so, could he list what benefits and what treatments have been removed from the previous existing schedule?

While he is looking at that, could the minister explain to the House why an ultra-violet treatment, photobiology sometimes known as PUVA treatment, has been removed from the OHIP schedule, since I know of at least one instance where the treatment was of very considerable benefit in a most serious case?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Any additions or deletions to the schedule are always based on the medical efficacy of the individual item and negotiations with medical associations. For instance, the member may recall that in 1977 we added reconstructive surgery for radical mastectomies. That was based on discussions with the college and with the medical association to determine that it was, in fact, something that should be an insured benefit. All parties having agreed to that, it was added. The same would be true of any other things being removed.

In our negotiations with the medical association, if we were agreed that something should not be a benefit because it is not proven or it's not effective, the appropriate steps are taken there. So I will get the member the list. I believe Mr. Armstrong from the Liberal research office phoned OHIP this morning and was speaking with the staff there about this anyway, and that is already in the works.

CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Premier arising out of his statement on the federal government proposals on constitutional change.

Can the Premier say, in the light of his statement, that he believes that constitution requires broad acceptance if it is to have a legitimacy to make it effective, whether that means Ontario is accepting or not accepting the 1980 deadline which the federal Prime Minister appears to be seeking to impose on the provinces and the country at large?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the Prime Minister and to everybody, I think it is too early to make that sort of judgement. Quite frankly, I can understand the Prime Minister's desire to establish certain tentative timetables. Whether they will be met, whether they should be met, I think is something that discussions over the next few months will determine. Certainly I am not accepting a particular timetable. I think the consensus that is necessary may require a longer period of time, or it may not; I can't make that sort of judgement.

But I do say to the honourable member that we intend to approach these discussions in a constructive way. It really is early to comment until we see some of the legislation because, while the white paper sort of sets a tone for what may emerge, I think it is the specifics that really should be discussed. However, I am not accepting nor rejecting the timetable that has been suggested.

I would just say to the honourable member, and this may sound strange coming from me, that I can understand why he would suggest a timetable, because in fairness we have been discussing this, to my knowledge, since at least 1971—some will argue since 1968—and I am one of those who believes that there should be some progress made.

Mr. Sargent: Something like your tax reform, Bill?

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Premier say whether, when the Honourable Hugh Faulkner was here yesterday, there have been assurances from the federal government that this province and other provinces will be consulted in advance of the legislation which the federal government apparently intends to present to Parliament by the end of June? Can he say whether there has been an assurance of that kind of consultation?

As a second part of the question, does the Premier consider that the proposals that the federal government is now recycling from the early 1970s are appropriate, particularly in view of the fact that they do not appear to make reference to the need to co-ordinate economic action on behalf of all Canadians within the constitution?

Mr. Peterson: Who is writing your speeches for God's sake? Ed Broadbent?

Hon. Mr. Davis: As I am sure the honourable member would agree if he thought about it carefully—

Mr. Makarchuk: It's better than Eugene Whelan.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was unfair to say about the Minister of Agriculture for Canada.

Mr. Roy: He is not arguing with you, Bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Great Canadian.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In fairness, I think one can understand the principle of the bill being introduced and given first reading before being discussed in public. While both Mr. Faulkner and Mr. Thorson, who was also here, shared some aspects in general terms, I think it is reasonable to assume that the bill should be introduced.

I have every assurance, I am totally confident, that once the bill is introduced, the government of Canada will not proceed with that bill until such time as there has been a rather comprehensive discussion with the provinces and, I would hope, with the public at large. So while the bill will be introduced some time before the end of the month—and I will not be privy to the contents of the bill; I will not have seen it, nor would I assume other Premiers would have seen it—I cannot quarrel with the principle of introducing it, because I am totally satisfied there will be no intention of proceeding with any bill until these discussions take place.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I recognize the fact that it is difficult to give commitments when we are lacking specifics, as we are in this white paper, but the white paper states on page 24: "Provisions could be made for provincial governments to join in supporting aims and the charter at once or when they saw fit." In view of the importance of the proposals, in view of the work the Premier has done in that field—he has had a blue document out, which I have had occasion to read—and in view of the very important principles, will the Premier undertake that we shall have an opportunity in this House to have a full debate so that all members of the Legislature can participate and give the government our views and have a very positive approach to these proposals?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Taking even the Prime Minister's suggested timing as to how he would like to see this proceed, it's quite obvious there will be ample time for both debates and discussions prior to any consideration, in my view, of the government of Canada moving ahead with second reading of the bill. There are two phases, as I'm sure the honourable member senses. There will be those areas where the government of Canada may decide to move on its own initiative. Technically, theoretically, legally they can move without the support or consent of the provinces. In my view it would be highly desirable if there could be as much agreement from the provinces on phase one as could be developed prior to that happening, but I think the Prime Minister does have the option of moving without it.

In terms of what approach we take provincially, as to whether or not we accept, in terms of provincial reaction, some aspects of the charter, the statement of rights or principles—whatever way it is phrased—not only will there be ample opportunity for discussion, but I would doubt that this would be done without, probably, ultimately a specific resolution to the House. At the time of the Victoria charter, we contemplated that if it had proceeded not only would it have required, but I was anxious to have, some resolution of the House dealing with our participation in it. I would certainly think there will be ample opportunity.

The discussions in August among the Premiers will, hopefully, be of a constructive nature once again and will give us some positions to put to the first minister and his colleagues in the September conference, assuming that there will be one. I would think that after that there will still be a rather prolonged discussion publicly and between governments, and there will be ample opportunity here for us to discuss not only the issues raised by the honourable member but what will then have emerged, many other issues on which he will want to express a point of view—a lot of us will. There will be no problem doing that in the fall session.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: Would the Premier make available forthwith, as he promised a few days ago, the statements that were released from the Kingston conference of Joe Clark and provincial Conservative Premiers, and also the document provided by Mr. Clark on behalf of provincial Conservative Premiers to, I believe, Claude Ryan as well as Premier Levesque, so that we might be able to ascertain what relevance those documents have to the forthcoming federal legislation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I apologize to the honourable member. I brought that historic Kingston communique with me—I don't know if it was yesterday or Friday—

Mr. T. P. Reid: The Brampton charter?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Bramalea. Bramalea.

Mr. Breithaupt: You could have a two for one sale.

Mr. MacDonald: What about the other one presented by Joe Clark to Premier Levesque on behalf of the provincial PC Premiers?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have found no formal documentation. I doubt very much whether Mr. Clark had anything other than the material which has either been released by the party federally—

Mr. MacDonald: He said he had.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —or the Kingston communique. I certainly have the Kingston communique. As I said, I had it here either Friday or yesterday, and I'll be delighted to send it to the honourable member.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no, no; Joe Clark said he had further information.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a feeling that will go the way of the dodo bird. I'd like to ask the Premier if, in his wisdom and knowledge of these affairs, he thinks that the constitution of Canada, such as it is, can be changed unilaterally by the federal government without specifics in the first phase of the fiscal responsibilities between the federal and provincial governments being outlined specifically and acutely?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm treading a very difficult area here. I think that question might more properly be directed to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), who is an expert in terms of constitutional law.

Mr. Roy: Not quite; the Supreme Court of Canada didn't think so.

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, being a non-expert in the field of constitutional law, I will venture an opinion. That opinion is that probably there could be some constitutional changes, as they relate to federal institutions, without the consent of the provinces or their involvement. I think this would be highly regrettable. I don't think that's the way the Prime Minister would wish to move on it. Certainly, I think it would be an unwise course to follow, but technically or legally I think the Parliament of Canada can make certain constitutional changes on its own initiative. So my answer to that question would be—and I'm open to correction by constitutional experts—I think that is a possibility.

Mr. T. P. Reid: So is the Attorney General.

Mr. Roy: I think the Premier is on the right track; accept our opinion.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I want to return to the Minister of Energy to talk about the safety-danger possibilities in nuclear reactors which have been raised by the chairman of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning.

Has the Minister of Energy been in direct contact with Dr. Porter over the serious concerns which he raised in his letter to the government of yesterday? Has the Minister of Energy consulted the Bruce reactor safety notes which raised specific questions related to a dual failure accident? Can he report on those two questions?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have not been in touch with Dr. Porter since yesterday because, as I indicated earlier, we are still awaiting clarification from him as to his precise point of concern about why he is delaying the presentation of the report.

I am having discussions with Hydro on the safety features but, as I also indicated earlier, the standards of safety which are applied to all generating stations in Ontario are set and supervised by the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada. Hydro really doesn't set those standards. There is a daily supervision going on by AECB supervisory personnel. Certainly if there are questions of safety, I am convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt that this daily kind of supervision will deal with these questions.

More than that, it's really very difficult to know what to say at this particular point in time anyway.

Ms. Gigantes: For the minister it is.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that Ontario Hydro operates the nuclear power reactors and will clearly be responsible, as will the government with the AECB, should there be any kind of a failure that affects safety, is the minister satisfied with the standards that have been laid down by the AECB; and in particular is he concerned about the fact that the safety shutdown system under Ontario's present nuclear plant designs are in fact dependent on each other and are not, apparently, independent? Is this the matter of particular concern to the government; and if so what is it doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As I'm sure the leader of the third party recognizes, the safety devices for the generators are a highly technical, highly complex matter. I really think it would be inappropriate for us to second guess, even, those who we think are the best scientists and safety experts in Canada who daily look into this question. If we have been told, as we have been consistently by the Atomic Energy Control Board, that the standards of safety are adequate, even though they are constantly under review—because, after all, the reactors have only been active for a short number of years so one can assume this has to be reviewed considerably—I would think that we here, who are not scientists, simply cannot second guess, as it were, the best brains, the best experts in the country.

Ms. Gigantes: Why doesn't the minister answer the question?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I don't know how much further the member expects us to go at this particular point.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister is he is aware that the concerns about the independence of the shutdown systems in the Candu reactor has been raised by the AECB in correspondence with Hydro since well into 1976? Is he not aware also that the AECB is likely to be bringing in new and more stringent regulations in this area? Doesn't he think he should know about this?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I certainly do know about it. I am keeping myself fully informed on that subject—

Mr. Warner: Why don't you? You don't.

Ms. Gigantes: You are sloppy.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —but I am not trying to second guess the experts at AECB.

Mr. Warner: Guessing, that's all you do.

Mr. Cassidy: Has the minister had the experts at AECB and at Hydro explain to him on behalf of the government the risks that may be entailed in the present kind of reactor design where the two safety shutdown systems are not independent? Has he had them explain it in terms which are understandable to him at the political level; and is he therefore satisfied or not satisfied with the safety features? If he does not know, how can he continue to be the minister responsible at the political level for ensuring that Ontario Hydro is doing an adequate job?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It is not Ontario Hydro, it is the Atomic Energy Control Board that sets the standards and enforces the standards. Let's just keep that one in mind.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh come on; Hydro sets them.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: To the specific question—have I ever had Hydro or the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada try to explain to me in layman's terms what the safety features are—the answer is yes. Furthermore, in light of the questions in the House today, I am going to be asking AECB to set out the safety features in layman's language that all of us in this House can understand. I will be glad to table them in this House; and then I think members will begin to realize that there are about eight or nine safety barriers.

Ms. Gigantes: Table the safety notes.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think it would be very helpful if we in this House could have this kind of presentation, and I will be happy to ask AECB and Ontario Hydro jointly to give us this information.

Mr. Foulds: Will you table the Bruce safety notes?

SUNNYBROOK HOSPITAL

Mr. G. Taylor: The question is to the Minister of Health. I have received numerous letters and correspondence and telephone calls on the reports of the meals, particularly breakfast, being served to the patients, some of whom are veterans, at the Sunnybrook Hospital. Could the minister comment on that please, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Martel: That was three weeks ago.

Mr. Cassidy: The member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) raised that already.

Mr. Samis: Check Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can confirm that following my request for a review of the matter the board of Sunnybrook Hospital has decided not to carry out that action.

FINANCIAL PROTECTION FOR FARMERS

Mr. Riddell: A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: Having met with the Ontario Cattlemen's Association last week and discussing with them their concerns, does the minister intend to amend the Farm Products Payment Act to encompass the four basic concepts as outlined by them? The concepts are: the licensing of livestock dealers and dealer agencies, creation of an insurance fund, prompt payment provisions and the keeping of records.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question. Yes, I did meet with the Ontario Cattlemen's Association last week and they did point out to me that the legislation we passed last year upon their request met all the requirements but one which they asked for. They thought they could operate under that bill and work out for us the necessary financial protection. It would involve the payment, I believe, of $25,000 seed money from the province.

We now find out it will not work out quite as well as they had hoped. They have been working on it for almost a year to sort it out and I am quite prepared to look at amendments to the act to make it easy for them to sort it out. Of course we won't get it in this session.

Mr. Riddell: A supplementary: Being it is allegedly reported that another packing company is encountering financial difficulties, what protection does the beef producer have under the existing act? In other words, have any of the regulations been put into effect as the bill was amended—I believe it was last year?

Hon. W. Newman: When the bill was passed it was set up on the basis that each commodity board or group would set up its own fund for financial protection. We would put in some seed money when they worked out the details. At this time the Ontario Cattlemen's Association has not worked out a program. That is why they are asking for a change in legislation.

Regarding the other part of the question about a packing plant that has a problem: we have checked into stories of that, it may be true. We have been unable to find anybody, except one person who was a little bit tardy in paying here about two weeks ago. I understand they had invested their money elsewhere but their financial status is good, if that's the one the member is talking about. I am not sure that's the one he is talking about but I know of no others.

LIQUOR STRIKE

Mr. Cooke: I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I would like to ask the minister if he's aware of the action taken in British Columbia to remove Hiram Walker products from liquor control stores in that province in an effort to take a more neutral role in the current strike that has been going on since the beginning of March? I am wondering if the minister will take the same action in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: That is not neutral. That is taking sides.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, we will remain neutral.

Mr. MacDonald: Neutral against whom? That is like the Irish.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: How can the minister say that the government is acting in a neutral role when it is currently providing a market for and selling Hiram Walker products in its stores? How can they possibly say that is a neutral role?

Mr. Nixon: The NDP should boycott all those products.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So long as Hiram Walker supplies products to the board, obviously, in order to remain neutral we will sell those products. Obviously, if they are unable to provide them to the stores, then to remain equally neutral there is nothing else we can do. We won't be selling products if they are not supplied to us. What else might we do?

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Seeing that it's very clear that the minister does not agree with the decision of the British Columbia Labour Relations Board—

Mr. T. P. Reid: A rose by any other name.

Mr. Bounsall:—however, in any event, because he may be trying to make a mechanistic argument rather than a rational one, would the minister consult with his colleague, the Minister of Labour, regarding what changes would need to be made to the Labour Relations Act in Ontario and urge her to introduce those amendments so that the question that was placed before the British Columbia Labour Relations Board can be placed before the Ontario Labour Relations Board so that we can have the benefit of their considered judgement as they got in BC?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To quote the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague), no.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Yakabuski: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the fact that I, like many members of this Legislature, I am sure—

Mr. S. Smith: It's a set-up today.

Mr. Yakabuski:—get asked quite often by small business, especially in the last week since the retail merchants held their annual meeting at one of the Holiday Inns in this city, whom can they go to and who in the cabinet speaks for small business in this province?

Interjections.

Mr. Breagh: Can we get it down in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister deserves equal time.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I speak for small business in cabinet.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, who of the Conservative Party is speaking for small retail businesses in the resources development committee when the member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) is always supporting the supermarkets and not the small businessman?

Interjections.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege.

[3:00]

Mr. Speaker: Point of privilege, the member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is this: All during the hearings looking into the food industry, the farm products marketing boards, et cetera, in committee, I have acted in a very unbiased and fair manner, looking at all sides of the industry. I wouldn't want to be like the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) who was shot to pieces on his Mallen report.

HIGHWAY SERVICE CENTRES

Mr. Ruston: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Could the minister tell the House whether the rumours circulating in the oil industry and other areas concerning the possibility of closing the the first two service centres west of Toronto on Highway 401 are based on fact? Is the minister contemplating closing those two stations when the present contracts run out?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Ruston: Is the minister then contemplating new contracts where gasoline would be separate from the other parts of the establishment? Is he contemplating removing gasoline so that it would no longer be part of the total contract?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I will have to check to see when those particular leases do come up for renewal. I think it is a number of years away. I have not, to my knowledge, as yet seen any proposals for the renewal or for any changes in those contracts. But I would be glad to look into it.

Mr. Bounsall: When the minister is looking into those contracts, will he try to ensure that when the contracts are signed the price of gasoline is less than the 15 to 18 cents more than is charged in the surrounding areas, since those service stations constitute a ripoff of tourists coming into this province?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am sure the honourable member knows there is no price control system for gasoline in this province.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, we've noticed.

Mr. Bounsall: Put it in the contract. It's a ripoff.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As a matter of fact, the legal advice I have from my constitutional expert on my right—

Mr. Nixon: You would be better to pick the one on your left.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The one behind you.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am sure the honourable colleague on my left could give me very capable advice, too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You've never asked me.

Hon. Mr. Snow: In fact, I ask him many times for advice.

We don't have the authority, in fact I have been advised by the Attorney General's ministry that we would be in trouble with the combines investigation people if we attempted to control or set the price of gasoline at the service centres.

Mr. Bradley: Highway robbery.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As you are well aware, a year and a half ago we adjusted our leases on the service centres so that the lease payments were not payable on the extraordinary increases in gasoline prices brought about by the federal sales tax.

Mr. Mancini: In view of the fact that in 1976, I believe, the annual report of the Canadian Automobile Association not only criticized the price of gasoline but also the food service industry which is along the 401 strip, could the minister assure the House that when these contracts come up for renewal he will not only look at the price of gasoline but the quality of service in the food industry along Highway 401, which our tourists are very interested in?

Mr. Sargent: Just like you do on the Dineley contract here.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I really am at somewhat of a loss to know how to answer that question, but I will take it into consideration.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: For those of us who travel these highways and byways regularly, believe me, what the minister allows to transpire on Highway 401 in terms of gas prices, quality of food, and service is a disgrace to this province, as my colleague has said. Would the minister undertake to look into both these matters, including the leasing problem, and report back to this House?

When one finds that some 80 or 90 per cent of the tourists coming to this province do so in vehicles, this is offending the tourist industry in this province. Will the minister get together with the Minister of Industry and Tourism, try to work something out, and report to this House on the clean-up proposal?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't know that we have any service centres on the byways of the province. The service centres that we have—

Mr. McClellan: Answer the question.

Mr. Roy: The problem is you don't know the problem.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm not so sure they're a quarter as bad as the member says they are.

Mr. McClellan: Say yes and sit down.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I'm not so sure they're one quarter as bad as the honourable member says. Those people who like to condemn every private businessman in this province who is trying to make a living, I just don't go for.

Interjections.

PRESTOLITE COMPANY

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Could the minister indicate what action he's taking in response to the concerns raised by the union concerned over the future of Prestolite in Sarnia and other parts of the province especially in relation to the unfunded liability of the pension plan?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I'm sorry. I missed the last part. The unfunded liability of the pension plan?

Mr. Wildman: Of the pension plan.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I have been contacted by the mayor of Sarnia as a result of the Prestolite plant proposed shutdown or layoff. I guess it's actually shutting it down. And there has been a meeting with the UAW representative.

At the time I spoke to the mayor, I indicated we would be sending one of our officials into the area to discuss what was going on with the company. I have not looked into the question of the unfunded pension plan, but we have been trying to work with the company to resolve the problem and, hopefully, keep the plant operating, if we can.

The other part of your question is something I'm afraid I have not looked into.

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister undertake to present to this House, at some point, a bill or a policy which would make it mandatory for every firm in the province of Ontario to make public, both to the workers and to potential investors, the extent of any unfunded liability that exists in their pension funds?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I would respond to that by indicating to the Leader of the Opposition that perhaps that sort of bill may be desirable but I believe it should come from the minister responsible for pension funds, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. S. Smith: May I redirect that question? Forced disclosure of unfunded liability in all private pension funds?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I'll review the current regulations and their sufficiency and I will report to the House. Then we can chat about it further.

Mr. Mackenzie: Could the minister tell me, did I hear correctly, that he has had a meeting with the union involved in the Prestolite situation?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I was not in attendance at the meeting but members of the union met with the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) and the Premier (Mr. Davis) and discussed that among other problems. There was the UAW, and other unions—the United Electrical Workers—were represented at that meeting. Prestolite was one of those that was talked about.

Mr. Mackenzie: Within the last week?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Yes, within the last week.

I'm sorry they didn't report back to you.

HIGHWAY 101 CONTRACT

Mr. Pope: I have a question for the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Is the minister aware of the concern of the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 793, over the awarding of a contract on Highway 101 to Lamothe Construction, in view of the fact that this company does not, in the normal course of events, hire local labour for their contracts? Will the minister consider a policy change requiring in tender advertisements a requirement of the use of local labour for these contracts, and will the minister investigate whether or not a difference in sales tax between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario with respect to asphalt may be responsible for the difference in bids?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, it is not the practice of the ministry or of the government when advertising for tenders for construction projects to qualify the residency of the contractor. In this particular instance, I believe the contract called for the resurfacing of a section of highway in northeastern Ontario. The low bidder for that contract was a firm which, although it does have an office or is registered in the province of Ontario, really is a resident company of the province of Quebec.

We don't too often have companies from other provinces carrying out work for the ministry, but periodically they do. I recall we had one instance last year in northwestern Ontario where a western Canadian contractor who had qualified and met all the requirements of the ministry was the low bidder and was awarded the contract, as was this particular company.

As for the particular contract, I am certainly aware of the interest of all of us in having as many jobs as possible for Ontario workers, but this is a resurfacing contract which does not involve a large number of employees. As usual, there is a crew for the actual pavers and they usually travel with the operation as it requires men who are used to working together.

I will inquire as to the other aspects of the contract, but I am not so sure that the sales tax on the asphalt would make any difference. As I recall, the province of Quebec has a higher sales tax than we have; so I think it would be detrimental rather than beneficial. But I will look into that and get the member an answer.

DOW CHEMICAL

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Attorney General about the much-ballyhooed, $35-million suit against Dow, out of which the Premier has had about seven years of mileage—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I haven't talked about it in years.

Mr. Sargent: I have a two-part question to the Attorney General. What was the total legal cost for seven years of litigation? In view of the fact that the Attorney General says Mr. Robinette's bill was $15,000, at the going rate of $1,000 a day, that is 15 days in seven years.

Secondly, in view of the fact that today's Wall Street Journal reveals that the state of Ohio has appealed its case against Dow, why should the province of Ontario accept dismissal and let polluters to go scot-free here when Ohio won't?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: First of all, Mr. Speaker, as I think all the members of the House fully appreciate, we do not allow polluters in this province to go scot-free.

Mr. Warner: When did that start?

Mr. Kerrio: Another turn of the wheel and we'd be paying them.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Secondly, so far as the legal disbursements are concerned, I can't give the member a breakdown of the legal disbursements at this time; I have that information. The total of disbursements made by the government, both with respect to legal disbursements and consultants who were retained, was approximately $125,000.

Mr. Peterson: Is that the legal fees, or disbursements, or both?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Legal fees.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Do I understand that for seven years' litigation the fee was $125,000? And to whom was it paid?

Ms. Gigantes: How many hours were involved?

Mr. Grande: He didn't answer the second part of the original question, about Ohio.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I will obtain a breakdown. There were various lawyers involved.

Mr. Justice Dubin of the Court of Appeal was the counsel who had been retained prior to Mr. Robinette; when he was appointed to the Ontario Court of Appeal, Mr. Robinette was retained. I can obtain a breakdown for the honourable member.

Mr. Martel: That's high-priced help.

[3:15]

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the total bill paid to the fishermen was $250,000 and the lawyers got $125,000—that's half what the fishermen got after seven years.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: I'm wondering if the Attorney General is aware of the reasons for which the state of Ohio would proceed with an appeal, but in the same circumstance the province of Ontario chooses not to do so? Could he reconcile the difference in approach between this province and the state of Ohio in the case against Dow?

Mr. di Santo: Certainly not.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The circumstances are not the same.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REVIEWS

Mr. Breough: I have a question for the Treasurer. Since in his statement today he showed his great respect for local autonomy in municipal affairs in Northumberland, could I ask why then last Friday he refused a request from the council of the region of Durham to conduct a review of their regional government?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I don't think I did.

Hon. W. Newman: Read the letter over and find out what's in the letter before you make statements.

Mr. Breough: His parliamentary assistant delivered by hand a letter to the chairman of the regional council on Friday refusing their requests for a review of the government.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Irrespective of the specifics of last Friday or last week, we are not anxious to undertake any more reviews until we see some daylight from the four reviews which presently have been completed.

Mr. Breough: Supplementary: Could the Treasurer then give to us the criteria he uses for conducting them? Is it simply that he's a little snowed under with reviews of regional government now or what?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I don't know that I would have put it as eloquently as the honourable member, but he's put it very well.

POLYGRAPH TESTS

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Attorney General. Has his ministry completed its study concerning the use of the polygraph and what policy has he concerning its use?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This is a matter that that is considered as properly within the purview of the Minister of Labour. I think any question in relation to that might properly be directed to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: I am not using this in the context of someone attempting to obtain employment and the polygraph or the voice stress analyser being used. The Attorney General certainly must have a policy as far as his own ministry is concerned allowing the use of the polygraph or disallowing its use.

Mr. Stong: Admissibility in the courts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I really don't understand the question with respect to allowing it. The major problem with respect to polygraphs and the major abuse, in my view, is in relation to employer-employee relationships.

This evidence is not admissible in the courts of this province. The polygraph is regarded as a useful investigative tool, if it's operated properly. Some police forces do use it, quite properly, as an investigative tool only. The evidence is not admissible in the courts.

As I have indicated before, I am of the view that employees should not be forced, either directly or indirectly, to undergo this type of examination or take these tests.

I don't know what else I could add because I don't totally understand the member's question.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: It was two years ago that I asked the Attorney General this question in the House and at that time he told me he would have a reply. Surely it didn't take him two years to tell me what he's telling me now?

Mrs. Campbell: He doesn't understand the question.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: Since his colleague, the Minister of Labour, has expressed her personal view that the use of lie detectors is not an acceptable procedure in labour-management relations, is the government considering banning their use?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, put up or shut up.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think this is a question, as I've already said, that should be directed to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Martel: To the Premier.

Mr. MacDonald: May I redirect it to the Minister of Labour then?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am sorry, I did not hear the question.

Mr. MacDonald: The Attorney General has redirected the question to the Minister of Labour. Since she expressed some concern about the use of lie detector machinery in labour-management relations a year or two ago, has the minister considered bringing in a law to forbid their use?

Hon. B. Stephenson: We are still examining the problem and the study which has been initiated has not, as yet, been completed.

Mr. McClellan: Maybe The Wyatt Company could look after it.

Mr. Laughren: Ask Wyatt.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There are as well two or three instances which have been brought before the human rights commission which are being investigated as well. When we have had a look at all of those, then we will consider it.

Mr. Martel: Give it to The Wyatt Company.

Mr. B. Newman: Will the minister look into the voice stress analyser also as a tool in employment practices?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Should get one to use in the House here.

QUEBEC POLICY ON CONSTRUCTION HIRING

Mr. Samis: A question on the meeting of the Minister of Labour on Saturday with Pierre Marc Johnson: Could the minister report to the House (a) on what was accomplished; (b) where things stand now; (c) what lies ahead; and, (d) what issues remain outstanding?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It was a concenial meeting; it was held in Montreal. All of the aspects of the issue were examined and none to my knowledge were resolved totally.

Mr. Samis: Supplementary: Are there further meetings scheduled before the July 1 deadline? Secondly, what is the stated intention of negotiations from Ontario's viewpoint?

Hon. B. Stephenson: If I could make a respectful suggestion to the honourable member, I wonder if he would enunciate a little more clearly. I am unable to hear him.

Mr. Samis: Clearly, very slowly and articulately, could the minister tell us—

Mr. T. P. Reid: What was that?

Hon. Mr. Crossman: We will settle for two out of three. Clearly and slowly will do.

Mr. Samis: Did the Minister of Labour get those? Oh my God. What's the name of that school the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) goes to?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Belleville School for the Deaf.

Mr. Samis: Could the minister tell us, are there any further negotiations planned? Secondly, from Ontario's perspective with the July 1 deadline in sight, what specifically is she aiming for in these negotiations?

Hon. B. Stephenson: We have, of course, been aiming for a resolution of the problem. To the construction industry and the province of Ontario the problem appears to be a complete inhibition of mobility of construction workers in so far as the Quebec-Ontario border is concerned.

I anticipate that I will be having a communication from the honourable minister either this afternoon or tomorrow morning. I anticipate that there will be further communication with him as a result of receiving that and I am hopeful that we will be able to resolve the difficulty.

Mr. Martel: And you will report to the House?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I always report to the House.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since the minister said when I raised this matter on March 28 that she was still waiting for a legal opinion on whether or not those regulations could be successfully challenged in the court, does she have that opinion? And since she said at that time she "is moving on a different tack," can she tell us what that tack is?

Mr. Martel: This is a pointed one.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am sure the honourable member is aware that I reported to this House that we had received the legal opinion and that it was not entirely supportive of the idea that it could be challenged successfully. We have made some approaches as well to our colleagues at the federal level because this does happen to be an inter-provincial problem in which I think they might have some interest, with the hope that perhaps there might be—

Mr. Wildman: I have heard of marching to a different drum. She goes with a completely different band.

Hon. B. Stephenson:—some action that could be taken at that level. It is our hope that we will have some response to the questions which were levelled at the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Justice and others in Ottawa—hopefully this week.

Mr. Roy: Would Joe Clark not help you up there?

Mr. Samis: Zero on the score card.

Mr. S. Smith: I haven't heard Joe Clark speak on that.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Laughren: Thank goodness for that.

REPORT

STATUTORY EXPENSES

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise all members that I have today tabled a statement of statutory expenses incurred by the members of the House which have been paid for from the Legislative Assembly fund.

MOTION

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing general government committee be authorized to sit in camera concurrently with the House tonight at 8 p.m. to consider sessional paper 13, the report on the policy options for continuing tenant protection.

Motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, pursuant to standing order number 28, the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) has given notice of her dissatisfaction to the answer to her question given by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague) concerning pollution controls in Hawkesbury. This matter will be debated at 10:30 tonight.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity, before calling the first order, to advise that in addition to the meeting tonight, I am told that the standing general government committee will meet tomorrow morning at 9 rather than at 10 as indicated in the notice.

To accommodate the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), may I indicate a brief change in the order of calling bills this afternoon. We will start with Bill 66 in committee.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, let's not do that first.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Following which we will do, and hopefully complete, Bill 108, and then carry on as the order paper suggests.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

YORK MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT, 1978

House in committee on Bill 66, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of York.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments, questions or amendments to this bill, and if so on what section?

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I should like to introduce an amendment to section 2, in order to bring subsection 16 into line with section 39 of the Municipal Act. Section 39 prohibits anyone from running for more than one municipal office in the same election. The reference in the bill to "Members of council . . . elected as members of the commission" is therefore an eventuality which cannot occur. Members of the council may become members of a commission only by appointment.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Baetz moves that subsection 16 of section of the bill be amended by striking out "or elected" in the third line.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to this; it is just tidying up the bill. I have some questions about the explanation given by the minister. It seemed to me that the reason for deleting this was that in fact the first year they are appointed by the act, and therefore the word "elected" served no useful purpose there. I think all members are appointed for the first term of office and this refers back to that. There is no election, and for that reason I would concur that it should be deleted, although I was a little bit confused by the explanation given by the minister.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It simply confirms your view in that the word "elected" is really quite redundant and should be left out.

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Baetz moves that section 4 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection: "(14) For the purpose of the calculations mentioned in subsections 7, 8 and 10, 'original cost' and 'equity' do not include capital contributions by customers or developers."

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This amendment is a compromise agreed upon by representatives of Vaughan, Richmond Hill, the provincial steering committee and Ontario Hydro. It clarifies the method of calculating the purchase price of assets transferred in the course of restructuring.

Because contributions made by developers are never capitalized by Ontario Hydro, the amendment does not change the formula applied to assets transferred from Ontario Hydro. This formula is identical to that in the three previous restructuring acts. However, the amendment will make a slight change in the formula applied to inter-municipal transfers at the request of the two municipalities involved, namely, Vaughan and Richmond Hill.

For the purpose of restructuring only, Vaughan hydro-electric commission will adopt the practice of Ontario Hydro, and of many other municipalities, and will not capitalize developers' contributions. While it is not anticipated that this change will have a major effect on the actual price for the assets, I am pleased to present to this House a method of calculation preferred by the municipalities affected.

Mr. Stong: I wasn't anticipating the introduction of this subsection at this time. I have an amendment to subsection 11 of section 4 that I want to offer as well, so I would like to be able to go back to that subsection. I do want to speak to this amendment as well.

The amendment offered by the minister, subsection 14, is wholly in agreement with what I have endeavoured to do through meetings with the municipalities involved, particularly Richmond Hill, Markham and Vaughan. We are in agreement entirely with the subsection and with the amendment to the act. Although the minister has said that Ontario Hydro does not capitalize these contributions, there is a great deal of confusion surrounding exactly what Ontario Hydro does do to arrive at its calculations. Because of the indefiniteness, confusion and lack of formula in arriving at any calculations in this regard, I have offered an amendment myself which is incorporated into the amendment offered by the minister. We are particularly in agreement with that.

I might say as well, Mr. Chairman, that the circumstances giving rise to this amendment may not be unique in their applications, but because of the magnitude of the capital assets acquired by developers' contributions since January 1, 1971, a growth in equity may result if this amendment is not placed in the bill. Its incorporation may result, as well, in reductions in cost to the existing and future customers and consumers within the new subdivisions, particularly in the area of Richmond Hill and Vaughan.

Specifically, Mr. Chairman, more than $775,000 in capital contributions has been collected by the town of Richmond Hill by subdivision agreements. These funds have been transferred to the Vaughan hydro-electric commission for the construction of a new plant and for new service for these developments. In turn, the developer passed these capital assets on to the new home owners. My concern is remedied by virtue of this amendment. The proposed legislation, as it was introduced, would include the value of these same assets as part of the compensation payments. So, whether we accept what Ontario Hydro says or not, there is still a grey area in this matter and no one seems to know. We get different opinions from different people, and no matter with whom you speak, home owners and consumers would be paying again. They paid the purchase price of their home, and by virtue of the fact of the restructuring, they are fearful that they would have to pay higher rates again. So, this amendment offered by the minister, based on the wishes of the communities involved and on the amendments I am introducing, remedies that situation.

The area involved presently contains about 3,000 consumer units. Of these, some 45 per cent are within the new subdivision previously referred to by me. These statistics are further magnified by the fact the capital contributions were sufficient to provide the hydro-electric plant for an additional 2,700 dwellings not yet built or occupied. Using these same statistics, it is reasonable to assume that as much as 70 per cent of the assets in that portion of the town of Richmond Hill supplied with power by the hydro-electric power commission of the town of Vaughan were paid for in cash in money already transferred.

It is also reasonable to state, I submit, that the equity of a consumer in the town of Vaughan may be grossly overstated because of these capital contributions. In fact, a large portion of this equity is owned by future customers whose investment in the plant was prepaid many years in advance.

The whole thing is ironical, however, because if the hydro commissions had been restructured in 1971 with the boundaries coterminous with those of the area municipalities as they were structured by regional government, then this problem would not have been presented this take-over and paying for capital outlay. However, with major developments in the Yonge and Bathurst corridor in the interim, we now have to deal with this problem.

It is for these reasons I support this amendment as it applies to the take-over by the town of Richmond Hill of that part of the plant owned now by the town of Vaughan, and also in terms of the take-over of the Markham commission and other commissions throughout the regional municipality of York, which will be set up by this act, from Ontario Hydro and because no one seems to know definitively what Ontario Hydro does, what it accounts for and how it organizes its books in making these accountings.

There are so many opinions on that that this amendment offered by the minister is wholly acceptable to us and ought to give some guidelines in the event there is any determination under arbitration for the capital transfers in all of these areas. So we accept the amendment.

Mr. Swart: This amendment seems to provide two things as the member for York Centre has stated. One is a principle that can be carried forward in subsequent bills for restructuring. I have a special interest because there may be one coming in from the Niagara area in the not-too-distant future. Secondly, it resolves the problem with regard to Vaughan township and Newmarket.

Mr. Hodgson: Newmarket?

Mr. Swart: I am not sure that I totally agree with the minister that it is a compromise per se. It looks to me as though it implements what the member for York Centre had originally proposed, namely, that consideration must be given to the deduction made for those funds which had been expended by the developer in installing services in subdivisions.

However, it does seem to make an amicable resolution of the problem. Because the principle is one that we can support we will raise no objection to this amendment.

Mr. Stong: We are making progress and history.

Mr. Hodgson: I rise to support the resolution. I have talked to Vaughan representatives and the hydro commission in Vaughan and it is quite acceptable to them. In fact, the division of assets as provided by the developer was quite acceptable prior to a resolution at a meeting the ministry had in Richmond Hill, attended by the member for York Centre, myself and representatives for both municipalities and the hydro commission, where Vaughan agreed if there were any assets provided by the developer, they weren't going to charge Richmond Hill. Now it is in legislation and will be there for ever and ever. I must make an apology to Ontario Hydro at this time. I spoke on the principle of the bill with the belief that in those areas—for instance, the town of Newmarket, the town of Aurora, and the town of Markham, which are taking in certain areas from Ontario Hydro—had those—

Mr. Stong: And correctly so, too.

Mr. Hodgson: —services paid for by the developer, but that is not the case. No, it wasn't the case.

Mr. Stong: They dazzled you with their footwork there, Bill.

Mr. Hodgson: Listen, I didn't interrupt you, Mr. Member.

I find in speaking to developers in the area that Ontario Hydro pays all the expenses for an overhead line. If underground wiring is to be installed, the developer is asked to pay the difference between underground wiring and overhead wiring in the first instance. Over a few years as the development goes on, Ontario Hydro pays the developer back the full amount of that investment, less four per cent depreciation.

I have to make an apology because I wasn't fully informed and I don't think the member for York Centre was fully informed. I just want to say that I go along with this wholeheartedly. I support it 100 per cent.

Mr. Stong: I think I do have to make a comment in answer to the member for York North. It's not that I wasn't fully informed.

In offering this amendment to the minister, it became very clear that there were many people who were confused on this issue. Ontario Hydro certainly went out of its way to fight the amendment and it was very difficult to get this amendment introduced into the legislation.

The amendment covers not only original costs but equity. As I recall, the meeting to which the member for York North refers, that we were both in attendance, Vaughan Hydro was really not satisfied at all with the equity portion of this particular amendment and Ontario Hydro certainly has never agreed to it. However, both original cost of assets and equity are included and that is exactly the purport of the original amendment proposed by me.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Is there any further amendment to section 4?

Mr. Stong: I have an amendment to subsection 11, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Stong moves that subsection 11 of section 4 of the bill be amended by striking out "the decision of the board of arbitration should not be subject to appeal and" in the sixth and seventh lines. The member for York Centre.

Mr. Stong: The purport of the amendment will be that in the event there was an arbitration, either side can appeal that arbitration pursuant to the Arbitrations Act.

Originally when this bill on the restructuring of the municipal hydro-electric service in the regional municipality of York was proposed, the proposal was the arbitration be set up in one single arbitrator and that there be no appeal from that. However, pursuant to meetings with the ministry and with municipalities, the minister then introduced the bill, recognizing the fact that the provisions of the Arbitrations Act should be applicable to this act, so more than one arbitrator could be set up to settle any dispute.

But, in proposing this bill and introducing it, the minister has taken away specifically any right of appeal from that arbitration, thereby circumventing the operation of the Arbitrations Act which is applicable to many other situations throughout the province of Ontario including labour disputes, to name only one.

It would seem to me in this type of situation we are depriving either side of a right that would ordinarily be theirs under other statutes, in other situations. To deprive either party of a right of appeal is a gross inadequacy in our law and ought to be avoided at all cost.

With respect to guidelines that have been set down in this bill in other sections I hope there will be no need for appeal. The arbitrators, we assume, will be calm, sensible, knowledgeable people, one appointed by each side with those two appointing a third. Hopefully, as a result of that type of board hearing, even if an arbitration arises, there will be no need for an appeal.

However, it is my opinion, having given the right of appeal under the Arbitrations Act, we ought not specifically to exclude it by virtue of this legislation. The Arbitrations Act ought to apply fully to this legislation as it would to any other legislation.

As a result of that, I offer my amendment which would include the provision of appeal as pursuant to any other statute of Ontario and not specifically excluded by this act.

Mr. Swart: I doubt if this is one of the most important things that will come before the Legislature in the next two weeks, this week and next week, and perhaps some for time after that if we don't get finished. I would anticipate at least a 20 to one ratio—that there would never be any need for an appeal beyond this.

I'm rather impressed with the procedures that are used for the appointments in this bill. In most other arbitrations, the first two appoint a third person, and if they cannot agree on that person the third person is appointed by the minister. It varies, but in many instances it is the minister who makes the appointment.

However, in this case there's an application made to the court so I think you're relatively certain you will get a person appointed by the court who is neutral. Therefore, I would anticipate the decision that was made would be as fair as it is possible to make.

However, having said all that, I'm a little concerned about the precedent that may be set here with regard to appeals. Where do we go next time with denying the right of appeal? Recognizing full well the costs which are always involved in appeals, whether they are appeals to the Ontario Municipal Board or wherever they may be, and that these costs always inevitably have to be borne by the consumer or by the taxpayer in one way or another, I still think the principle of the right of appeal should remain.

If the words are taken out, as suggested by the member for York Centre, it does not imply there is going to be an appeal, but it leaves that right there under the other acts. Because I'm hesitant on the matter of principle to take this away, I and my party will be supporting the amendment put forward by the member for York Centre.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Up until now, as has been indicated on both sides of the House, this exercise has been one of beautiful harmony and compromise all around, but I do believe on this particular point we have some real difficulties in agreeing to this amendment.

As I think the member opposite knows, by indicating that there should be three members on the arbitration body instead of the usual one, we have already made a substantial concession. We frankly think it is unnecessary that in addition to having a board of three members we should agree to a procedure of further appeal. It would be very expensive, it would be time consuming and would just draw out the process.

If there were perhaps one person as arbitrator, the question of appeal could be considered. But if you have three people, carefully named to make sure that they represent all sides, it really seems to us that it goes on ad absurdum to simply take it from there to another appeal body. Therefore, quite frankly we feel that we cannot support that particular amendment. It is unfortunate, because this has been a great exercise in compromise and in a bipartisan approach to a local problem. We would hope, in an appeal to the members opposite, that we could continue right down to this last item to make it unanimous.

Mr. Stong: It is unfortunate that the minister does not agree in principle with the amendment. I think the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) expressed it very well when he said the chances are 20 to 1 that we will not even reach this stage. But in principle we ought not to take away a right of appeal that exists in other situations. Sure, it would be time consuming and it would be expensive, but I think cool heads and reasonable people will prevail in situations such as this in arriving at a compromise. However, in the event they cannot, I don't think we should take away the right of appeal, as the member for Welland-Thorold has so aptly said.

Motion agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 5 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 66, as amended, reported.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 66, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of York.

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 108, An Act to acquire the Assets of the Muskoka and Parry Sound Telephone Company Limited.

Mr. Foulds: Carried.

Mr. Sweeney: Not quite, I say to the member for Port Arthur. As a matter of fact, the member for Port Arthur is so anxious to get this bill through—

Mr. Foulds: Oh, no.

Mr. Sweeney: —that if I were the minister, I would have grave reservations.

Mr. M. Davidson: They like the way it's worded, John.

Mr. Foulds: I could have gone on for another 15 minutes.

Mr. Sweeney: Yes, I hear that they want to use it for a model. That bothers me, too, rather gravely. I wonder what has possessed the minister to be so obliging, to use the expression of the member for Port Arthur, to "the socialist hordes in the House."

Mr. Foulds: It's the health and safety of the public.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It's not normally my inclination.

Mr. Sweeney: That's what I mean. I find that surprising. I won't be too long.

I read over the debate from yesterday, and it's fairly obvious that the tone of that debate is that this bill will probably carry. However, there are other sides to it and, in all fairness, I want to present those sides to the House.

I have no doubt whatsoever—I see the member from the area here—that the service which is being provided in that particular area is not adequate. In my judgement, that is not the question. That is given, that is accepted. The question we have to ask ourselves, however, is why is the service not adequate? Is it because the owners of the company are not willing to provide the service? Is it because they are not able to provide the service? Or is there something within the structure of operating telephone systems in this province which makes it difficult, if not impossible? Let me speak very briefly to those.

First, we're dealing here with a very large geographical area and a relatively small number of subscribers—800 square miles and fewer than 1,500 subscribers. One of the problems is that, as I understand it, the people who are complaining the most about poor service are people living in summer cottages coming up there from the city.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Oh no. There are also two fire halls without service.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Permanent residents.

Mr. Sweeney: Permanent residents as well? Okay.

The difficulty, as I understand it, is the rate base which has been allowed to this company. As I read section 12 of the act, it seems to say pretty clearly to me that the rates and the tolls charged should pay for the funded debt and interest and a reasonable return on capital. Yet we know that the owners of the company have gone before the board recently and asked for a rate increase which would do that; in other words, applying directly to the legislation. The decision was that they should not be given that rate increase, because there was evidence that they were not providing adequate service. It goes on to say that even granting the application would not come close to creating a situation which would permit the needs to be met.

In other words, clearly what the board is saying is that "We're not going to provide an increase because you're not providing the service." Yet the owners are turning right around and saying, "The reason we can't provide the service is because we're not getting the income."

I understand that there are a couple of situations where phones are placed at such distances that the owners are paying more in charges to Hydro to run the wire along their hydro poles than what they're getting in return from the phone owners. In other words, it's a net loss every time they string a line out that way.

I notice that the member for Port Arthur yesterday alluded to the efficiency of Thunder Bay. That's not a fair comparison. We're talking about two independents. First of all, Thunder Bay is a compact city in a relatively smaller area, where you have thousands and thousands of subscribers—

Mr. Foulds: It goes out into the rural area.

Mr. Sweeney: —but you've got a solid urban base. You don't have that in this area.

The second point, and equally important, is that the Thunder Bay company is owned by the municipality and is therefore not subject to many of the taxes which this private company has to pay.

Mr. Foulds: I just used it as an example of independent companies that are—

Mr. Sweeney: Yes, I realize that, I say to the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Ruston: This one is to your advantage, yes.

Mr. Sweeney: All I'm trying to suggest is it's not a fair comparison.

Mr. Bradley: Great pitchers—poor catchers.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sweeney: It's very easy to say that some independent companies can get along fine, and why can't this one—

[4:00]

Mr. Foulds: I didn't make the comparison on a one-to-one basis.

Mr. Sweeney: There are two different situations. I noticed that one of the biggest complainers in this area was one of the summer tourist camps. It is interesting to note that that particular summer tourist camp got a grant from the Ministry of Industry and Tourism a little while back for something in the neighbourhood of $240,000. Shortly thereafter, the owner picks up and walks away. In other words, one branch of the government is quite prepared to recognize that in order to operate efficiently in that area and to draw people in, there has to be some government support. That's fine for the tourist camp but not for this company.

It clearly seems evident to me that the funding structure here would simply make it impossible for anyone to operate that system at the rates that are being allowed, pay his debts and make any kind of a return on the investment whatsoever. I guess what I am suggesting is that this is going to have to be subsidized in some way by someone. Whether the government takes it over, whether Bell takes it over or whether another independent goes in, they are not going to be able to operate that system and provide the service that is required with the existing rates. Those rates are going to have to go up. I don't know how much they are going to have to go up. The other alternative is that some form of subsidy is going to have to be paid. I don't know how that's done, quite frankly. I understand that it's not permissible directly from the government, but it is going to have to be done by someone.

The concern I have in this particular case is that in the minister's statement of a couple of weeks ago he makes the observation that the company has had a couple of years to try to get its house in order. They have been offered to be bought out by the government, to be bought out by Bell Telephone or to be restructured by some independents. But look at the prices that are being offered.

As I understand it, the total investment in this company and everything in the neighbourhood of $900,000.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Now let's be honest.

Mr. Sweeney: The debt is $750,000 and there is an inequity investment of something like $175,000. They were offered $450,000. Heck, there is nobody in this House who would accept that kind of an offer. Yet the minister's statement seems to criticize them for that. That's not reasonable. That's not fair. What else would he expect them to do under those particular circumstances?

There is a third point that needs to have a good look taken at it. I don't know how this affects other companies but I understand that the toll exchange rates between Bell Canada and some of these independents is not as fair as it could be. In other words, Bell Canada with its big clout can go through some of the small independent operations and pay a certain rate, but when it goes the other way the rate is more expensive. In other words, there isn't a fair exchange of toll rates.

I don't know all the ins and outs of that, but it's something I think the minister definitely needs to look into.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The other 35 aren't complaining about it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Sweeney: Are we comparing apples and apples? That's the question. I get the distinct impression we aren't. Let's go to the end of the line. As I said at the beginning, it looks as if this bill is going to pass. Is there some evidence at this point or can the minister give me some assurance that the final evaluation settlement has a chance of being fair? Let me show the minister what I'm speaking of.

In order to make that kind of evaluation, I would understand that he would have to bring in experts to look at the whole technology of the thing. Where are those experts going to come from? There are only two sources. One is Bell Canada, which is one of the ones that wanted to buy it out for $450,000, half of what it's worth. The second is the government, which also wanted to buy it out for $450,000.

I'm not saying anyone is going to do something improper. But, given those kinds of sources, what kind of a real chance of getting a fair price do the owners of this company have? I would like the minister to speak briefly to that. If I had some sense that they were going to come out of this reasonably fairly with some sense of justice, then I would have less opposition to it. At the present time, I don't get that sense. What it all boils down to is that I am not convinced that the owners of the company really have had a fair shake.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Oh, my goodness!

Mr. Sweeney: I am not sure, even with this particular process, that they are going to end up having a fair shake. I would like to hear the minister's comment on that.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Are there any further speakers?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes. I will keep my remarks very short. There are a few remarks that the member for Kitchener-Wilmot made that I just can't let go without challenging a little bit.

I suppose I am the member who is most concerned with this particular problem because most of the telephone system is in my riding. A small portion is in Muskoka, but the major portion of it is in my riding. For the last three years I have been receiving on the average five or six letters every week regarding the poor phone service. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, those letters did not all come from summer residents by any means. They came from permanent residents who have to live with that system.

I just believe in this day and age in the province of Ontario people are entitled to a little bit better service than what has been supplied in that particular area.

I have a great deal of respect for the owner of the telephone company. I know him personally. He is a fine gentleman. I was hoping this bill would never have to be brought to the Legislature. However, it has got to the point where something must be done for the people in that area. They have had a great amount of difficulty and I just don't feel they should have to put up with any more of it.

I would like to also point out that the member for Kitchener-Wilmot suggested a grant was given to a tourist operator in the amount of two hundred and some thousand dollars. I would suggest to him no grants are given to any tourist operators in the province of Ontario. There are such things as loans that have to be paid back, but they are not grants. We have not been giving grants through NODC or any other ministry department for the last three or four years. At one point we did have what we call performance loans, but they were discontinued some time ago. There were no grants to any tourist operator, but there possibly could have been loans. That person would still be responsible to pay the money back to the province.

I know of at least two fire departments which have been without telephone service from time to time, and for a great period of time. This becomes a safety factor and it has just got to the point where something has to be done.

I know of one area where the phone service was out for eight months. Local people living there were complaining, phoning me weekly, sometimes daily, if I happened to be in the riding they asked. "When is our phone going to be reinstated? When are we going to have telephone service?" While I have, as I said, a great deal of respect for Mr. Schmidt, the very fine gentleman who is the owner of the company, I do question his ability to operate a telephone company.

The argument about the rates has gone on and on. I have personally attended two public meetings held in my riding regarding rate increases, and applications made to the telephone commission. As the member has indicated, there were always two sides to the argument. The operator suggested he couldn't provide the service unless he got more money, and the people said, "we are not prepared to pay more money unless you give us some service. We don't mind paying, but we want some service." So there was always a stalemate on the issue.

The rates there are not that much different from the rates in the rest of the province of Ontario. I realize it is a very sparsely populated area, and it is a large area. There are a lot of telephone lines that must be maintained, but surely he could have done a little better than he did.

I can recall people phoning me to tell me the lines were on the ground, and in the wintertime were being cut by the wings of snowploughs. They would be without a telephone for weeks until somebody finally decided to come and dig up the line and splice it together. This is the type of thing that has been going on. That is the reason I fully support the minister's action in this matter. I would hope every member would see that this bill is passed as quickly as possible so those people can have some assurance of a better telephone system.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to support the bill. I think one has to visit the people who are served by this particular telephone company to appreciate their remote locations and the patience they have had in putting up with, to say inferior service, is an understatement.

I've visited these homes, some of them 10 to 20 miles from the nearest community.

Mr. Wildman: Bell gives us inferior service in the north too.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I've seen the telephone wires lying along the edge of the road in the summertime, just lying on the ground. Local people would come along and jack them up over branches of trees hoping that the service would work. I've talked to a tourist operator on Buck Lake—

Mr. Bradley: Just homesick.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —who hadn't been able to get calls from potential clients for weeks at a time. The poor soul had the great embarrassment of having the telephone ring while I was there. That was the first time in weeks that it had worked at all.

Mr. Wildman: The tourist outfitters in my area have that trouble with Bell.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Just local member problems.

Hon. F. S. Miller: But the fact remains that rates were not the issue. It had to be remembered that just because it wasn't part of the Bell system people on that system were paying long distance tolls to make calls that traditionally had been considered local calls. Every call to Huntsville from the people in the Buck Lake area has been charged as a long distance call if, as and when they could get a telephone call through.

Senior citizens living out there—not those who moved there, in many cases those who had grown up there—have been without any service for days at a time and often worried about their inability to communicate even with a neighbour under bad weather conditions.

I would think that they have the right, in this day and age, when there have been offers made in the company to have a good system. I could only endorse the prompt remedy of the deficient service.

Mr. Wildman: Nationalization.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, while listening to the debate here and reading over the bill yesterday, I can understand the concern the member for Kitchener-Wilmot has. Having been involved in the telephone system for eight years in my years in the municipal council, and chairman of our own system for six years—it was sold out after a few years—I know the telephone industry is a very capital intensive industry. I'm sure the member for Port Arthur, when he spoke about the one in his city, would recognize this. If you have a major city to make your money on then you can go out and service the rural areas. But if you've been involved in a telephone system that serves a rural area, Mr. Speaker, you can get involved in a great deal of capital expenditures before the money starts coming back in.

Mr. Foulds: True, true. That's fair.

Mr. Ruston: I would take it from what the members for Pary Sound and Muskoka have said regarding the area involved this is, no doubt, one of the problems in this system.

Mr. Wildman: They are socialists.

Mr. Ruston: I suppose part of the problem is the rate structure. In our own cases we would go to the Ontario Telephone Services Commission, at that time, and apply for rates. We had to be competitive with adjoining telephone systems—I think that also had to be considered. They also had to consider the service being supplied; if it was in an area where it was hard to pick up enough users then, naturally, their costs will go up.

Our own system used to charge a long distance toll into the city of Windsor which was only 15 or 18 miles away. Twelve lines served that area of about 900 phones. We put in toll-free service and we needed 80 lines to serve the same area. That gives you an idea of what the cost is. It cost us $125,000 just to put in a service like that.

I'm concerned about the province owning this system because I'm sure that we should not be in the telephone business in only one area like this and subsidize it. If we're going to own any of the telephone industry, we'd better own some in the heavily-populated areas to offset the loss in the rural areas.

Mr. Wildman: Take over it all. Take over the whole thing.

Mr. Nixon: Those are irresponsible suggestions.

Mr. Ruston: But I'm not in favour of the province going into the telephone service en masse by any means. I think it would probably be like Ontario Hydro—it would grow so fast that no one would ever know where it was going and now we're trying to hold it down.

[4:15]

I have concerns for the owner of this system, because to serve an area such as this and fix it up certainly would be capital-intensive. But I am concerned about what the province is going to do with it, now that they are taking steps to take it over. I would hope that they would put it up for sale and get a fair price, so all involved would not lose too much.

I certainly would not be in favour of the province getting into the telephone industry in Ontario because of the capital it takes. That was part of the problem with the local municipal systems. Every time one wanted to get a debenture, one had to get approval from the subscribers and the Ontario Municipal Board. It required so much capital it was almost impossible to handle. That's why many of them have been sold out in the meantime.

In our own area, Bell Canada formed a company to take over one of the systems and I think, if I remember correctly, they paid about $800,000 or $900,000 for it. Bell transferred an additional $1 million to bring it up to date and after three years that was all gone. Then they abandoned their charter and turned it over to Bell. It gives you an idea of the capital it takes to give good telephone service, Mr. Speaker.

I am sure I did not add too much to the debate but I am concerned with the wide area that this system covers. Naturally, people have to have service and I am sure we have sympathy for the owner of the system, but if he cannot raise the capital to put it in shape to operate it, then I suppose we do not have much choice now but to take it over and hopefully sell it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Are there any further speakers to this bill?

The honourable minister.

Mr. Wildman: Take over Bell.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the honourable members for their contributions to the debate on second reading of this bill.

As I explained at the beginning, I regret very much having to bring legislation such as this before the House and ask the House to deal with it expeditiously so we can get on with trying to get a reasonable telephone service for the 1,500 or so subscribers in the Muskoka-Parry Sound service area, an area of some 800 square miles. I might mention that as of May 17, there were about 150 minimum subscribers that were out of service at that particular time; some had been out for various periods from three or four days to 30 days. Included in that group that had no telephone service were two township fire halls, so I think you can see the problem and the necessity to take some type of drastic action.

Officials from my ministry, my deputy minister and myself have met with Mr. Schmidt and I have to say as a gentleman he is a very fine man. I feel some concern for him because of the unfortunate financial and business situation that he has got himself in concerning the ownership of this telephone company.

It is certainly not the intention of the province of Ontario to get into the telephone business.

Mr. Foulds: What a pity.

Hon. Mr. Snow: As I am sure many of the members know, the province is involved, to some degree, and has been for many years, through the Ontario Northland Telecommunications System in northern Ontario, but I assure the House it is not our intention, even though the socialists would like us to—they are all alone over there—to start socializing these telephone companies.

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The member for Wentworth North and the member for Essex North both asked what our plans were for the company. I am surprised at that because the statement I made a few days ago was very explicit as to what our intentions were: when this bill is passed, we intend to make some immediate and emergency repairs where we can, to improve service. It will necessitate spending some provincial dollars, but we will immediately put the system up for sale. There are several options as to what its future might be. It could be bought by Bell, of course.

Mr. Foulds: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Snow: It could be bought by one of the other independent telephone companies. I might say that I met with the executive of the Ontario Independent Telephone Association with regard to this particular problem, and I must say they had no answer for me as to any other option that I had other than to proceed with this bill.

Not as an association but as a group of individuals, some of the well-established private telephone companies offered financial and management assistance to the owner of this company to try to save the company for him. Although I wasn't involved directly in it, I understand this proposition was turned down, as was the offer of Bell to purchase the company, and as was the offer that we made as a province prior to taking this expropriation action.

This is certainly not a move on behalf of this government in any way to take over the telephone systems or the private telephone companies.

An hon. member: Shame.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have to say that the 35 or 36 private telephone companies we have in the province, some of them municipally owned, such as Thunder Bay—and the member for Port Arthur's comparing the Thunder Bay system with the Muskoka and Parry Sound system was like comparing—

Mr. Foulds: An elephant with a fly.

Hon. Mr. Snow: —an elephant with a squirrel; I could think of other things but I had better not.

In any case there are other telephone systems in the province that are quite rural in nature. The Bruce Peninsula and Manitoulin Islands are two areas I can think of that have private systems; they are maybe not in quite as sparsely a settled area as this but still do run a good system and provide a good service. So the private companies are doing an excellent job in Ontario and I hope they continue to do so.

Mr. Foulds: Take over Bell.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I do hope that when this bill is passed, assuming that it will be, we will be able to improve the service for these people who have been very patient over the past two years. While I have been trying to give every opportunity to Mr. Schmidt to improve his situation and to improve the service, I have to say that I could not in any way suggest that a rate increase should be granted without there being improvement in service. You don't grant a substantial rate increase which would have been needed to assist this man financially when the phones won't even work. I'm sure you wouldn't expect the people to pay a higher price for a system that wasn't working on the assumption that it might work some day.

I can assure the honourable members that Mr. Schmidt as the majority owner—I believe there are some other minor shareholders—will be used fairly. This is being carried out through this special act but we intend to use the normal expropriation procedure. I expect the settlement of the total compensation to be paid will be established by the Ontario Land Compensation Board, which I am sure will deal fairly. Mr. Schmidt and his lawyer, his consultants, or whoever he may wish to give evidence, will be able to present that evidence to the board, as will the government.

There are independent consultants. The member for Kitchener-Wilmot suggested there is nobody other than Bell who knows how to evaluate a telephone company, and that is not correct at all. I think there are other expert witnesses. There are people in the private telephone companies. I understand there are private consultants—perhaps none right here in Ontario, but there are some in the United States and in western Canada—who would be considered expert witnesses to give an evaluation of the assets of the company. I would ask the support of the House to pass this bill.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Ordered for third reading.

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Snow moved third reading of Bill 108, An Act to acquire the Assets of the Muskoka and Parry Sound Telephone Company Limited.

Mr. Foulds: One brief comment. If I implied that there was a comparison between this telephone system and the telephone system in the city of Thunder Bay, I did not of course mean that when I was speaking yesterday. I was just using the city of Thunder Bay telephone system as an example of an independent system that could work well. If it should be sold again I personally would prefer the Muskoka and Parry Sound system be sold to another independent—or conglomeration of independents—rather than to Bell, which is a monopoly. The independents in the province have shown that they can by and large operate efficient systems.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 83, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Ashe: I would hope not to try to prolong the debate. Most of the discussion so far in second reading has related to an amendment which is not before us as yet so I would prefer not to waste the time of the House by responding at this time. Hopefully Mr. Speaker can put the motion on second reading.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole.

COUNTY OF OXFORD AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. McKeough, moved second reading of Bill 84, An Act to amend the County of Oxford Act, 1974.

Mr. Ashe: This is the housekeeping amendment relating to the Municipal Elections Act changes, along with a small boundary change in Oxford involving approximately four acres in the township of Zorra at their request, and as mutually agreed upon.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour of representing a small but important part of the restructured county of Oxford, I wanted simply to bring to your attention, sir, that no objections have been expressed to me as the member.

I have talked to my colleague and good friend the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Mr. Parrott), who represents the rest of that outstanding county, and he indicated to me that as far as he is concerned the local people, the officials and taxpayers, have no particular objection to what the government has brought forward.

As a matter of fact, as the parliamentary assistant has indicated, at least some of these matters are in response to specific requests from the area.

I simply want to comment again that when we move amendments to the various regional bills of the province, the restructured county of Oxford is always included, since in fact it is a region in everything but name. The Minister of Colleges and Universities isn't here—that statement always stimulates him to get up to make some comments on a bill as well.

But I think it is interesting that the county of Northumberland, when offered the alternative to restructuring, has by vote of the council turned down that alternative which was announced by the Treasurer earlier in today's session.

I was interested to note the county of Northumberland simply had a resolution put forward before the county council and each member of the council had expressed his or her view, rejecting it. When a similar vote was put before the county of Oxford some years ago it was rejected at that time—at least, not approved.

In those days the present Treasurer, feeling a bit more frisky about the concept of regional government or restructuring, simply had them have another vote involving the then-warden of the county, the then-mayor of the city of Woodstock and the mayor of Ingersoll, I believe. He found that by canvassing them he got a unanimous vote in favour of restructuring. The restructuring of the county progressed on the basis of what he then called a "unanimous call for it" by the representatives of both the urban and the rural areas.

I have since felt that the county has adapted itself very well to the imposition of this new style of government. But some people forget when they talk about applying this type of restructuring to other counties, there is one advantage—I suppose you might call it that—in Oxford in that population in the urban and rural areas is almost exactly balanced so it's not necessary for the government or the Legislature to apply any tricky arithmetic to make the representation on the restructured council such that neither one area or group of population or the other feels submerged or in any way unfairly treated.

I've got no particular objection to this bill and I hope that it passes without delay.

Mr. Swart: We, too, will be supporting this bill. We will not be asking that it be referred to the committee of the whole House as we have no amendments.

It is similar to the clauses in Bills 80 and 81, by and large, to which we had no objection and which, by and large, are necessary because of the changes in the date in the Municipal Elections Act. Also included in this is the principle of greater autonomy for municipal councils—in this case, the county of Oxford, to set the remuneration for them—selves and for any members of boards whom they may be appointing.

It also provides that it's not necessary to have separate planning meetings, in case there's any previous confusion about that. Hearings that may be required under any of the acts may be held by committees rather than by the council as a whole.

It is my understanding that the matter of the annexation of part of Zorra township to southwest Oxford amounts to four or six acres only and the two municipalities and the county have agreed on this annexation.

However, I want to point out that Bill 84 already has a commendable section which we would like to see included in the other regional government acts—that is the section relating to the election of the chairman of that regional council, in this case called the warden of the county of Oxford.

In subsection 2 of section 3 of this bill, which is section 9, subsection 2 of the act, it states that "At the first meeting of the county council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the county council shall organize as a council and elect from among its members a warden who shall hold office for that term of the council and until a successor is elected and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the warden is elected. The warden so elected shall retain his seat on the council of the area municipality to which he was elected."

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk stated that in almost all respects at least the restructuring of the county of Oxford was really the imposition of a regional government, and with that I generally agree. Regional government was no longer acceptable politically at the time it was formed, so they used different phraseology. In this instance, it was a restructured county. By the time they got to Muskoka, it was the district of Muskoka.

Here they have restructured the county of Oxford in the form of a regional government, but they didn't call it that, except for one thing. They decided that the chairman of that regional council or that restructured county council should come from among the elected people of the council and that he or she should retain a local seat while chairman of the regional council. I bring this forward to point out that it is the only one of the regional municipalities that has this clause. It is a clause that should be emulated in the other regional acts in this province. We propose to see that that possibility takes place later on today.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other members wishing to get engaged in second reading, then the honourable parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Ashe: Very briefly, I would once again point out to the House, as all of the honourable members know, that a restructured county is not a regional government. Therefore, what is right for one is not necessarily right for the other.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 80, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any comment or discussion on this bill?

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Swart: I have an amendment to section 3 of this bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 4 of section 27b of the Municipal Act as set out in section 3 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the tenth day" in line four and substituting therefor the words "30 days," so that the subsection shall read:

"(4) A bylaw for any of the purposes mentioned in subsection 1 of this section or subsection 1 of section 27a or a bylaw repealing any such bylaw shall in an election year be passed not later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notice of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977."

Mr. Swart: There are seven of these amendments, all basically of the same principle, dealing with sections of the act. I think they may find support on all sides of the House. This one specifically provides that a county council may not determine just 10 days before the last day people are nominated for an election, that deputy reeves will no longer sit on the county council. It provides that there has to be some advance notice prior to elections that there may be changes made in the composition of county council. The subsequent amendments provide for cities and towns, villages and townships. Also, the submission of petition for this to a council must be put in well in advance of the election.

I admit that it has to be an arbitrary decision, whether it is 10 days or 13 days or three months before. It seems to me that there should be adequate time so that the public generally can voice their opinions on these things adequately prior to the time people are nominated for the position.

Frequently, a ratepayer would like to comment to a council after they have decided to pass a bill or after a petition has come in to change wards in the municipality. There may be others in that municipality who want to make representation to the council on this. If there is only a 10-day limit, obviously there isn't the same opportunity.

So we have arbitrarily picked 30 days for all of these. It does give more time and yet provides a council with the opportunity to make changes as they approach election day but not too close to it. A county council would not be able to pass a bylaw to exclude deputy reeves from a county council closer than 30 days to the last day for posting of nominations for election to office.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further speakers to this amendment?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, it is my feeling that what the member for Welland-Thorold has stated is eminently correct. As far as we are concerned, we will support this amendment and the subsequent amendments to other parts of the bill because the 30 days is a little more notice for the public to comprehend what are the changes being made and to have a chance to respond to those changes. The 10 days seems somewhat short. A council may make a change without having given due notice to the residents of that municipality. So we are pleased to be able to support this amendment and have it 30 days. I agree it's an arbitrary figure, but it's one that is acceptable to us.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. We actually felt the 10 days was sufficient. In fact, it's a section that is virtually not used in any event. There's no doubt that it was rather arbitrary, as is 30 days, but we really have no objection to this amendment and similar amendments that are going to follow.

I personally don't think it's necessary to talk about each one that's doing the same thing—hopefully.

Motion agreed to.

Section 3, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4.

[4:45]

Mr. Swart: I have an amendment to section 4.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 7 of section 28 of the Municipal Act as set out in section 4, subsection 2 of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "the tenth day" in line three and substituting the words "30 days" so that the subsection shall read: "A petition for any of the purposes mentioned in subsection 6 shall in an election year be presented not later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notices of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977."

Motion agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Swart: I have an amendment to section 5.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 5 of section 30 of the Municipal Act as set out in subsection 1 of section 5 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the tenth day" in line 4 and substituting therefor the words "30 days" so that the subsection will read: "A bylaw passed under section 29 or under subsection 2 or 3 of this section, and a bylaw repealing any such bylaw shall in an election year be passed no later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notices of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977. Such bylaw shall not be passed unless it has received the assent of the municipal electors."

Mr. Swart: This amendment refers to towns which are covered under a separate section of the act, a variation of the composition of councils of towns.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 9 of section 30 of the Municipal Act as set out in subsection 2 of section 5 of the bill be amended by striking out the word "the tenth day" in line two, and substituting therefor the words "30 days" so the subsection will read: "A petition presented under subsection 7 or 8 shall in an election year be presented not later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notice of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977."

Motion agreed to.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 3 of section 32 of the Municipal Act as set out in subsection 1 of section 6 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the tenth day" where they appear in line three and substituting therefor the words "30 days," so the subsection will read: "A bylaw for the purpose mentioned in subsection 2 and a bylaw repealing any such bylaw shall, in an election year, be passed not later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notice of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977, and such bylaw shall take effect at and for the purpose of the municipal election next after the passing of it."

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I should just perhaps point out that it is the same thing, only this applies to the section of the act which deals with villages and townships.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 8 of section 32 of the Municipal Act as set out in subsection 2 of section 6 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the tenth day" where they appear in the third line and substituting therefor the words "30 days" so the subsection will read: "A bylaw for the purpose mentioned in subsection 6 and a bylaw repealing any such bylaw shall, in an election year, be passed not later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notice of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977, and such bylaw shall not be passed until it has received the assent of the municipal electors."

Motion agreed to.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 7 to 15, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that paragraph 67a of section 352 of the act as set out in section 16 of the bill be amended by inserting after "employees" in the ninth line, "including while acting in the performance of any statutory duty imposed by any general or special act".

Mr. Ashe: The reason for this addition came from a suggestion from the municipal sector to make it abundantly clear that what we were talking about were duties that should be performed by the particular individual, that were statutorily imposed by any general or special act. We are very pleased to clarify it to that degree by adding those few words. It does not in any way change the substance of the section.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, I would agree this is essentially housekeeping. I know this would put reins on the former mayor of Pickering, somewhat, if he were still in that capacity. He couldn't go beyond the limits that will be imposed now and I am sure he wouldn't mind that.

We will agree with the amendment.

Mr. Swart: We support this as desirable.

Motion agreed to.

Section 16, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any further discussions or amendments to this bill before section 26?

Sections 17 to 25, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 26:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that subsection 1 of section 413 of the act as set out in section 26 of the bill be amended by striking out "city or town" in the first line and inserting in lieu thereof "local municipality."

Mr. Ashe: This amendment comes about through a suggestion by the municipal liaison committee and we have no problem in putting it forward. It probably better describes what we are talking about.

Mr. Epp: We will agree with the amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Section 26, as amended, agreed to.

Section 27 agreed to.

On section 28:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that section 28 of the bill be struck out and the following inserted in lieu thereof: "28(1) Paragraph 9 of section 460 of the said bill as enacted by the Statutes of Ontario, 1973, chapter 175, section 7, is amended by inserting after 'specified' in the sixth line, 'provided such regulation is not in conflict with the Highway Traffic Act and the regulations thereunder.'

"(2) The said section 460 is amended by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

"10. For designating any lane and any road over which the municipality has jurisdiction as a lane solely or principally for use by bicycles and for prohibiting and regulating the use thereof by vehicles other than bicycles to such extent and for such period or periods as may specify, provided such regulation is not in conflict with the Highway Traffic Act and the regulations thereunder.

"11. Before passing a bylaw under paragraphs 9 or 10 for designating a lane on a road as a lane solely or principally for the use of public transit, motor vehicles or bicycles, notice of the proposed bylaw shall be published at least once a week for four successive weeks in a newspaper having general circulation in the municipality and the notice shall indicate the date and time of the meeting at which the council will consider the passing of the proposed bylaw.

"(a) this paragraph does not apply so as to affect the validity of a bylaw heretofore passed under paragraph 9."

Mr. Epp: In effect all this does is insert, I think quite correctly and quite properly, that any regulations to set up bicycle lanes and/or bus lanes still must, of course, be set up provided such regulations are not in conflict with the Highway Traffic Act and the regulations thereunder. Again, it's just clarifying by specifically stating that they still must conform to that act.

Motion agreed to.

Section 28, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any further amendments or discussions to this bill?

Sections 29 to 37, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 80, as amended, reported.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITIES AMENDMENT ACT

House in committee on Bill 81, An Act to amend certain Acts respecting Regional Municipalities.

On section 1:

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I am resuming my role as the member for Ottawa Centre as well as being the leader of my party. We are proposing that in the case of the regional chairman a fundamental and democratic change should be made. I have pleasure in making a motion to implement that change in relation to the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Act which is covered under section 1(1) of Bill 81.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Cassidy moves that section 4(2) of the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Act, as set out in section 1(1) of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in lines four and five and inserting after the word "council" on line five, the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so that the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Cassidy: The principle of the selection of the regional chairmen that we have in Ottawa-Carleton, and have had since 1968 or thereabouts, has been comparable to what would exist in this Legislature if, after a general provincial election, the Premier of the province were to be appointed from all of the eight million residents of Ontario and not have to have subjected himself, or herself, to a natural process of election in a provincial constituency.

I'm sure that anybody who saw that process at work in this province at the legislative level would deem it entirely undemocratic. If it would be undemocratic to have an unelected person as the Premier of Ontario, it is surely just as undemocratic to have an unelected person having the right to be selected as the chairman, whether it's of Ottawa-Carleton or some other regional municipality. We believe that it is important that every member of local councils, which in the case of Ottawa-Carleton have the responsibility for budgets that exceed $100 million, should have passed the test of approval by the electorate in the same way as they have to pass that test in order to take office within the cabinet or as Premier.

[5:00]

It's hard to see why there should be an exception for any member of the regional council of Ottawa-Carleton or any other municipality. Certainly nobody thinks the alderman for Wellington ward, which I once represented, should be an appointed person. Nobody thinks the representative of Stittsville or West Carleton or some other area like that should be an unelected person. Why, then, should we give to the most powerful person on the regional council of Ottawa-Carleton the privilege of being selected for office without having been elected in the first place? Why should it be that the people of the region as a whole, or the people of any part of that municipality, should not have had the responsibility of ensuring that person was fit to hold office in that most powerful position?

I want to recall to you, Mr. Chairman, the fact that the regional chairman has a number of important responsibilities. In the first place, he or she is the only politician in regional Ottawa-Carleton, as is true in other municipalities as well, who works at regional government full time rather than part-time. The regional chairman is in touch with all of the administrative staff, is the chairman of the executive committee of the region, and through his control and contact with the administrative staff plays an enormous role in shaping the proposals which are often rubber-stamped by the executive, and are just as often rubber-stamped or approved after some debate by the regional council as a whole.

So we have the ludicrous situation where the single member of council with the most power is the one who is not an elected person. That is not democracy, Mr. Chairman, yet it has been perpetuated for a decade by the Conservative government of Ontario in the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Act.

I would like to suggest regional government in this province, particularly in Ottawa-Carleton, is mature enough that it can surely weather the wind of democracy by having the chairman have to face election every two years, just like everybody else. I would like to suggest that some of the misgivings and discontent people are reflecting about regional government across the province of Ontario has been because of the chairman-of-the-board kind of role which has been played by non-elected chairmen, who were in the first place selected by the government down here and who subsequently have not been forced to undergo the process of election.

An election is a very salutary experience. Even if you only face some of the electorate, it gives those electors the chance to put you to the test and to ask why you took a position on certain issues. The prospect of an election can sometimes be a wonderfully clear breath of air in ensuring you see clearly what issues are coming up, whether it is at the municipal level or at the provincial level.

It is for those reasons, Mr. Chairman, that we are proposing and that I am proposing this particular amendment. I hope, in line with their statements when this matter of the election of regional chairman was originally raised a week and a half or so ago, the Liberal Party will agree with the New Democrats and go along with this reform, which is long overdue and which will ensure, in fact, that all and not just some of the members of the regional council of Ottawa-Carleton will be democratically elected.

Mr. Epp: It is a pleasure to be able to speak on this. I am glad to reply to the leader of the third party and say we do agree with him, particularly with his press release which came on June 1, and included a statement by the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) who is the municipal affairs critic for the third party, who indicated very strongly that this is a housekeeping bill. Therefore, we indicated it was a housekeeping bill on May 30 when this act first came before us. We indicated we were in support of having the chairman elected, but we also said this was no time to do it, in essentially a housekeeping bill. The member for Welland-Thorold at that time agreed it was a housekeeping bill.

The election of a chairman of a regional municipality would be more democratic, there is no doubt about that. We have been on record for some years now as supporting the election of the chairman. We did, however, state on May 30, 1978, which was but a few weeks ago, that we would bring in an amendment at the proper time. I want to read for the edification of the chairman and everybody in the House—

Mr. Cassidy: You are going to wait another 10 years.

Mr. Epp: —what the member for Welland-Thorold stated at that time. If you recall, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Roy was speaking at the time and he said: "We used to have a policy that the chairman should be elected at large, but whether he is elected at large or in a district or ward, he is in any event responsible to the electorate. There should be some method whereby this individual, who is after all the most important politician in all of these regional areas, is subject to the will and the whims of the electorate at one level or another."

He goes on to say: "The parliamentary assistant has indicated that in fact other legislation will be forthcoming dealing with various regional areas subject to the reports brought forward in these various areas, such as the Roberts report in Metro or the Mayo report in Ottawa-Carleton." I understand there are further reports in Niagara. As you know, Mr. Chairman, there are further reports that may be coming in the next few days, certainly in the next few months when the House starts sitting in the fall.

Mr. Roy went on to say: "The fact is that we in this party have discussed this matter with our critic . . ."; and he's very complimentary here, "and look forward to the other legislation coming forward. At that time, hopefully, we will put across our view."

Mr. Warner: Lorne wiggles on the hook.

Mr. Epp: "And I must say that I will be in full support of these views, that the regional chairman in fact be elected at one level or another, and that the most important politician in all of these regional areas should be responsible to a group of people who elect him, not only to the members of regional council." It looks like the leader of the third party has picked it out of Mr. Roy's speech, because that's essentially what he was saying.

Now Mr. Swart then interjected on the honourable member from Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and said: "Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, although I may—" he says he may; he doesn't say he did, he doesn't say he didn't, he— "may agree with what the member for Ottawa Centre is saying."

Then Mr. Roy said: "No, no, no; your leader is from Ottawa Centre. Don't confuse me please." Then Mr. Nixon said: "What a mistake. You should be ashamed." Mr. Swart said: "That's the greatest compliment you have been paid in this House." Mr. Speaker: "Order." Mr. Swart said: "I rise on a point of order that—" Mr. Speaker said: "There is nothing out of order." Mr. Swart said: "There is nothing in the bill about election of the chairman."

Now I just want to draw that to your attention, Mr. Chairman, because that's very important. He's obviously made a big flip-flop and it looks like it's the greatest—

Mr. Warner: Lorne, what are you going to do?

Mr. Epp: It's the greatest retreat —

Mr. Warner: You can't wiggle out of it.

Mr. Epp: —the greatest retreat since Napoleon tried to go to Russia back in 1813-1814, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. member: That wasn't a good year, Herb.

Mr. Epp: I think you are a historian, this is the biggest retreat since that time.

Mr. Jones: No surprises though.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Swart said: "There's nothing in the bill about the election of the chairman."

Mr. Speaker said: "There is really nothing out of order." Mr. Nixon said: "except the member." Mr. Swart said: "Therefore the speaker is out of order."

Now I didn't know whether he meant the speaker or Mr. Speaker was out of order, but somebody was out of order according to Mr. Swart. Obviously what Mr. Roy was saying, was out of order, according to Mr. Swart, and he's the critic for that party.

Mr. Speaker said: "You may rise to correct a record but there is really nothing out of order." Mr. Swart said: "I am rising to say the speaker is not speaking to the bill. There is nothing in this bill about the election of the chairman or non-election of the chairman, or how the chairman is going to be selected; I suggest the member is out of order." Mr. Cunningham said: "Yes, there is."

Mr. Roy said: "With respect, Mr. Speaker, if I may, on the point of order, say to my friend from Welland-Thorold, it wouldn't be the first time he is confused, but in any event we are sympathetic and very charitable in this party. I would read to him the section I am talking about. This is section 1(2), which talks about, if we will notice on the right side, election of the chairman." Mr. Nixon said: "Right, got that, Mel?" Mr. Roy said: "I have been accused sometimes of mish-mashing the English language and not understanding what is happening in that language." Mr. Nixon said: "Hardly ever mish-mash." Mr. Roy said: "Here we are, election of chairman. It says 'the regional council shall elect the chairman as one of the members from regional council or any other person.' Is the member going to apologize?" Mr. Nixon: "You didn't get your QC for nothing."

Mr. Swart: "I rise again on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This section he is speaking about of course is the timing of the election of the chairman. It has nothing to do with the procedures of the election of the chairman or whether the chairman should be elected or appointed or anything else of this matter."

Now I want to repeat that, Mr. Chairman, because that's very important and it comes from the third party, it comes from their critic of municipal affairs and says: "The section he is speaking about, of course, is the timing of the election of the chairman. It has nothing to do with the procedures of the election of the chairman or whether the chairman should be elected or appointed or anything else of this nature. I just make the point once again that the speaker is out of order when he is talking about whether regional chairmen should be appointed or elected."

Just a few seconds later Mr. Roy says, ". . . at least to get some suggestions that are in fact in order.

"To continue—I was winding up, Mr. Speaker, when this happened—" Mr. Nixon said: "Oh, yes." Mr. Swart said: "There is a difference between winding up and winding down." I suppose he has got run down.

So there you go, obviously the members of the third party—

Mr. Warner: What are you going to do?

Mr. Cassidy: What are you going to do?

Mr. Warner: Come on, stop waffling.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Can't stand the heat, eh fellows?

Mr. Cassidy: We have just seen another flip-flop in the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Epp: Talking about flip-flopping, I am sure they are projecting their own thoughts because they are such authorities on flip-flopping. I'm sure that one of these days they will write a book on it—

Mr. Makarchuk: Wait until tonight.

Mr. Epp: —because they sure are knowledgeable about it. Anyway, there is no flip-flopping on this side—

Mr. Warner: You just changed policies.

Mr. Epp: —because we indicated when that debate started that this was—

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Epp: Thank you very much, sir. We indicated that this bill dealt with house-keeping items. The third party said it was housekeeping items. This obviously is a major amendment which we will not be supporting, as was indicated a few weeks ago—

Mr. Warner: That's shameful.

Mr. Cassidy: You have backed down again.

Mr. Epp: —and we concur—

Mr. Cassidy: It will be 10 years before we get back to this.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You won't be around that long.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Waterloo North has the floor.

Mr. Warner: You sure have a lot of faith in the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough).

Mr. Epp: It is obvious that the members to my left haven't read the bill as the member for Welland-Thorold has read it. He clearly indicated, as I have just read from Hansard, that it is a housekeeping bill and that they wouldn't be supporting something of that nature. Obviously it would be out of order to suggest an amendment could be made. We won't be supporting the amendment.

Mr. M. Davidson: Should we apply the same principle in Waterloo region?

Mr. Warner: Every region.

Mr. Cassidy: The anti-democratic opposition in Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Epp: When the bill comes in for Ottawa-Carleton—

Mr. M. Davidson: Do you feel the chairman of the Waterloo region should be elected?

Mr. Epp: —and for Niagara, if we have an opportunity we obviously will at that time amend the bill—

Mr. Warner: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Epp: —so that the chairman is an elected person who will guide the affairs of that particular region.

Mr. Warner: We don't need to go through the whole debate on the guided reading lesson we had, but I think the member will recognize that during the entire exchange the Speaker maintained there was nothing out of order; that in fact everything was proceeding, and that the comments Mr. Roy was making were entirely in keeping.

Of course, what Mr. Roy wanted to do was to ensure we would have an elected position for the chairman of the region, but the split in that party is sufficient that that democratic principle can't be upheld. I understand that, I understand the difficulty the Liberal members are having with this concept of having every politician elected. There is a serious split in the party over that.

Mr. Stong: That's derogatory.

Mr. Warner: It is unfortunate that the Liberal Party can't come to grips with that.

Mr. Peterson: If we don't have an election how can we get rid of people like you?

Mr. Warner: It's also unfortunate that some members of the Liberal Party have such great faith in the Treasurer that they can sit back and say; "We'll wait until the bill comes in." We just witnessed a few days ago what the Treasurer intends to do with the legislation on Metro Toronto. We're not going to see it for a long while yet.

So although the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) can dismiss it as house-keeping and that therefore we shouldn't clean house—

Mr. Epp: That's what your colleague said, he said it was housekeeping.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Epp: That's what your press release said.

Mr. Warner: And therefore we shouldn't clean house; he is not prepared to deal with the matter right now, he is going to wait until the Treasurer decides to bring in some other piece of legislation.

I'm not prepared to sit around forever waiting for the Treasurer to make up his mind on when he is going to bring in legislation about Metro Toronto or Ottawa or any other region. We have a bill in front of us. The bill deals with a region. Part of the principle of the politicians operating in that region is that every one of them should be elected.

That's a pretty basic principle and I don't know why you shy away from it. I don't know what kind of logic dissuades the member for Waterloo North from facing up to the principle that every politician should be elected. I can't understand that.

[5:15]

The Prime Minister of this country seeks re-election in his own home riding, as does the Premier of this province and of every province in Canada. Yet for some reason extremely powerful politicians out in the regions should escape from that. They should be allowed something that no one else in Canada is allowed to do. I don't understand that kind of logic. I, for one, am not prepared to accept it.

We have a bill in front of us. If you want to put it in terms of housekeeping, that's quite all right. We're helping to clean up the house of that particular region and some of the other regions. We're going to ensure that the democratic principle of electing politicians is maintained.

What disturbs me, and we'll get around to it in Bill 83, is that you see a press release from the leader of the Liberal Party stating one thing and you get the critic stating the opposite in the House. That obviously isn't a problem for me so much as it is for the Liberal caucus to deal with. The Liberal caucus has to deal with that sort of split, but it's not fair to the people of Ontario. We should have the principle dealt with and that's what we're attempting to do in this legislation.

I commend my colleague from Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) who has put a great deal of time and thought into the amendments he has brought forward. If his amendments carry we have extended that democratic principle of electing our politicians that extra step that's so important, into the regions.

In conclusion, I'd ask the members of the government side to carefully consider how they will approach the amendment. I doubt the amendment is going to cause the fall of the government one way or the other. I doubt that by accepting the amendment you're somehow weakening your position in the province. In fact, I suspect the reverse is true. It's an opportunity for the government to say to the people of Ontario: "We support the democratic principle of electing politicians and we're going to show some leadership."

Perhaps the parliamentary assistant can reconsider his earlier remarks and agree with our amendment. It can be accepted without any further fuss and we can get through this in the next few minutes and get on to other items of concern.

Mr. Swart: The issue that seems to be put before us by the member for Waterloo North and by the Liberals last evening is the appropriateness of the amendment being before us at this time. I think that pretty well sums up the arguments. I see people on my right nodding. I want to take a moment or two to make some comments in addition to those made by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) to indicate that this amendment is properly before us.

In the debate two or three weeks ago I stated in all conscience that I felt the issue was out of order at that time. I was aware that further on in the act there was further reference being made to the matter of the appointment of the regional chairmen. Those sections were not before us, therefore it seemed to me it would be inappropriate at that time to bring in an amendment which would provide for the election of the regional chairmen. Perhaps more correctly stated, it would provide that the chairmen of regional councils should be selected from among the regional council and that he should continue to be a person elected by the public.

That evening the Liberals said I was wrong, and we have had a great deal of Hansard read into the record by the member for Waterloo North. They said they were right, that the matter was appropriately before us at that time. The Speaker ruled in their favour.

It seems to me that any party that was sincere about the chairmen being elected, about making amendments to the various sections of the act, once the Speaker had ruled in their favour, would have followed this up with amendments, at least to find out if amendments were appropriate.

Surely they must recognize that some of these acts, the regional government acts, at least this section, will not be before us, for perhaps two years, five years, or 10 years. We don't know when, if ever, those sections will be before us again. I point out that they refrained, or if they did check they decided against bringing in amendments which would accomplish the things they said they wanted to accomplish when we were debating this on May 30. I just want to read into the record exactly the same section that was read in by the member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Roy, who was speaking on this bill, said: "There should be some method whereby this individual"—speaking about the regional chairman—"who is, after all, the most important politician of all in all of these regional areas, is subject to the will and whims, in fact, of the electorate at one level or another."

I am very disappointed that the government has not found a way whereby this is done, and done automatically. I point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that our amendment does it. They had the option to do it if they were sincere about it. I say to you that after the Speaker ruled the discussion on this was in order, I checked with the legislative staff and the appropriate people in the Speaker's office and found out that an amendment such as this was in order.

The amendment is before us tonight because the party to my right—the member for Waterloo North, the member for York Centre, and others—stated that I was wrong at that time. They knew that it was in order. If they were sincere—

Mr. Stong: I never said that.

Mr. Swart: The member for York Centre says that he didn't state that, but at least two or three members of that party did. I withdraw the statement that he did, but I'm going to quote Hansard for you in just a moment or two. If they really meant what they said in that debate about wanting to see that regional chairmen were elected, they would have brought in an amendment of their own, first of all they would have pursued the matter as I did.

Mr. Cassidy: That's right.

Mr. Breithaupt: Good for you, Mel.

Mr. Swart: Secondly, failing that they would support the amendment which is now before us. I say with all sincerity that no one in or outside of this House can conclude anything other than that the Liberal Party does not want regional chairmen to be elected people. That is a fair statement, otherwise they'd support this amendment. We're not going to have the opportunity of this amendment before us for years and years.

Mr. Cunningham: What's your position on regional government?

Mr. Swart: I've always had the position. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Cunningham: What's your party's position on regional government?

Mr. Swart: I have always had the position that regional chairmen should be elected. I have the brief which I presented to the Niagara study committee in 1966 which said that the regional chairmen should be elected. I haven't changed from that. I think we're going to find out whether some other people have changed from that, but I haven't changed from that.

The real issue before us on the amendment proposed by my leader is not whether I was wrong in saying that it was out of order on May 30.

Mr. Epp: You were wrong once and you're wrong again.

Mr. Swart: The real issue before this House, and every member of this House, is whether we want to assure that the regional chairman is a person elected by at least a constituency, always elected by a constituency. That is the issue before us, and it's properly before us. However it got here, there is no question that that issue today is properly before us.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, there's every reason in the world for the regional chairman to be elected. Many of those reasons have been put forward by my leader. I suggest that the government recognizes this. That's why in the restructured county of Oxford they determined that the chairman there would be elected. Yet just a very few years before, in Haldimand-Norfolk, they decided that the chairman should be appointed.

Mr. Cunningham: And he was defeated.

Mr. Swart: The restructured county of Oxford by the latest figures which I have, has a population of about 85,000. The region of Haldimand-Norfolk has a population of about 87,000. Both have the same kinds of responsibilities for a chairman. In one we have the chairman elected, while in the other the chairman is appointed by the regional council and is not responsible to anyone.

I suggest there is something very basically wrong. As the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) stated, regional chairmen are exceedingly important people in the municipal field. We judge to some extent the value of service which a person is performing by the amount of money he receives. I would point out that the chairman of Ottawa-Carleton receives a remuneration of $48,700. This is just salary and not expenses.

Mr. Peterson: Are you suggesting he's not worth it?

Mr. Swart: I'm not suggesting for a moment he's not worth it. I'm suggesting that if he is worth it he ought to be elected by the people. If he holds such a senior position in municipal government in this province that he receives, I believe, the third highest remuneration of any municipal person in this province; if that position is so important then the public should have some right to say who that person should be.

Down Niagara way, the amount of money which the chairman receives is rather low compared to the rest of them. It is $30,000. The chairman of Metro gets $51,200, a bit more than the mayor of Toronto. If his position is senior to the mayor of Toronto, doesn't it make sense that he too should be elected to that position like the mayor of Toronto? I suggest if anybody here said that the mayor of Toronto should not be elected, anybody here or outside would say: "Oh, my God, are we not going to elect a person in the community to that important position?"

And of course they would be right. By restructuring and so on, we have said that the chairman of a regional council should not be elected. We should go to Durham. They pay him $34,528; in York it is $35,707.50—I don't know where they get the 50 cents or the $7; in Haldimand-Norfolk it is $25,000; in Peel $38,139; and in Halton $25,000, where the member there is only serving part time.

I say without the slightest hesitation that if the positions which they hold are so important—in fact with one or two exceptions they must hold more important positions than the members of the Legislature because they get more remuneration—then surely they should be accountable back to the electorate at election time, by that yardstick alone they should be elected.

Let me also point out that the amount of money which is spent by regional council now equals—or perhaps surpasses, the latest figures aren't available—the amount of money being spent by all the lower tiers in the province. I repeat that the amount of money spent by Metro and regional council now is in excess of the amount of money being spent by all the lower tier governments in this province. In 1974 it was $686 million compared to lower tiers spending $727 million. Since that time I am informed that has changed and that slightly more is being spent by the upper tier.

[5:30]

Whether it is or not, those 11 or 12 upper tier governments now spend more money and have greater responsibilities than the 800 or so other municipalities in this province. By that yardstick alone, I suggest again that the regional chairmen must be elected. If we want to look at their importance, I guess from another angle, it might be the numbers of them who have served on the PMLC. Anybody who goes to these meetings, as the member for Waterloo North does periodically—

Mr. Epp: Almost regularly.

Mr. Swart: —will know that in the last two or three years there have been up to five regional chairmen who have served on that committee, which is supposed to be the group that has the most influence with the Ontario government. I think it is down to one regional chairman serving on that committee this year, but it has been as high as five; the municipalities think those people are so important that they must have them on the PMLC.

Mr. Epp: Are you suggesting that they shouldn't be?

Mr. Swart: I am not suggesting that they shouldn't be. I suggest the member for Waterloo North knows I am not suggesting that they shouldn't be on there. I am saying that if they are in those senior positions, they should be accountable to the public of this province. That is what I am saying and I suggest that the members to the right know that that is what I am saying.

Mr. Roy: Aren't you out of order?

Mr. Epp: Read Hansard.

Mr. Warner: Facts are facts.

Mr. Swart: They have contacts—

Mr. Peterson: Mel, you said it about 16 times now.

Mr. Swart: There are more doors open to those people to get into the Ontario government than to any other municipal officials in the province, and the people on my right know that to be true as well. In fact, I think I am right in saying that nine of the 12 original appointments are there—it may be eight; I am not sure; but eight or nine of the original appointments by the Conservative government of Ontario as chairmen of the regional councils still sit as chairmen of those regional councils.

I would just ask, on what basis do we determine that the head of an important level of government like that should not be elected? Historically in this province we have had direct elections to local government. I guess I have to say that I still favour that even with regional governments. County council is supposed to be a federation; county council now is considered to be a federation, not really another level of government. But a regional government is another level of government. I therefore think that it is desirable that that person be elected by all of those he represents. But, failing that, I suggest that this is a step that we should take and we should take it now.

I know there are a variety of reasons why they say you can't elect those from all the population of the region, relative to size and all of these things—maybe that is an indication why the regions are not functioning properly; they are much too big. But because a region is too big, or for a variety of reasons, the government has appointed that person to start and he may carry on indefinitely if the county council determines that he should do so.

I simply suggest that in this system we have the worst of all worlds. We haven't got the accountability directly back to the public; we haven't even got the accountability indirectly back to the public by that person having to be elected in a certain area.

I say to my colleagues on the right that it is not too late to reconsider. I say to my colleague from York Centre that the reason he gave is not a very good reason why they should vote against these amendments. Let me read what he said: "Insofar as they are in control"—he is talking now about the government across the way—"they can exercise upon us a form of blackmail. That blackmail can take the part of all of what is before us today."

There are two parties to any blackmail, the one who does the blackmailing and the one who is being blackmailed. First of all, I say they are both guilty to some degree. But if we take the attitude in this House that we are going to give in to the other side because they may withdraw some favours from us at some time—

Mr. Epp: Who is giving in, Mel? We said all this weeks ago.

Mr. Swart: We are not giving in. We have moved forward, you have moved backward.

Mr. Epp: Read Hansard, Mel.

Mr. Swart: If we are going to give in to that kind of blackmail then we are going to make no progress at all in minority government. To me, minority government means that the wishes of the majority of this House in general are carried. You people have expressed—

Mr. Peterson: Is this a filibuster, Mel?

Mr. Swart: No, it is not; I am concluding.

The people to the right have expressed their wish, their desire, that the chairmen of regional councils be elected, be accountable back. There is no question that the amendments are properly before us. If we wish this, if we can accomplish it, then I suggest let's do it and let's enhance municipal democracy in this province; because that is exactly what it means and we can't have it fully until we do elect those chairmen.

Mr. Haggerty: I wasn't going to enter the debate, but I just can't resist the opportunity of following the member for Welland-Thorold. He talks about local participation of all the people within the region of Niagara.

Having listened to the member in the Ontario Legislature and listened to him for a number of years on the Welland county council, and the suggestions in the dialogue in the Legislature, it is too bad the member didn't show that initiative some seven or eight years ago when regional government was talked about among certain members of the county council.

The dialogue then, and as it is today in the Ontario Legislature would have meant the people would have been better informed in the former county of Welland; and if they had been better informed at that time we would never have had regional government in Niagara.

The honourable member attended the special trip to Sweden. It was sponsored partly by the county of Welland and I think the Ford Foundation. I could be wrong on that particular part, but he was one of the chosen members from county council and from the Ontario Association of Municipalities to attend Europe to look at some of the regional government set-ups in Sweden and Germany and so forth.

I have often coined the phrase that he is the godfather of regional government in the Niagara Peninsula. Definitely he comes down hard on both sides of regional government now, as he did then, in not telling us in what direction the party is going.

I can see reasons, perhaps, for the suggestion that the chairman should be elected at large throughout the regional municipality of Niagara, but if that applies to the chairman it also should apply to other persons who are elected from the municipality, such as the mayor who automatically becomes a member of regional Niagara.

I suggest if we are going to have one election at large, we should have all members of Niagara region elected at large. It is only common sense to take this approach. If you want participation of the public, then it must come about this way, not because you appoint him.

We have the white paper on the Archer report and the response by the government to the Archer report, suggesting the city of St. Catharines perhaps should have one more member. That is still going to cause some difficulties.

There are other areas within the region that are not taken into consideration, areas where population increases due to summer residents, who require all the services a normal resident or property owner require 12 months of the year.

I understand there are other amendments coming to the Niagara region bill. I think we should be looking at the matter of election of council, all of them, at large, from the whole region.

Mr. Chairman: May I say to the honourable member that is not in this particular section.

Mr. Haggerty: No, it's not in that particular section, but we're still dealing with the matter of appointment of the chairmen and electing the chairmen from within the county.

Mr. Chairman: That's correct.

Mr. Ruston: It is the amendment we're dealing with.

Mr. Haggerty: The point I'm trying to convey is I think there is merit in what he's saying. I would like to see it go all the way. It's going to cause difficulties. When he talks about accountability, for example, you can have a mayor elected from a town or a municipality, or a city I should say, within the community, within the regional structure, and he could also become chairman. I'll tell you, he can't serve two masters. There is no way, with the work load that is put on the regional chairman.

I might say this much, the present regional chairman, Mr. John Campbell, who is appointed, is doing an excellent job. Perhaps without his leadership regional government would not be moving that much forward in a sense, that is to say that with the other serious difficulties there, it wouldn't function as well as it has to date.

I spoke on the regional bill when it was first introduced here in the Legislature and I'm not definitely sold on regional government. I can see a larger form of government, a restructuring of county council if you want to put it that way, which would put the cities back in under a county form of government. Restructure a county government, I think this is good, but I suggest the time isn't right to come back and say we're going to have the regional chairman elected at large, because there's going to be quite an expense involved.

The other reason I would oppose it right now is I think there must be guidelines set on the salaries. When you look back at the first regional bill for Niagara, I think this is one of the matters the former member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) and I raised in the debate. At that time, we thought there should be some guidelines on salaries. That was for staff, clerks and so forth. That never came about. I'll tell you, it just mushroomed throughout that community. Salaries increased almost 100 per cent. The cost of administration of regional government is one of the difficulties the taxpayer is facing now.

In some cases, they question whether the benefit is that great in this particular area.

So I suggest to the member for Welland-Thorold that he may be correct to a certain extent, but I think he is pushing a little bit too far at the present time. If he had only shown that initiative back in 1964-1965 in the county of Welland, regional government would never have been there.

Now he is taking the stand to say, "I'm for regional government on a particular thing, but I'm opposed to it overall." I don't know just what his position is. He comes down hard on both sides of it. I'm as lost today as I was back some 10 years ago when there was no debate about regional government in the former county of Welland. The debate or that particular issue was kept away from members. It was all hidden in secret meetings attended by a certain few elected persons within the county of Welland at that particular time. That's perhaps one of the reasons we now have regional government in the area. But hopefully, with your restructuring of county government, you will have an open book so all the taxpayers and all ratepayers will have a full understanding of the direction this government wants to lead us.

Mr. Charlton: I'll be brief, but I just want to make a few points about a number of things that concern me about this debate going on here today.

On May 30, when we were debating this bill on second reading, my colleague the member for Welland-Thorold raised the question about whether or not discussing regional chairmen and their election or non-election was in order at that point, given the sections of this bill. The members of the Liberal caucus, the party to the right of me here, went to great pains to impress upon the Speaker that in fact, the discussion and debate on regional chairmen and their election was in order. They made the point and the Speaker ruled in their favour. That was quite clear on May 30. Now the member for Waterloo North is attempting to tell us it's not in order in this place, on these sections, with this bill; and that "We've admitted that we were wrong."

Mr. Samis: A man of his word.

Mr. Peterson: Why have you changed?

Mr. Roy: That's what your member said, you should apologize.

Mr. M. Davidson: Which is something more than you would do.

[5:45]

Mr. Charlton: The members of the party to my right should now either admit they are wrong or very simply support the amendments.

Mr. Peterson: That's where you are wrong.

Mr. Charlton: I have sat in this House for almost a year now. I have watched on a number of occasions the members of the Liberals caucus accuse this caucus of posturing. I would like to say here to this House and to the people of the province of Ontario—

Mr. T. P. Reid: After a full year, with all your experience.

Mr. Charlton:—that when the members of the Liberal caucus went to great pains to make the point clear that the discussion under this bill of the election of regional chairmen was in order, they were just posturing for whatever publicity they could gain or they should now put up and support these amendments to see that the things they supported in the debate become a reality.

The members of the Liberal caucus and the members of this caucus have made it quite clear to this House that we support the proposition of the elected accountability of regional chairmen. All of them have got up, one after another, and said that they supported the idea of elected chairmen. The argument they have used against supporting these amendments that we are proposing is that the government across the way is holding us up to blackmail and may withdraw the bill.

Mr. Epp: You are the one who said that.

Mr. Charlton: I say to the members of the Liberal caucus, that I have worked with them in committee where we have moved amendments which both parties have supported. That's what minority government is all about.

Mr. Peterson: You have learned a lot.

Mr. Charlton: If the party to my right gives way to blackmail by the government, then this minority parliament can never work effectively to the benefit of the people of the province of Ontario. For the members of the caucus of the party to my right to be so naive as to hope that in the case of Metro Toronto and each one of the regions listed in this bill the Treasurer and the government across the way are going to give them another shot in the very near future—

Mr. Peterson: We can trust you to back off.

Mr. Charlton:—at making regional chairmen elected, responsible and accountable, then they are sadly mistaken because it just won't happen again in any hurry. In fact, the government is probably shaking its head behind the scenes that it let this bill come before us in a form in which we could do this.

Mr. Peterson: We can take for granted whatever the Treasurer does today he will change tomorrow.

Mr. Charlton: The question here for us today on each of the sections of this bill relating to the different regions is whether we support the concept and the proposition that regional chairmen should be elected. If we do, then we should support the amendments which are being placed now, to provide that this fall, in the elections, which are about to occur in the regional municipalities in the province of Ontario, the regional chairmen will be elected.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa East.

Mr. M. Davidson: Another Liberal flip-flop.

Mr. Roy: I think it's important that we again state our position clearly on the record—

Mr. Warner: How can it be clear?

Mr. Makarchuk: Which position are you setting right now?

Mr. Roy:—as we had done on May 30. When I look at the debate on May 30, we had stated at that time, and I said it at that point, that we were looking forward to the legislation coming from the ministry. The parliamentary assistant had given us his undertaking that we would be seeing legislation in the section on the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton dealing with the Mayo report. At that time, as my colleague the critic has said we will be bringing forward amendments to have the regional chairman elected.

Mr. Warner: When is that bill coming forward?

Mr. Roy: It's a principle which we believe in and which we will certainly follow.

Mr. Warner: You are lucky to be here and you know it.

Mr. Roy: The thing I find confusing about the people to my left is that from day to day I really wonder how they even find this place to get here since they are so confused.

Mr. Cooke: We are consistent; that's what confuses you.

Mr. Roy: Sometimes we vote with them out of sympathy, I suppose, because they are so confused.

Mr. Makarchuk: The day you figure things out, we will all be in trouble.

Mr. Roy: I recall the debate on May 30, Mr. Chairman, and certainly that's been brought to your attention. I'll not ask you to make another ruling on it, but at that time when we were stating our position regarding the election of the regional chairmen—

Mr. Warner: Which position?

Mr. Roy: —their critic, the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), as my colleague our critic has said, said it very clearly on the record. He argued vociferously at that time, that he wanted a ruling of the Speaker. He got up on a point of order and said: "I rise on a point of order. There is nothing in the bill about the election of the chairman. Therefore, the speaker is out of order." That's what he said at that time. He went on to repeat it: "I am rising to say the speaker is not speaking on the bill." He said: "There is nothing in the bill about the election of the chairman or the non-election of the chairman." And he repeated it another time.

Mr. Warner: You gave us that little number before.

Mr. Swart: What did you say? You are proved wrong and I am proved right.

Mr. Roy: I'd like to see him apologize, because I was making a very good speech that evening, we were moving along. He interrupted me. He was the one who was out of order. And lo and behold, we come back to the House, and he now has amendments on a point of order in which he says we were out of order. To be more confused than that I think would be impossible.

But to restate our position, we believe in the election of the chairman. We said it for the record.

Mr. Swart: You won't vote for it. You believe in the election and you won't vote for it.

Mr. Roy: You know, sometimes we like to support you, confused as you are. If you bring amendments at the proper time we will support them.

Mr. Swart: When is the proper time, Albert?

Mr. Roy: We said it at that time, when the legislation comes forward.

Mr. Makarchuk: When will it come forward, Albert?

Mr. Roy: My God, they are a vociferous bunch. I just wish they had their leader here to give them a sense of direction; to get his roller skates on and give them a proper sense of direction.

Mr. Chairman, we said when the legislation comes forward, and it is a principle we believe in, we will be moving amendments at that time. We gave our word and the parliamentary assistant knows that. He knows what our position is. As our critic has said, at that time we are for the election of the chairman.

Interjections.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Ottawa East has the floor.

Mr. Peterson: My colleague is not being provocative, give him a chance to express himself.

Interjections.

Mr. Chairman: Order; the member for Ottawa East, please.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, thank you for the order—

Mr. Makarchuk: Extricating him from his position, whatever that may be.

Mr. Roy: I know that I'm right on when I hear the yappers get going to my left, I know then they're in trouble.

Mr. Chairman: Would the honourable member continue on the amendment?

Mr. Roy: I'm sorry, but when I hear the honourable members to my left start yapping, I know they're in trouble. They usually do that in that party when they find the time. It's embarrassing.

We subscribe to the principle of the amendment, there's no doubt about it. It's just that their timing is wrong.

Mr. Makarchuk: However, as a matter of principle we don't intend to vote for the principle.

Mr. Roy: In fact we spoke about it. They are plagiarizing our comments from that time and drafting them into an amendment. We don't mind that, they have got a copy.

Mr. Makarchuk: As a matter of principle? You never spoke to the principle.

Mr. Roy: We said that when the bills come forward, the proper bills, we will make the adequate amendments. There is no backing off from our principle. This is a principle we have always followed. This is a principle we believe in. Our position was consistent on second reading. We put it on the record, that's more than I can say for our colleagues to the left. Our position will be consistent at the time of the amendments; when the proper bills come forward we will move the amendments then.

Mr. Cooke: Put your vote where your mouth is.

Mr. Roy: This is something that we believe in. For the members to our left to suggest that we are backing off from our principle somehow is really detracting from the truth.

Mr. Cooke: You can't back off from what you don't have.

Mr. Swart: Not the principle, you didn't mean what you said.

Mr. Roy: I want to make it very clear that I and my colleagues in caucus believe in the principle. I sure wish the member for Welland-Thorold would get his act together and try to be consistent from May 30 to today.

Mr. Swart: It bothers you that you have to vote on the amendment, doesn't it, Albert?

Mr. Warner: He should have stayed in Ottawa.

Mr. M. Davidson: I think it is quite evident that the amendment, moved by the member for our side of the House is one that consists of one principle and one principle only. That is, that people with responsibility within municipal government, or any other government that exists, should, in some way or another be an elected person, one who is answerable to the constituency.

Such is the case before us. We have found within regional government that does not always hold true. We have, within regional government today, many people who were appointed to that position, and that appointment has been maintained over a number of years.

I really don't know what it is that the Liberal Party finds inconsistent with our position. I'm sure that the members from the region in which I live, who happen to be in the Liberal Party, are well aware of what I have been saying about the chairman in the Waterloo regional area and how that person should be elected. I find it a little inconsistent on the part of the member for Waterloo North. I heard his comments as I was sitting out there and that's what attracted me into this legislative chamber. I heard the comments he was making. I'm quite certain he would not go back to the Waterloo region and advocate the same policy there that he was advocating here in this Legislature.

Mr. Epp: I'm consistent.

Mr. M. Davidson: If people were to get copies of the K-W Record, the local newspaper for the area in which he lives, and find some of the statements he has been making regarding the regional governments in that area, I think they would find that the statements are exactly contrary to what he said here today.

I, for one, don't understand that. I would suggest that the member be consistent in what he's saying here in this legislative chamber and in the Waterloo region; or say what he says in the Waterloo region here in the House so that we're all well aware of the position he has. I can only take it for granted now that the member has two positions; one which he's prepared to give publicly and one which he gives here in the legislative chamber.

I would hate to think that is the case, because I happen to like the member for Waterloo North. I think he's a very fine fellow. I would hate to think his party has led him to the position he has taken. When he was the mayor of Waterloo he was always known to be a fair-minded person. He was always known to take a consistent position. I would hate to think that his election to this legislative chamber and sitting over there with the Liberal Party has warped his mind so badly that he has lost the consistency for which he has always been noted.

I can only suggest that what we have here is an appropriate amendment at this time. It is an amendment that will ensure that people who sit in the chairmanship of regional governments are people who are elected and who are responsible to the constituency that they represent.

Mr. Ashe: I think one thing that's been very interesting in this whole consideration of this first amendment is the third party's inconsistency in their philosophies and statements.

I'm not going to go over the first one in detail again. It relates to whether the item is in order or out of order. I think that point has been adequately made.

When it comes to somebody else speaking on an issue, the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) figures the item is out of order and he made a strong case to indicate that; not very long afterwards he flip-flopped.

I think the other important consideration is that the third party is always suggesting to the government that on all items of major import relating to municipalities consultation should take place whether they be local municipalities, counties or regional governments.

Yet here is this party putting forth a very major amendment that would change the whole procedure of how regional council is made up, operated and so on, literally on the spur of the moment after deciding that an out of order motion really is in order.

Mr. Chairman: It's very close to 6 of the clock. Does the parliamentary assistant have many more comments?

Mr. Ashe: Yes, I think we'll leave it over until 8 o'clock.

Mr. Chairman: Fine.

Mr. Ashe: I'm just getting wound up.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, while we still have members of the committee here: when we come back at 8 we'll be carrying on from where we left off. Of course, in accordance with the schedule which has been announced, I think it has been generally agreed that when we finish the municipal bills in committee there may be some division called for and that we would hold the bell until 10:15 tonight and carry on with the rest of the program. We would then go back into committee at 10:15 and clean up any divisions that may be necessary at that time. There will be one bell tonight at 10:15. In the meantime we'll try to accomplish and complete as much of this program as we can.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITIES AMENDMENT ACT (continued)

House in committee on Bill 81, An Act to amend certain Acts respecting Regional Municipalities.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: I believe the parliamentary assistant had some further comments.

Mr. Ashe: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At the 6 o'clock dinner adjournment, I was just attempting to summarize the inconsistencies put forward by the third party in their dealing with municipal government and municipalities.

In brief summary, Mr. Chairman, you will recall I spoke about the inconsistencies as put forward by the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) relating to the subject.

Mr. Foulds: It will be hard to find any inconsistency in there.

Mr. Ashe: Whether it was in order or not, once he found out it was appropriate in his opinion he decided it was in order, although he brought forth strong arguments to suggest that the item was out of order—

Mr. Laughren: Speaking of inconsistencies.

Mr. Ashe:—when he was not the speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Are you challenging the chairman's ruling?

Mr. Ashe: The other very important item relating to the inconsistencies of that party concerned the whole process of how we as a government deal at all levels with the other level of government known as local government.

We are always being chastised, criticized if you will, by members of that party for not having enough consultation with the municipalities, with municipal government, with county government, with local government, with the municipal institutions and with the local organizations.

Mr. Laughren: You don't even consult with the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck).

Mr. Ashe: We all know the record speaks for itself—that we have a much higher attention ratio in our relationship with the other sector of government than do many of the members and in fact, does the third party.

Mr. Laughren: You're being silly now.

Mr. Ashe: I think the particular motion we have before us is very indicative of that flip-flop, if you will.

Mr. Laughren: Why don't you stop being so silly.

Mr. Ashe: There is no way that we, as a government, would bring forth major legislation dealing with changes and how local government operates without consulting.

Mr. Laughren: What a silly person you are.

Mr. Ashe: Yet, that's exactly what has happened with this amendment.

Mr. Laughren: You're getting yourself in deeper. You're being sillier by the minute.

Mr. Ashe: There's one very important other item as far as I'm concerned; I suppose you could put it in the same vein. We have heard very eloquent speeches from time to time by members from all sides of the House, but I think probably concentrated among some members of the third party—

Interjections.

Mr. Ashe:—who are known to be very eloquent—that is to say, Mr. Chairman, if you equate eloquence with length, but not necessarily substance. One of the arguments continuously brought forward is that local government in all its forms should have more authority to make its own decisions; that they are a very conscientious group of people, they are elected by the people around them and they should make their own choices as much as possible.

Basically, I don't think there is any great disagreement with that. But the inconsistency in this particular motion is that we are not giving any credit at all to the thoroughness of local government, elected people particularly, as they are represented at the regional council level.

The present legislation reads—and I am not going to quote the whole section, but the relevant words are “that the council may elect one of the members of the regional council or any other person.” We are suggesting that the local council is in a better position than anyone else to determine whether they, the elected representatives, wish to have somebody—

Mr. Laughren: We know what you're saying—and you're wrong.

Mr. Ashe: Be consistent; that is all I am saying. Just be consistent.

Mr. Laughren: We are.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Did you ever hear of democracy?

Mr. Laughren: You are antidemocratic.

Mr. Ashe: We are suggesting that members of the local elected government know better than anyone who they wish to be their chairman, whom they wish to lead them in their deliberations.

Mr. Laughren: They're better than the people who elected them. That's what you are trying to tell us.

Mr. Ashe: If they feel the best person is among themselves, they have that authority now that they can go ahead and elect a chairman from among themselves.

Mr. Laughren: Why don't you quit while you're losing?

Mr. Ashe: If they feel the job of chairman would be better served at that particular point in time by someone outside the council, they also have that right.

Mr. Laughren: We know that. Is this some kind of sermon you're giving us?

Mr. Ashe: I think that is consistency, and that is not the consistency that is brought forth in this particular amendment that we have before us.

We also talk about, and part of the argument is, the democratic right of everybody being elected.

Mr. Laughren: You are getting sillier by the moment.

Mr. Ashe: You can argue both sides of the story.

Mr. Foulds: Both sides of your mouth.

Mr. Ashe: But let's agree that everything is relative—

Mr. Foulds: That's a heresy of the 18th century.

Mr. Ashe: A regional chairman also has an electorate. True, it is an electorate of 20, or 25, or 30, or 32, or 27, as the case may be. But that is an electorate. Everything is relative as to size.

Mr. Foulds: That's called an oligarchy.

Mr. Ashe: We have also seen leaders of parties come forward on the basis of a small minority of the people they are going to work with, and it is quite obvious the problems that causes.

Mr. Foulds: William Davis is one of those leaders.

Mr. Ashe: We are seeing every day, by the representation from and in the leadership of the third party across from us, that a small minority of the people who surround that person really didn't choose the leader. We can see how it is very practical to have the people in government decide who will be their chairman.

Mr. Foulds: I used to think that you had potential; you're going to be a permanent parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Ashe: It is funny, they don't like to hear those things when we are talking about the facts.

These are the reasons why this particular amendment before you, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, is not appropriate at any time—but, in any event, not appropriate at this point. I would hope that the inconsistencies that brought forth this amendment at this point will be turned down.

Mr. Swart: We always stood for electing them.

Mr. Laughren: You are raising trivia to an art form.

Mr. Ashe: In the interval I hope some of the members in that party will have a chance to think about their inconsistencies and maybe next time around they will be a little more consistent.

Mr. Laughren: You're worse than the member for Carleton-Grenville (Mr. Sterling).

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Cassidy has moved an amendment to section 1(1) of the bill.

Mr. Ashe: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman: I don't see the mover of that motion present in this House.

Mr. Foulds: He has already moved it.

Mr. Chairman: It has been moved and it is not necessary in committee for the mover to be present.

Shall the amendment carry?

All those in favour of the amendment will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 2 to 14, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 15:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 3 of section 7 of the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act as set out in section 15, subsection 1 of the bill be amended by striking out the words, "or any other person" in lines four and five and inserting after the word "council" in line five, the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so the subsection shall read:

"At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

I guess I misunderstood the honourable member. This is—

Mr. Swart: Part II, section 15.

Mr. Chairman: Part II, yes, okay.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, may I ask for a ruling or a consensus, or what you have, for the sake of all of the members' time? As all the members in the House know, particularly the honourable member for Welland-Thorold opposite, we now have, in effect, 10 items that are identical. Is it required by the rules that each one must be read into the record?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Ashe: In other words, they are to do with each section? It just seems to me to be such an absolute waste of time. Hopefully, at least then, we won't have the debate all over again.

Mr. Laughren: Of course, you are anti-democratic to start with.

Mr. Chairman: I appreciate the honourable member's question. I would have to say, as chairman of the committee, that it's up to this committee to discuss and amend any section before the committee, which is every section in this bill. If any member wishes to place an amendment, if it's within order, the chair will have to accept it.

Mr. Laughren: Despite the anti-democratic tendencies of the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I'm somewhat surprised the member for Durham West would rise to suggest we shouldn't read each of the amendments we have. This matter may not be of great significance to him but in this party, it's of real concern to us whether those who head the major and all municipal councils in this province are elected or are appointed, as is now the case.

Of course, the amendment which we have before us does exactly the same thing the amendment did with regard to Ottawa-Carleton, that is to state the chairman of the Niagara regional council shall be selected from the elected members of the council. It will remove the option of the council to pick from outside the council a person who has not received any endorsement from the public, or has not been elected to any municipal position in that region.

It's not really a question of whether the chairman is competent or whether he is a fine person.

Mr. Sterling: How can you do both jobs?

Mr. Swart: I just want to assure you that Mr. John Campbell—

Mr. Sterling: Just whether the guy can do both jobs.

Mr. Swart: —the chairman of the Niagara region, is the kind of a person any one of us would like to have as a personal friend. He's a gentleman. I don't think I can conceive of him, even if he's elected to this august chamber, ever deteriorating to the state that some of the rest of us have, and attacking those who sit opposite. I sat with them for three years and John Campbell is a fine person.

But that is not the question. And it is not really a question of whether the regional council operates efficiently, or whether it is well administered. The real question is who decides whether he is the right person to be chairman of that very important position on council. Shall that rest solely with the 20, 25 or 30 members, as the member for Durham West believes is adequate, or shall the public have some say in whether that person is going to sit on council and by virtue of that, be elected as chairman of council?

Well, we in this party, as you already know, opt for the last proposal. The member for Durham West commented that we should give more autonomy to local council. This is something with which I am in wholehearted agreement. But that is an area for council's discretion; to exercise its function once it has been elected.

I never wanted to give vested interests on council the right to determine who shall sit on the council and not be accountable to the public. If you are going so far in the whole field of autonomy, what is the meaning of the Municipal Act? Why not let them decide if they want to have elections every two years or three years? Why do we have 400 or 500 pages of instructions and regulations, under which councils have to function?

Mr. Laughren: Good question.

Mr. Swart: Of course, constitutionally the provincial government has the responsibility for the framework in which municipalities function. The responsibility rests with this government, not with the local council, to determine whether that chairman is going to hold that office by virtue of being elected by the public or be appointed by the other members of the regional council.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If you guys had your way, you would crown Seatbelt Johnston.

Mr. Swart: I want to say, Mr. Chairman, and any of the members who have sat on regional council with an appointed chairman know this to be true, that an appointed person who is not accountable to the electorate in any way functions somewhat differently than if he has to go out and get votes at election time.

Mr. Ashe: Not necessarily.

Mr. Swart: Yes, I think you might. Let me just give you one example, Mr. Chairman, one example.

Interjections.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Swart: Let me give one example to the member for Durham West. This may seem like a small example but I say it is typical.

You know that for years the chairman of Niagara region did not have a listed telephone number where he could be reached; his home telephone number was not listed, at least not in his name. It is listed now because a year or two ago, I brought up the fact in this Legislature that he did not have a listed telephone number where people could get in touch with him.

Mr. Epp: Do you have one now?

Mr. Swart: Oh, yes, I think all of us have a listed telephone number; it is part of the whole political process so the public can get in touch with us. But if you don't have to go out at election time to be elected, then you don't approach the public in the same way. In fact, you don't have to be concerned with what the public thinks. The chairman of a regional council who has no constituency—nobody elects him—is ingrown to the extent that he is concerned with what the 20, 25 or 30 members of that regional council think of him, not with what the public thinks about the way he is discharging his duties.

That is another way, I guess, of saying that this whole process that we have now is contradictory to all the principles of democracy.

While I am speaking about the amendment which would provide that the chairman in Niagara must have a constituency and can only be elected chairman if he's elected from a constituency in the region, I would like to say something in reply to the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) who spoke near the end of the debate on the Ottawa-Carleton regional act. He stated that he—and I think I am quoting his words exactly—"wished I had shown some initiative seven or eight years ago in the Niagara region." Well, I just want to say to him, and I hope his colleagues will convey this to him, that—

An hon. member: In shorthand.

Mr. Swart: —I believe I showed considerable initiative at that time. In 1966, when the commission was sitting in Niagara to consider the structuring of the Niagara region—at that time we didn't know whether it was going to be a change within the two counties or one region to cover the two counties—I presented a 28-page brief, Mr. Chairman, to that commission. In that brief I spoke about the election of the regional chairman and I said this and I quote from that brief: "It naturally follows that I would also recommend that the head of the regional council be elected. On this there must be no compromise." That's what I said, in fact, in 1966.

Mr. Stong: Are you quoting yourself, Mel?

Mr. Swart: I said I do not believe the holder of any such exceedingly important office should be put in that kind of a position.

Mr. Stong: He is reading from one of his own speeches.

Ms. Gigantes: You're jealous.

Mr. Swart: He or she should be answerable to the electorate and should be subject to re-election if he and the voters desire it. That was back in 1966, so I think we are being somewhat consistent in the view—

Mr. Sterling: Yes, rubbish then and rubbish now.

Mr. Swart: —we are taking here this evening. For the sake of the record too, Mr. Chairman, in this brief I also stated that in my view the water and sewer administration operation should remain at the local level, not the regional level. I stated there should be two counties—

Mr. Sterling: You won't sell that in Ottawa-Carleton.

Mr. Swart: —or regions instead of one, as one was much too large. I also proposed there should be 17 municipalities to give greater accountability and service to the public.

Mr. Chairman: The member is coming back to the amendment, I hope.

Mr. Swart: I'm coming back to the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I proposed 17 municipalities instead of the 12 on which they ultimately decided. I say very clearly it is on record that I and my party over the years have consistently supported the principle that the chairman of a regional council should either be elected at large within the region or should be elected from a constituency in the region and only by virtue of that election would he be eligible to the office of chairman of the region.

I guess I am not terribly surprised at those on the opposite side of this House opposing this amendment. I think they oppose it in principle. It's part of their belief. They have always had some difficulty in accommodating public input, regardless of where it is.

Mr. Sterling: Rubbish.

Mr. Gregory: Oh, that's nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Swart: They fought for years and years against all the attempts of various special interest groups to have a say in environment or whatever the case may be.

Mr. Gregory: Do you really think anybody is going to read this?

Mr. Swart: They eventually and grudgingly gave in on some of these issues, but they've consistently followed the principle of keeping the public out of government affairs as much as possible.

Mr. Foulds: It is part of the Tory tradition.

Mr. Gregory: This isn't exactly a best seller.

An hon. member: If you weren't a Tory, you didn't get in.

Mr. Swart: The members on my right do bother me—

Mr. J. Reed: Yes, we are on the right.

Mr. Foulds: You are to the right of those guys.

Mr. Ashe: I hope you stay there too.

Mr. Swart:—a little bit, primarily because of their continued expression that the chairman of regional council should, in fact, be elected. I have listened very carefully to their arguments, and quite frankly, I can't make much sense out of them. First of all, they say that somehow or other this must be out of order.

Mr. Sterling: You usually are.

Mr. Swart: Of course this amendment is not out of order. It is perfectly in order.

Mr. Stong: Justify yourself.

Mr. Swart: The Speaker ruled in their favour, in fact, that it is in order, so you can't get out of it on that excuse. Then they say, "It's just not the right time. We'll do it when the bills come back at some future time." Three or four of you said that. "We have committed ourselves," they say. "When the bills are brought back, we will move an amendment to provide that the regional chairmen be elected."

When are the bills going to be brought back? We don't know if we are even going to get a bill for Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. J. Reed: In the fullness of time.

Mr. Swart: We might get one for Ottawa, but when are we going to get one for Niagara? Hamilton-Wentworth? Or Sudbury? There's no proposal by the government to bring in those bills.

Mr. Sterling: I hope we don't hear the same argument.

Mr. Roy: Why didn't you say that on second reading instead of saying they were out of order?

Mr. Swart: It could be two years, five years. The only other argument I've heard is, "Well, if we support this, the government is going to use blackmail against us on other bills." I mentioned that before the dinner hour, and I am not going to go into it again. If there is any other argument besides those three, and if they have any additional speakers, I would like to hear—

Mr. Mackenzie: A legitimate argument for a change.

Mr. Sterling: I would like to hear a legitimate argument, too.

Mr. Swart: Because quite frankly, those arguments—

Mr. Mackenzie: Why do you Tories waffle all over the place.

Mr. Swart:—those arguments are not very convincing to me. When we have a bill before us—and we will not have these bills again, certainly a whole group of them, until we don't know when, perhaps never. To have all—

Mr. Mackenzie: Have a look at the bill, Albert. You can trust them?

Mr. Swart:—the 11 regional government bills before us at one time, we can bring about the elections of regional chairmen is an opportunity that may not arise again in this House for years and years.

Mr. Mackenzie: You should have learned by now, Albert.

Mr. Swart: I say quite frankly to anyone who is interested in seeing that the regional chairmen are elected—that they can no longer be appointed and not have any local constituency and no accountability—this is the time to do it.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, could I have a point of order?

Mr. Chairman: Order. Point of order.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to your attention standing order 16(3) of this House which states that a speaker shall be called to order if he persists in needless repetition. That's what is happening.

Mr. Chairman: I appreciate the comments of the member for Ottawa East. I was listening very carefully and they are repetitious to the extent that they were referred to on a previous amendment before the House.

Mr. Foulds: How would the member for Ottawa East know? He hasn't been in the House.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order. Is the member for Welland-Thorold finished?

Mr. Swart: Yes, I am.

Mr. Epp: I would like to congratulate the member for Welland-Thorold in his opening comments as his campaign now starts for the leadership of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Ashe: When is the convention?

Mr. Laughren: Collective leadership.

Mr. Epp: Without trying to be repetitious, I do want to draw the chair's attention to the statement the member for Welland-Thorold made only two weeks ago tonight, on May 30. Without reading the whole thing, he was trying to appeal to the people who are here tonight, trying to be so lucid and logical about everything. I think they should see the other side. Only two weeks ago, he got up in his place and said, "I rise again on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The section he is speaking about"—that's the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), a colleague of mine, just a tremendous person—"of course, is the time of the election of the chairman. It has nothing to do with the procedures of the election of the chairman or whether the chairman should be elected or appointed, or anything else of this nature. I just make the point once again that the speaker is out of order when he is talking about whether regional chairmen should be appointed or elected."

Now, there he is, making a big flip-flop, trying to be logical in a very illogical sense.

Mr. Laughren: Order. He's out of order.

Mr. Roy: Why don't you have a free vote? [8:30]

Mr. Epp: To expedite matters, as you know, Mr. Chairman, we're not going to support this amendment because we were the ones who talked about it first and we were the ones who said this wasn't the appropriate time to do it. The member for Welland-Thorold was the one who so convincingly, to his own colleagues, tried to suggest that this was an appropriate time. We will oppose this amendment. I hope the other amendments that come up are expedited a little more quickly.

Mr. Ashe: Contrary to at least one of the members of the third party, I respect the time of this House and will not comment further.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment to section 15(1) of the bill will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 16 to 26, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 27:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that section 3(1a) of the Regional Municipality of York Act as set out in section 27 of the bill be struck out and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

"(1a) Notwithstanding paragraph 2 of subsection 1, on and after December 1, 1978 the council of the town of Markham shall, in addition to the mayor, be composed of 10 members, three of whom shall be elected by a general vote of the electors of the area municipality as members of the council of the area municipality and of the regional council and, except as may be provided under subsection 3a, seven members elected by wards."

Mr. Ashe: If I may indicate the necessity for this change, the original bill that was enacted in 1976 overlooked the fact that there was a change in the size of the local council of the town of Markham. Subsection 3b of the legislation in 1976 enabled the minister to alter the number of persons elected to the Markham council by order, if the municipality so requested. It did so request, and by order in August 1976 the minister divided one of the two Markham wards and hence increased the size of the local council by one.

Mr. Stong: Very briefly, I'd like to address myself to the fact that I too received correspondence from the town of Markham with respect to this particular change. It had been regarded by the town of Markham as an oversight and a typographical error. I appreciate the parliamentary assistant making this amendment so that it would reflect the actual situation as it now exists in the town of Markham. We will be supporting without doubt this amendment.

Mr. Swart: I rise too, to support this. I would point out that blackmail wasn't necessary. The government had a majority on this side of the House to get this through in York. If we are concerned about some kind of proportional representation by population, though this doesn't make it quite proportional, then I think we have to support this addition in the size of the local council and also the addition which was proposed in this bill for the regional councils.

Motion agreed to.

Section 27 as amended agreed to.

Sections 28 and 29 agreed to.

On section 30:

Mr. Swart: It will come as no surprise that I have a motion on this.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that subsection 8 of the Regional Municipality of York Act, as set out in section 30, subsection 1 of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in lines four and five and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council," so the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council, provided he continues to be a member of the council, and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the officer appointed under section 19 shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Swart: I'm not going to take any great length of time on this. I think it is important to point out that we have just passed one amendment—

Mr. Mancini: Who speaks for Metro? Who's for Metro?

Mr. Swart: —which strengthened the regional council in York and that the regional municipality of York is an exceedingly important part of this province. I'm sure anybody who represents that area would want to have the maximum in democracy in that area, especially when it's so close to the city of Toronto where a particular party is hopeful of picking up—vainly perhaps—some seats in the next provincial election. Therefore, this is a key to that whole issue. I would expect that people living within that region particularly would be anxious to see this amendment approved.

Mr. Stong: Very briefly, perhaps I can respond to the urging of the member for Welland-Thorold. I might say that being a member who represents part of the regional municipality of York I have been persuaded by the eloquence and the common-sense approach of the governing party in presenting this bill and the arguments presented by my colleagues of my own party in voting against this amendment.

Mr. Roy: I might state as well that members to my left would have better chance of support from this party if their amendments were drafted in such a way as to make the intent very clear.

The members of that party used to put forward clear and legible amendments and we knew exactly what the intent of the amendment was. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that one of the reasons we can't support the amendment is that technically, the meaning of the amendment is very confusing.

For instance, where the word "council" is used, it may be confusing to the public and it may well be interpreted when they state that the chairman be a member of council, that he continues to be a member of some municipal council as well. That's very, very confusing and I think it's incumbent upon the people who propose a bill to make it very clear—

Mr. M. Davidson: You are talking about the regional bill, Albert.

Mr. Roy: —and it's incumbent on them as well, that when speaking of a particular regional council, they speak of a specific council so we don't elect a member from, let's say, the regional council of York as chairman for the regional council of Ottawa.

Mr. M. Davidson: Just another cop-out speech.

Mr. Roy: So on that basis alone, the amendment Mr. Chairman, is technically faulty.

Mr. McClellan: With that speech you will be laughed out of town.

Mr. Roy: I would have thought that those members to my left, who like to be precise and who pride themselves in having good legal advice on that side, would have consulted their legal colleagues. Usually you can rely on good legal advice. I have every respect for my colleagues; the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor), and the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick). But obviously they have not been consulted, because the member—

Mr. McClellan: That's a joke.

Mr. Laughren: Quit while you are ahead Albert.

Mr. Roy: —for Welland-Thorold, being an authority on all matters, didn't have to consult his legal colleagues. So for that very specific and technical reason, of course, we have to oppose the amendment.

Mr. Swart: I would just point out that I don't believe for one minute that the member for Ottawa East is confused about this. He's confused about a lot of things.

Mr. Roy: I can remember somebody else being confused on the 30th.

Mr. Swart: He understands perfectly what it means. It means that the chairman of regional council must be elected. That's why he's going to vote against it.

Mr. Laughren: That's exactly right.

Mr. Mancini: Lorne Maeck for whip.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I find it necessary to respond to the member for Ottawa East: I find it impossible to believe that a man with his legal training cannot understand that the bill being amended is an act respecting regional municipalities. I am quite sure it is as clear to him as it probably will no doubt be clear to everyone who is concerned about this bill.

I think he is trying to whitewash an issue with a very clever speech. I don't think it's going to work and I don't think we should have to sit here and listen to that kind of discussion.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I disagree very strongly with my colleague from Cambridge. I don't think that's the intention of the member for Ottawa East at all. I think the simple fact of the matter is that he hasn't yet read the bill.

Mr. Laughren: It wasn't a very clever speech either. The member for Ottawa East is being provocative.

Mr. Mancini: Stand up for short people.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order. I would ask the members to please co-operate or else we will have a recess.

Mr. Laughren: We are trying.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on the amendment?

You have heard the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

All those in favour will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Ashe: Just eight more times.

Sections 31 to 44, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 45:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 9(2) of the Regional Municipality of Waterloo Act 1972 as set out in section 45(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in line four and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council," so the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council, provided he continues to be a member of the council and until a successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Swart: This is the same principle as the previous amendment. Although comments were made facetiously by the member for Ottawa East to hide his true views about electing a chairman—

Mr. Laughren: I think he tried to be serious.

Mr. Swart: —the facts are that I consulted at great length with the legislative counsel and so on with regard to this. If he levels criticism at the wording of this, it is criticism against the legislative counsel, his own colleagues in law.

Mr. Epp: I rise to speak on this but just for a short period. I must say that since I come from this area, I want to say a word or two.

It is interesting to note the member for Welland-Thorold quotes the member for Ottawa East very respectfully. It was the suggestion the member for Ottawa East made the other day that prompted the member for Welland-Thorold all of a sudden to bring in some amendments which he earlier indicated were out of order.

Mr. Roy: That's right.

Mr. Epp: Nevertheless, as everyone knows, there is a study going on in the Region of Waterloo under Mr. William Palmer. A number of amendments regarding the region will be coming in within the next six months or a year when Mr. Palmer has completed his study—

Mr. Swart: How do you know?

Mr. Epp: —it would be somewhat premature to prejudice what those recommendations would be. At that time, when the report is made and when the government brings in legislation for the regional municipality of Waterloo, this party will be bringing in an amendment, as we indicated two weeks ago—

Mr. Swart: It will be like Northumberland or Niagara—no amendments.

Mr. Epp: When these studies are completed and major amendments are made, then is the time to bring in the changes to the act.

Mr. M. Davidson: Once again I have to take exception to what the member for Waterloo North has said. Being one of the members who comes from the regional municipality of Waterloo, I think it is absolutely essential that the kind of amendment that has been placed before us this evening not only be given due consideration, but also be passed by this Legislative Assembly.

The reason I say that is that like the member for Waterloo North, I am well aware of the problems that exist in the region of Waterloo. He has expounded probably the same type of philosophy that I have, based on regionalism in the area. I find it rather interesting that when he was the mayor of the municipality of Waterloo—

Mr. Roy: And a good one too.

Mr. Bradley: And a good mayor he was.

Mr. M. Davidson: —he took very strong positions regarding regional government in his area. He has done so, not only when he was the mayor of Waterloo city, but as the Liberal critic for municipal affairs in leading his little travelling circus around the province, dealing with the problems of regional government.

Mr. Epp: You want to read the report from our caucus on local and regional government.

Mr. M. Davidson: Again I can only say that the speeches he made or the comments he made in going around and visiting the municipalities within his own region in order, I suspect, to get favourable press on his behalf, were such that what he is suggesting here tonight are totally contrary to what he has expressed publicly in the area.

Mr. Mancini: That's not true.

Mr. M. Davidson: He may very well stand up here tonight and say that this is not the proper time or the proper place to place these types of amendments. He can use the excuse, if he chooses to do so, that there is a hearing or a review of government taking place in the Waterloo region.

Mr. Epp: That's not an excuse.

Mr. M. Davidson: That's probably quite true; there is, in fact, a review taking place.

Again, if one looks at the comments the member for Waterloo North has made regarding the reviews that took place in other regions, and what in all likelihood will develop out of the review taking place in the Waterloo region—

Mr. Bradley: You should never prejudice.

Mr. M. Davidson: —then I think he is, as the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) suggested earlier today, posturing very, very definitely. He is, in fact, playing the political game.

Mr. Bradley: As one who is a master at it.

Mr. M. Davidson: He is not, in fact, looking upon the region he represents in the sense he has advocated so strongly in the past. It's unfortunate, because when he was the mayor he was a very consistent kind of a person, but the inconsistency that is expressed by the statement this gentleman is making today is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. Bradley: A lot of things are.

Mr. M. Davidson: I can only suggest, as perhaps the one member of the Waterloo region who is interested in seeing justice done, that this Legislative Assembly accept the recommendation placed before it. Vote for the amendment being moved by the member for Welland-Thorold. I say that as a member sitting in the region of Waterloo. I do that based on a decision made by the council of Cambridge requesting the chairman of the regional government be, in fact, either elected at large or elected from among those who are elected to represent the populace.

Mr. Mackenzie: That's clear, consistent, common sense.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any further speakers to this amendment?

Mr. M. N. Davison: The member for Kitchener would like to speak.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment on section 45 please say "aye."

Those opposed please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Amendment stacked.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any members wishing to discuss any section up to section 58?

The member for Nickel Belt. What section?

Mr. Laughren: On section 58.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I said anything up to section 58.

Mr. Laughren: I'm sorry.

Sections 46 to 57, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 58:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Laughren moves that subsection 2 of section 9 of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury Act, 1972, as set out in section 58, subsection 1 of the bill be amended by striking out the words, "or any other person" in line four and inserting after the word "council" in line five, the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present the regional council should organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until a successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this Act and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

The member for Nickel Belt will speak to his amendment.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, I believe when we talk about the election of the chairman there are two basic levels at which the debate can occur. One is whether or not the chairman should be elected by the council from among its members or, as the government presently wishes, from within the members or outside the members of council; or, secondly, whether or not the election should take place at large by the electorate within the regional municipality. I've always viewed the position we put forward as being a compromise position in that it does not insist upon the election of the chairman at large by the electorate but rather allows the regional council to select that chairman as long as it's from within the council.

I thought that the comments of my colleague from Cambridge were appropriate in that the council of the municipality of Cambridge itself agreed that it should be an elected position, not an appointed one.

This afternoon I had a short conversation with the chairman of the regional municipality of Sudbury in which he indicated that he himself would be in favour of being elected as long as the election was not from within a particular ward, because in that case there could very well be a conflict of priorities for that regional chairman.

But I will tell you something, Mr. Chairman: In Sudbury we have had an unique experience. We have had the experience in Sudbury of a former deputy minister of this government, Mr. Collins, who is the chief executive officer of Cambridge right now—

Mr. Bradley: Doing a good job there, is he?

Mr. Laughren:—I will comment on that in a moment. He was appointed the first chairman of the regional municipality of Sudbury. Mr. Collins rode into Sudbury on a charger and rode out the same way, but in the meantime he still thought that he was a deputy minister, wheeling and dealing with the same kind of powers. It reached a point where it looked as though the regional chairman was going to be in some difficulty holding his job. At that point, the scrambling became unseemly. I want to tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is not something that a regional chairman should be put through. It also happened with the election of the second chairman, the late Mr. Fabbro. When it appeared that he was going to have difficulty in getting the position, his scrambling became unseemly as well. That is something that can be avoided through the election of the local chairman.

There needs to be an understanding that when you have a regional municipality, you have area municipalities that make up that region; and those area municipality politicians are not always going to have the regional or world view that we would wish they would have. The Hamilton Spectator had a very perceptive editorial not too long ago in which they stated that what was required in regional government now were politicians with a broader view. I thought it was a well-put editorial on the part of the Spectator, because we still have local politics being practised at the regional level, and somehow we have to get beyond that. One way to get beyond that is to have the regional chairman elected in a more democratic fashion. We are not going to get away from the small local politics until we can achieve that at the regional level. The best way to achieve that is through the election of the chairman on a broader basis, and that simply is not happening.

I am confused by the Liberal position as well. They say: "Yes, we think there should be an election of chairmen, but not now. There will be a day in the future when that would be more appropriate." I heard the member for Ottawa East say: "Don't worry, the government will bring in a bill that we can deal with and make an amendment at the appropriate time." How the member for Ottawa East can put trust in the government to do anything, given what they did to his bill on language rights, is completely beyond me, and I think he should reassess his position.

I think the members of the Liberal Party are perhaps influenced by the historical fact that appointments to the Senate are traditionally done by a Liberal government, unfortunately, in this country and perhaps they think that has served this country well. I think those kinds of appointments seldom serve this country well, just as appointments of regional chairman—

Mr. Bradley: Like Hazen Argue?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, including Hazen Argue; that has not served this country well. I have no hesitation in saying that whatsoever. I want to tell my friend that appointments seldom serve the electorate well; and that is true whether you are talking about the Senate or whether you are talking about regional chairmen.

Mr. Bradley: What about Rheal Belisle?

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, it is time we in this chamber put some faith in the electorate to elect at the regional level in the same way we put such faith in them to elect at the provincial level.

[9:00]

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, part of the bill deals with the regional municipality of Sudbury, which was instituted in 1972. At that time, in order to get regional government off the ground, we did agree with the original concept of the government that the first regional chairman should be an appointed person—

Mr. Bradley: And now you have changed your mind.

Mr. Germa: —because then they could select someone who in their mind had the necessary skill and wisdom to float this new concept in the regional municipality of Sudbury. But experience has taught us that the government made a horrible mistake in their selection and their appointment, in that instead of taking a political animal they took a functionary and put him in the role of a political person. These two people just do not think alike. Their minds never come to the same conclusion by the same tortuous route.

We, in the political field, are always feeling the pressure of the electorate and we are guided by that consciousness. The functionary or the technocrat, which is what results when you have an appointment, is a different kind of a bird altogether and consequently he gets himself into a lot of trouble.

Mr. Nixon: Are you talking about Don Collins?

Mr. Germa: Which is what happened to Mr. Don Collins, who happened to be the chairman of the regional municipality for something like three years—

Mr. Nixon: Fine fellow.

Mr. Germa: —at which time he took his power a little bit too seriously and he fired the regional administrator—

Mr. Nixon: This is an unbelievable story. Now let's get it all.

Mr. M. Davidson: We have him in Cambridge now.

Mr. Germa: —who he didn't realize was appointed by the same cabinet who appointed him.

Mr. McClellan: What a silly fellow.

Mr. Germa: So consequently he had no power whatsoever, except for his inflated ego that he was Mr. Big at 40,000 bucks a year in the city of Sudbury.

Mr. Nixon: He is doing better than that now in Galt.

Mr. Germa: When the regional administrator refused to have himself fired he got up publicly and said, "I will be back at work Monday morning even if the chairman did fire me."

Mr. Nixon: My God, he was.

Mr. Germa: And my God, he was and he's still there. He's still there. Even today he's still there and Mr. Regional Chairman is now gone and I think he's down in Cambridge.

Mr. Breaugh: Galt.

Mr. Germa: Galt, or some place down there, but he's back in a post for which the man is trained. He is a functionary and a technocrat and what we want in the regional chairman's post is a political person.

We are not really debating whether the regional chairman is appointed or not; what we are talking about is do we have any faith in the democratic system? Do we have faith in the electorate? We in Sudbury certainly have faith in the electorate. I think Sudbury is probably the cradle of democracy, otherwise you wouldn't have three NDP members coming out of that area.

Mr. Bradley: Somebody put a curse on the city.

Mr. Nixon: I hear Don is going to run against you in the next election.

Mr. Germa: Because it is a cradle of democracy we have been able to overcome all of those built-in institutions which have been plaguing Ontario for some 35 years where money buys seats and all the rig-marole that goes into electing a lot of these members in various ridings—if they spend 40,000 or 50,000 bucks they can guarantee that they are going to be elected. All of that has gone in Sudbury because the people in Sudbury believe in the democratic process. Otherwise, they wouldn't send a person such as myself here to the Legislature. It must be democracy in action.

Mr. Stong: Humble and unassuming as you are.

Mr. Germa: So you cannot compare Sudbury with the rest of the province.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman; there are three members in this caucus who came from the regional municipality of Sudbury. My friend Laughren from Nickel Belt, who has just spoken, supports the concept of an elected chairman.

Mr. Bradley: Where is Gaston Demers?

Mr. Germa: I, from the city of Sudbury, support the concept of an elected chairman and if I can talk my friend Martel from Sudbury East into standing up and speaking, he will also tell you he supports the concept of elected chairmen—

Mr. Martel: I am going to.

Mr. Germa:—so you have a unanimous view and a unanimous opinion from the members in this Legislature who represent together the whole regional municipality of Sudbury. There is no other opinion. There is no other voice coming out of Sudbury, so what more do you want, Mr. Chairman? When an opinion is unanimous, how can you fly in the face of a unanimous opinion?

Interjections.

Mr. Bradley: Where is Elmer when we need him?

Mr. Germa: Only a majority government would dare do that. So this amendment to that degree then is different to the other four or five amendments which the Liberal flip-flopers have managed to laugh off.

Mr. Swart: No blackmail on this one, no blackmail.

Mr. Germa: I have been told that the Liberals are waiting for a study being done in one of the regions to determine if they believe in democracy.

Mr. Nixon: That's the way we do business; we get the facts and then we act.

Mr. Germa: Well surely if these gentlemen and that lady are sitting here, they must believe in the democratic process, why do they need a study to make them believe that they think democracy is here to stay or that it is a viable way to govern ourselves? I think it is not necessary to wait for any further studies, we should reject what I term a managed democracy. This is what appointments are, they are a way to get around the opinion of the electorate.

I feel very strongly about this, in that there is no dissenting voice from the regional municipality of Sudbury to this proposition and I would consequently believe that it will carry unanimously.

Mr. Martel: If I might, I want to take the Liberals back a little historically.

Mr. Swart: No, don't, they're far enough back now.

Mr. Martel: A number of years ago—it's intriguing, I think it was the Hamilton bill where Liberals moved a motion—

Mr. Bradley: All in good time.

Mr. Martel: Historically speaking we are going back, my friend. I believe on that occasion they moved that the chairman must be elected.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, your mother is going to read this Hansard with a lot of pleasure.

Mr. Martel: Well I suggest to my Liberal friend—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. Could I point out to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk that if he wishes to heckle he must be in his own seat.

Mr. Martel: I hope he gets there, because I believe he was still leader and I think he put the motion that night.

Mr. Nixon: Darned good motion, too. I wish you had voted for it.

Mr. Bradley: Is that the party that voted for regional government in Niagara?

Mr. Roy: You are supposed to address the chair, not me.

Mr. Martel: Albert, you are so attractive. It's the hairdo, it gets to me.

I want my Liberal friends who are trying to drown it out to recall that they moved, in those days when we couldn't carry a vote—the Tories had too many bodies, they used to sit on this side of the House; remember the good old days? We couldn't carry a vote—

Mr. Bradley: Not much of an improvement now.

Mr. Martel:—and they moved a motion that the regional chairman had to be elected. Here they are tonight, after all the prattling of a couple of weeks ago about how you had to be elected to represent the people and to be accountable—

Mr. Nixon: What you are doing is all out of order.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: And now there is a motion—

Mr. Gaunt: Elie, I am going to read about Billy Graham. Is that all right?

Mr. Martel: Well you go ahead. Now you have an opportunity to exercise a vote which in fact would see a regional chairman elected and they are going to flip-flop again.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Surprise, surprise.

Mr. Bradley: Was that back when you supported regional government.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: Yes, we supported regional government because it's time you fellows came into the 19th century at least; not the 20th, I wouldn't expect too much from you all at once, but you might try worming your way into the 19th century. But when you can flip-flop again—

Mr. Bradley: Now you're against regional government.

Mr. Martel: —having moved the motion yourselves—and history will prove I'm correct if you just take the time to look back—

Mr. Roy: History is going to be hard on you and your antics in the House here; history will not be kind.

Mr. Martel: You will find out that on that occasion, to the man, on a divided vote, the Liberals moved and voted to have chairmen elected. Not two weeks ago one Liberal after another, to the tune of about seven of them, demanded—

Mr. Roy: And one NDP member after another rose to say we were out of order.

Mr. Nixon: Seven isn't very many.

Mr. Martel: —as per usual that the chairman must be elected. Now we have the motion and what do they do? They crawl back into the woodwork.

Mr. Laughren: Under a rock.

Mr. Martel: Like everything else, they want to be firmly straddling both sides of the fence at the same time, to come down on both sides. How can you be wrong when you do that?

Mr. Bradley: Which side are you on about regional government now? Have you changed your mind on regional government?

Mr. Martel: Then when you go across Ontario you can say to the folks out there: "We wanted it but we couldn't get it." It happens on issue after issue, whether it's the firing of Jackson a couple of weeks ago where the leader of the Liberal Party wanted him fired but those who had the right voted to maintain that he not be fired. What a lovely way to have it! Its the same issue after issue. Why don't you stop having the spine of an eaten banana on the spine of a banana peel?

Mr. Roy: Do you want a rotten banana?

Mr. Martel: Develop a little more of that stuff called intestinal fortitude. Don't listen to my friend from York Centre (Mr. Stong) who says, "I've got to have this bill or that bill because I need more representation. I won't be blackmailed." Then he gets up in his place and votes like the proverbial banana—a limp, weak-kneed, jellyfish eel. It's like Joe Clark. You shake hands with him and it's like shaking hands with a Caspar Milquetoast.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You've never shaken hands with him.

Mr. Nixon: A vicious attack against the federal Conservative leader.

Mr. Ashe: He wouldn't shake hands with you anyway.

Mr. Martel: I want to remind you that we had a regional chairman appointed at one time. He was a lovely fellow. I understand he's down in Cambridge playing havoc now with what's going on in Cambridge. He's running for the Tories? Or the Liberals?

Mr. Laughren: It doesn't matter.

Mr. Martel: It doesn't matter much; either one, it's the same difference.

We had a regional chairman who was totally irresponsible. What he did would just boggle the mind. I recall the night he decided he was going to quit. For the first time in three and a half years—

Mr. Nixon: Why don't you start the story of Don Collins back further?

Mr. Martel: —he called my colleague from Sudbury and he called my friend from Nickel Belt and he called me.

Mr. Bradley: Three mistakes.

Mr. Martel: It was the first time he knew I was up there for three and a half years. He didn't even realize I was around.

Mr. Nixon: Any port in a storm. A drowning man grasps at straws.

Mr. Martel: He didn't need our support except when the crunch came. When the crunch came he wanted us to go to the Duke of Kent and see if the Duke of Kent could get some of us to prop him up. Needless to say, he's now in Cambridge and obviously none of us took the occasion to prop him up. During his first three and a half years he totally ignored the local provincial members.

What he did internally with that regional council was something to behold.

Mr. Nixon: What is this, a filibuster?

Mr. Martel: It is. You've got it figured out.

Mr. Nixon: You're afraid of the vote.

Mr. Martel: No, I know you're going to go. What he did with that regional council was something to behold, as he manipulated, wheeled and dealed and played off one group against the other because he wasn't forced to meet an electorate.

Mr. Nixon: What about his car?

Mr. Martel: He was appointed by the Tory party. In fact, he's the only guy who tried to fire the administrator, as I know, and the administrator was also appointed by the government.

Mr. Nixon: We haven't had the story about the automobile.

Mr. Martel: I don't want to talk about that.

Mr. Nixon: Are you winding up?

Mr. Martel: No, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is winding up. He's getting in on it.

Mr. Nixon: No way.

Mr. Martel: He's going to wind up. It's just unacceptable what regional chairmen can do when they aren't responsible to anyone except maybe 20 people. Even then if they can wheel and deal as he did, he's only accountable to about 11, as he plays the game. I suggest that that's really unsatisfactory. I'd urge my friends to screw up the courage they demonstrated a number of years ago and vote the way they did a couple of years ago.

Mr. Bradley: In due course.

Mr. Martel: It shouldn't be too hard for you to change. You're noted for it. I didn't want to push it too far.

Mr. Nixon: Be careful. You are trying to convince us.

Mr. Martel: I really am because I have had the experience of that type of regional chairman, as opposed to the way it now works in Sudbury, or did in the election.

Mr. Eakins: There is a good chairman in Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: Yes. I was with him this afternoon again. He ran in a ward and ultimately was chosen by his colleagues to be the regional chairman. There is a problem if you do it that way, because his seat was then filled by a vote, but there has to be a seat left for him to run, after two years. That's why my colleague has moved the type of amendment we've moved, because somewhere regional chairmen have to be accountable to some electorate. Surely, the Liberals having preached it for years, should be prepared to back what they've been preaching.

Mr. Roy: We will, we will.

Mr. Martel: They run around the province with their little shotgun—

Mr. Gregory: We are going to support your amendment.

Mr. Martel: Bud, really. You won't get any committees tomorrow, Bud. If you think you've got troubles now getting meetings this summer, after that comment you don't know what you're in for tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Will the member for Sudbury stick to the bill that's before us, and just ignore the interjections?

Mr. Martel: The member for Mississauga East provoked me to make that comment, and he will suffer because of it.

Mr. Eakins: Quit talking. You are interrupting the gallery.

Mr. Martel: It seems to me that the Liberals, having demonstrated what they want, should not continue to go around the province attacking regional government the way they do. When they've got an opportunity to change it, they come in here and vote in a way which retains the status quo.

You really want it both ways. You want to flail away out there and say, "Look, those guys wanted regional government." When you're in a position to make some very comprehensive changes, what do you do? You crawl back into your hole.

Mr. Bradley: We will be in that position, we will be in that position.

Mr. Martel: In what position?

Mr. Bradley: To make those changes.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: You are in that position.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would ask the member for Sudbury to ignore the interjections.

Mr. Martel: You are in that position and you refuse to take the opportunity to make the changes which are possible now. So we have to continue to suffer with the likes of—what's that fellow's name in Toronto? The big Kahuna?

Mr. Nixon: Is that the member from down Oshawa way?

Mr. Stong: Godfrey.

Mr. Martel: Godfrey. I have difficulty remembering him because he does so many things that are so impressive. He tried to bring baseball to Toronto but beyond that his contribution is nil. If he had to answer to an electorate he'd have to do a lot more than wheel and deal in the back room.

Mr. Ashe: He was in here last year. He won't have that problem for many years.

Mr. Martel: He'd have to do more than wheel and deal in the back room and pay homage to the Premier (Mr. Davis) in order to be retained.

An hon. member: That's one way of putting it.

Mr. Martel: He what?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would ask the member to ignore the interjections and please speak to the bill.

Mr. Martel: I'm having difficulty, Mr. Chairman, because so many of them would like to get rid of people like Paul Godfrey, but the Premier has told them not to. My friends, who could assist us to get rid of people like that, refuse to take the bull by the horns. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk knows what that means, to take the bull by the horns and in fact make the necessary change to at least make that post democratic and not some type of—I'm not sure if "puppet" is the right word—or little minor dictator who wheels and deals from the back room.

Mr. Stong: This is really overkill, you know.

Mr. Martel: Call it what you want, but I went through Hansard of a couple of weeks ago, and there was a filibuster from you fellows on how you didn't want an appointed regional chairman. Surely to God, tonight you should be prepared to get rid of them, at least in the Sudbury bill, because that way you can't say, as my friend from York would want to do, "I'm being blackmailed." You're not going to be blackmailed if you support us on the Sudbury bill, because we already have this system working in Sudbury and it's most progressive. I would urge you to join the battle—don't worry about the blackmail that you've maintained to me all along for Metro Toronto—so that you can have the type of representation you want in the numbers game. In Sudbury we're not worried about that. You just join with us on this vote—

Mr. Stong: Representation by populace?

Mr. Martel: No, we wanted representation by a number of the people who obviously should get to where they are in the same fashion we do, and that's by going to the electorate. Not like Dick Dow of Copper Cliff who went through 14 elections without ever being elected, because Inco ordained that he would be the mayor of Copper Cliff; or like Len Turner at Lively who was mayor by design of Inco, but in fact people who have to go to the public.

Mr. Nixon: Whatever happened to Gaston Demers?

Mr. Martel: Who?

Mr. Bradley: Gaston—good man.

Mr. Martel: I'm not sure. We were delighted to defeat him.

Mr. Nixon: He was a good member.

Mr. Roy: Have you ever heard the story about the regional chairman—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: I don't know it.

Mr. Nixon: Tell us the story.

Mr. Germa: The Buick station wagon?

Mr. Bradley: Mike Solski—there's a good man.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order, please. Could I ask the member of the Liberal caucus to refrain from interjecting and allow the member for Sudbury East to complete his remarks?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, they are having great difficulty, because they know the way they should vote. As I informed my friend from York Centre, who was afraid that a vote for what he really believed meant that he would be blackmailed, this would not apply in this bill.

Mr. Stong: I didn't say that.

Mr. Martel: Oh yes, you did.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: As I said earlier, screw up your courage, boys—

Mr. Nixon: I've got a better suggestion than that.

Mr. Martel: —come along and let's make regional chairmen elective in the way the rest of us who stand in this Legislature are—answerable to someone other than the Premier or a couple of people on a council.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Laughren's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 59 to 62, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 63:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ashe moves that section 33(2) of the Regional Municipality of Sudbury Act, 1972, as set out in section

63 of the bill, be struck out and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

"(2) The regional council shall be the planning board of the Sudbury planning area, and where the regional council meets in respect of matters pertaining to the Planning Act, no separate meeting of the council as a planning board is required."

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, this is just further expansion or clarification, if you will, of the section that is in the bill at present and really does not change it in any way.

Motion agreed to.

Section 63, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 64 through 67, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 68:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 9(2) of the Regional Municipality of Peel Act, 1973, as set out in section 68(1) of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in line four and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so that the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I just support this with all of the arguments that have been put forward by so many of my colleagues around me and say that all of them apply to this, perhaps with the exception that all of the members from this area may not represent this particular party with which I am proud to be affiliated.

Some hon. members: None do.

Mr. Swart: To more than make up for this, I would point out that the overwhelming reason why this should be supported is that no kingdom can support two monarchs. When we have King Billy in the area already, I think it is a bit much to have another anointed person as chairman of the regional council. Therefore, in addition to all of the other reasons, I think that substantiates this amendment we have before us.

Mr. Gregory: Mr. Chairman, I could listen to them rant and rave over on that side of the House for hours tonight, but they are getting into an area that's getting very close to home.

Mr. McClellan: Why are you so opposed to democracy?

Mr. Gregory: I respectfully submit that the member for Welland-Thorold really doesn't know what he's talking about in regard to this particular region.

Mr. Nixon: That classic Tory phrase.

Mr. Gregory: He has been saying the same thing all night and he really doesn't know what he's talking about. I would support free elections for most elected offices, although when you are talking about chairmen of regions I think it more important that the proper man for the job be selected.

Mr. Laughren: Will you stop filibustering?

Mr. Swart: If you don't think the people should decide, start appointing Premiers.

Mr. Nixon: Hazel might be asked.

Mr. Gregory: That's right. She might get a chance some day.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe they can switch Hazel McCallian back to their ways.

Mr. Gregory: She has a habit of doing that. More so when she was a Liberal than when she was a Conservative. I have to say that.

Mr. Nixon: A very broadminded and competent public servant.

Mr. Gregory: You can have her. As a matter of fact, she is yours if you want her.

I think in the region of Peel we have had a unique experience from the belly-aching I have heard around here from the different regions. Peel region certainly has been a model of efficiency. I think to a great degree that efficiency is because of the chairman, whom I regard as a friend as well as a very competent chairman. Granted, he was appointed by the province initially when the region became a region, back in 1974.

Mr. Nixon: That's his politics.

Mr. Gregory: Since that time, he has been re-elected by the members of council, by his peers, representing the entire region of Peel, Mississauga, Brampton and Caledon, with only one dissenting vote.

I think Bob just mentioned that dissenting vote. I think there was a reason for that. It certainly wasn't through lack of confidence on the part of the chairman of the region.

Mr. Swart: We trust the voters to do it.

Mr. Gregory: I don't know what the reason was for it, Bob. I haven't yet been told. At any rate, what we have is a very exceptional, and a very efficient chairman. I think the people of Peel back up that particular opinion.

Mr. Swart: Why don't you give them a chance to prove it?

Mr. Gregory: I think the member for Welland-Thorold, when he says he doesn't think they have a member there—you are darned right you don't. You would have to go a long way in Peel to find an NDP member. That shows satisfaction on the part of the people, the voters. They know we are doing the right thing because we have a very efficiently run region.

Mr. Foulds: We have a lot of members there.

Mr. Swart: Mississauga?

Mr. di Santo: Developers.

Mr. Foulds: Have a look behind you. They are closing in.

Mr. Gregory: Eduardo, you don't know what a region is, for heaven's sake. Perhaps some of the reasons you are talking about, and perhaps some of the dissatisfaction you are finding, is because of the hammering you people are doing. You won't let a chairman do a proper job. You won't give him a chance because you are yammering away like you have been doing tonight saying the same amendment about seven times. It is just nonsense.

An hon. member: That's called democracy.

An hon. member: A waste of time.

Mr. Gregory: If you are not happy with the situation in your area, why don't you leave us in Peel alone? We are happy. It is running very efficiently. It is a very efficient, progressive region, Mr. member from Welland-Thorold, which I can't expect you to know anything about.

An hon. member: Democracy is balderdash.

Mr. Gregory: You are certainly proving tonight that you don't, frankly, know what you are talking about.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 69 to 79, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 80:

Mr. Swart: Yes, we are going to do this again.

Mr. Nixon: You said it was out of order.

Mr. Swart: Yes, but the Speaker ruled that it was in order and, Mr. Chairman, I accept the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 9(2) of the Regional Municipality of Halton Act, 1973, as set out in section 80(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in line four and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so that the subsection shall read:

"(2) at the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as a chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until a successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until a chairman is elected."

[9:30]

Mr. Swart: This follows on the rest. In spite of the comments of the member for Mississauga East, it is my opinion and the opinion of this party that every region in Ontario should have the right of determination by election by the public of the regional chairman. We intend to see that every regional municipality act is amended here tonight—or at least, that the opportunity is presented to amend it—so the people have that right.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are there any other speakers to this amendment?

Those in favour of the amendment will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 81 to 93, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 94:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 9(2) of the Regional Municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth Act, 1973, as set out in section 94(1) of the bill, be amended by striking out the words, "or any other person" in lines four and five and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so that the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after the regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the chairman of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Charlton: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should follow up on comments that were made by my colleague from Sudbury and make it very clear to some of the members opposite that in the case of the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth you have to go considerably far outside the region to find a member of the government party.

Mr. Ashe: You won't find all NDPers there.

Mr. Charlton: We should point out to the members of the Liberal Party that of the six seats in the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth, four are held in this caucus and two are held in the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Sterling: What does that prove?

Mr. Charlton: And four of the members here present tonight in this caucus are prepared to vote for this amendment. Unfortunately, two members of the Liberal caucus support the amendment in principle but don't appear to be ready to support it in the vote.

The regional council in the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth supports an elected chairman. The city of Hamilton supports an elected chairman. As a matter of fact, the present appointed chairman of the region publicly supported on a number of occasions the concept of an elected chairman of the council of the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Bradley: What did John Smith think of it?

Mr. Charlton: It seems to me that in the case of Hamilton-Wentworth the members of this Legislature who represent the region and the local politicians in the region all support the concept.

Mr. Gregory: They also support single-tier government.

Mr. Charlton: So we should say, as my colleague from Sudbury said in the case of Sudbury, that the majority wish is already known in the case of Hamilton-Wentworth. We don't need any further study to determine that in the case of the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth that we desire democracy to be the norm and not the expected hope for the future.

On that basis I would ask my two colleagues in the Liberal caucus who represent ridings in the regional municipality of Hamilton-Wentworth to reconsider their position and to talk to their colleagues in their own caucus about reconsidering their position on this particular amendment.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Chairman, I also rise to support the amendment. I'll be very brief about it, but I find it a little bit difficult to understand the position, when it comes to Hamilton-Wentworth, of either the government or the members on my right. I mean that in every respect. Even the mayor—my colleague listed those who supported—even that ultra-Tory mayor, Jack MacDonald in Hamilton, believes that the chairman of the region should be elected and not appointed and has said so publicly within the last few days.

I would like also to mention that apart from the two members for Hamilton, if they have the guts to appear and vote on this bill in the Liberal caucus, that some of them who know of the fight that a long-time and well-respected mayor, who certainly was not of my party, and I am talking of Victor Copps of the city of Hamilton, also would never stand for the appointment of a regional chairman, somebody that was not elected and was not part of that council. I just cannot, for the life of me, understand the position of the members of the Liberal caucus on this particular bill.

Mr. Chairman, I would hope that sanity will return and common sense will prevail and they will support this amendment.

Mr. M. N. Davison: This amendment put forward by my colleague from Hamilton Mountain is really quite a great and novel idea, indeed almost revolutionary, that we should have some kind of democracy at that level in Hamilton-Wentworth. If I didn't know better I would wonder that the idea had not been suggested or put earlier since regional government has been the fact in Hamilton-Wentworth for the past four years.

As a matter of fact, someone indeed has suggested it before. Our party, and the members of our party from Hamilton-Wentworth have suggested it. Indeed, as we heard pointed out by our colleague from Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) only some few moments ago in the debate on the Sudbury portion of this bill, the Liberal Party, in the pre-minority government days, moved a motion that would have required what this motion requires, that the chairman of the regional municipality be elected and therefore be accountable to the people of the region.

We are not asking that the Liberal Party reconsider at this late date.

Mr. di Santo: Just to be consistent.

Mr. M. N. Davison: All that we are asking, really, is that they maintain their policy, that they be consistent. Is that too much to ask for a band of 33 men and one woman who masquerade as a political party?

Mr. Bradley: We'll let you support us in due course.

Mr. Epp: Why don't you support your own colleague from Welland-Thorold?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I should think not, I should think that a political party could find it possible to be consistent. I don't think that is too much to ask. But in the absence of the member for Hamilton West, and the understandable absence of the member for Wentworth North—

Mr. Bradley: Yes, he is not here.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —I would ask that these members, this collection, this troop to my right—

Mr. Bradley: No leadership hopefuls here tonight at all.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —should consider the position that they have placed poor Stuart and Eric in. How do you expect the member for Wentworth North and the member for Hamilton West on one of their occasional visits to Hamilton to explain what you have done? I mean, every once in a while, every month or so, they have to go back to Hamilton and visit their constituencies and how on earth are they going to explain your position to the people.

Mr. Ruston: Fourteen votes, Mike; you've got to watch it, 14 votes.

Mr. Cassidy: It'll be 14,000 next time.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Actually, you know, if it had not been for the fact that the Liberals had thrown in the towel before we were able to complete the recount, the NDP would have held the seat by at least 18 or 19 votes. So let's be accurate, I mean—

Mr. Bradley: A resounding plurality.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That is about a 25 per cent error you are making, but that is normal.

I would simply ask you, if you cannot do it, if you cannot bring yourselves to support this amendment to bring a little bit of democracy to Hamilton-Wentworth, the least that you could do is support it so that you do not embarrass your colleagues from that area.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment will please say "aye." All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 95 to 105, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 106:

Mr. Swart: This is number nine out of a total of 10.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 9(2) of the Regional Municipality of Durham Act, 1973, as set out in section 106(1) of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in lines four and five and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so that the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election in which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as the chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until a successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Swart: I want to point out in the absence of the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) that he is in full support of this amendment. He has concurred with the reasons and the arguments put forward by the members in this caucus. I would like to point out too that there's little doubt in my mind that the retreat by the county council of Northumberland and thus the pursuant retreat of the Treasurer of this province (Mr. McKeough) on the restructuring of that county was effected by the fact of the regional municipality in Durham.

I had the opportunity, as the member for Durham West will know, of just attending one meeting in that area. Even at that meeting, the question of the appointment of the regional chairman or, let me put it another way, the habit of regional government of not electing the regional chairman was brought forward, although of course they were assured there that they would have the opportunity to elect the chairman of the restructured council. However, this is one of the concerns of people throughout this province. It is one of the reasons that the public generally is against new regional governments and generally against the regional governments that exist. It is one of the factors because the public does not have the opportunity to elect the chairman of that very important office.

This is in the same position as the other amendments that we have had before you. All of the same arguments apply. We would once again implore the people on our right to put their vote where their mouth is, if I may use that expression, and join us in passing these amendments.

Mr. Bradley: We will let you support us at the appropriate time.

Mr. Ashe: I can speak on this particular section as a member for Durham and also as the parliamentary assistant involved in this legislation. I should point out that the region of Durham had its fill with one term of three out of four members being represented by the first party. They saw the light fortunately very quickly and reversed that position last year.

Mr. Swart: Boy, are they ever sorry.

An hon. member: They'll kick you out next time too.

Mr. Haggerty: You are for regional government and against it at the same time.

Mr. Foulds: You will return to municipal government pretty soon.

Mr. Ashe: One of the reasons for that was some of the inconsistent philosophy being espoused over and over tonight by many of the members of that third party, including the member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Lupusella: You must be joking.

Mr. Ashe: One of the very inconsistent things, which has been talked about before and which I must highlight again—

Mr. Mackenzie: You are consistently against democracy.

[9:45]

Mr. Ashe: —in everybody's speeches from that third party is talking about how important, how active and how full-time the job of regional chairman is. I concur that that's the case, particularly in the regions that are significant in their size. Yet, if you look again at this particular amendment, what it says in theory—and I appreciate that it may not happen in practice, but it can—is that the mayor of Oshawa, for example, could end up being the regional chairman of Durham, or the mayor of Pickering, or the mayor of whatever. To me what this is saying, of course, is that that particular job could not be done effectively on behalf of the constituents who supposedly elected him and at the same time on behalf of the council of which he is supposedly the chairman.

Mr. Haggerty: You can flip that coin all the time—heads or tails?

Mr. Lupusella: It is just for the sake of social democracy.

Mr. Ashe: Let's respect the people by saying it's an important full-time job, not by passing this ludicrous type of amendment that would be putting a person into two full-time jobs.

Mr. McClellan: What's ludicrous about democracy?

Mr. di Santo: I don't represent the region of Durham but I would like to speak after listening to the member for Durham West. The argument he has put forward is really amazing. I can understand that he is against the election of the chairmen, but the argument he puts forward is really ludicrous, and let me say why. What we are discussing is whether a regional government should function on the democratic basis on which each elective representative body is elected in this country, not whether it is a full-time or part-time job. It doesn't make any difference whether it is a full-time or a part-time job.

Mr. Ashe: It doesn't to you, but it does to the people.

Mr. Martel: Maybe they should talk about the principle.

Mr. di Santo: That's not the principle of the bill, and unfortunately the member for Durham West has made a very poor job of defending his position, which is wrong, and he knows that it is wrong. I can understand that with this amendment the mayor of Oshawa can end up being the chairman of the regional government, but what we are discussing here is whether the people of the Durham region have a right, like the people of Ontario, to have the senior representative on the council elected.

You are saying that democracy can work at the municipal level in the small towns of Ontario. You are saying that democracy can work that way in this Legislature, where the Premier is elected in a constituency and then becomes Premier without relinquishing his responsibilities in his own constituency. You are saying that the Prime Minister of this country can be elected in a given constituency, but not the chairman of the regional government. And do you know why? Because that is part of the political machinery that is attached to your government at this time.

Mr. Lupusella: That's what you want, not democracy.

Mr. Ashe: What? We could give you a lesson on that.

Mr. Martel: Only you do. The fount of all wisdom.

Mr. di Santo: I'd like to ask the member for Durham West what he is afraid of. Is he afraid that the councillors or the aldermen of the regional government won't elect the right person? Or his he afraid that he won't be able to appoint the people who would be wheeling and dealing for his party in that particular region?

Mr. McClellan: Tory haggler.

Mr. Ashe: You don't even know how it works.

Mr. Martel: Sure we do. Bill Davis whispers in their ear. He lays the hands on; he anoints them.

An hon. member: He gives them a cigar.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. di Santo: I don't know whether to laugh at or pity the member for Durham West, who was so incapable of making a reasonable argument for defending his position. But I want to talk to the members of the Liberal caucus. They are now in the same position as we are.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh, things aren't that bad.

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: You remember how you voted on your motion four years ago to have regional chairmen elected?

Mr. T. P. Reid: I remember that date.

Mr. di Santo: The members of the Liberal caucus may think that things are better for them. In fact, this time they have only one single person in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

An hon. member: What will the archbishop think?

Mr. Nixon: I heard the archbishop say on CBC that he was elected.

Mr. di Santo: The archbishop is with us.

I can tell them that by taking this position they are opposing what has been a widespread opinion expressed in public opinion polls carried in the reports we are sending to our constituents.

Mr. Nixon: We've been hearing about those reports.

Mr. di Santo: I follow very carefully what my constituents say. That is one of the reasons why I went from 68 votes to 4,000 plus and why the Liberal candidate went down by 3,000 votes.

Mr. Nixon: It's because your printing and stationery costs were $5,645.17.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's called propaganda.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He bought all the paper from his own newspaper.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I hope you're recycling that stuff.

Mr. Bradley: At public expense.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Bob, check his mileage; he lives in Toronto.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Chairman, let me say that my expenses for stationery—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Would the honourable member please return to the amendment?

Mr. Nixon: Disregard the interjections.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, would you throw out the member for Brantford-Oxford-Norfolk? If the Speaker were in the chair, he would throw him out.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Chairman, I was only telling the assembly that my stationery money is well spent.

Mr. Conway: And you still don't have a wife.

Mr. McClellan: He's going to tell them how the Liberals voted on this issue.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Back to the amendment.

Mr. di Santo: Thank you for your patience, Mr. Chairman. I want to conclude my remarks by saying that there is a real inconsistency in the position the Liberals are taking. It's against the will of the majority of the people whom they represent and will not be represented by them. I ask them to please reconsider. This is the last chance they have to reconsider a position that is basically wrong. I would urge them to vote with us.

Mr. Bradley: You don't really want us to vote with you. Let's face it.

Mr. Martel: But you used to vote for it.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I'm interested in the comments from the members to my left concerning the amendments to all the regional bills tonight. If one actually looks at the intent of the legislation—and perhaps I should read it into the record; maybe they don't understand it. "At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council, or any other person, to hold office for the term of council and until a successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

If I may refer back to the regional municipality of Niagara once again—it's almost similar to this; I don't know how many persons are elected to the regional municipality we're discussing now—in the region of Niagara there are 28 members and if, as is suggested by the member for Welland-

Thorold, the chairman should be elected from among the members, for example, you could still have a tie vote.

Mr. di Santo: That's a technicality.

Mr. Haggerty: No. It could happen. It's happened many times; I can recall days in county council when we've had ties for the election of a warden, which is a chairman.

Looking at that particular section, and the amendment the Liberal Party is being asked to support, there's a good possibility that there could be a tie; there could also be a deadlock in the appointment of a chairman among the members of regional council.

Subsection 4 goes on to say: "If, at the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election a chairman is not elected, the presiding officer may adjourn the meeting from time to time and, if the chairman is not elected at any adjourned meeting held within one week after the first meeting, the Lieutenant Governor in Council shall appoint a chairman."

I think that's a reasonable approach to take under the circumstances as it relates to Niagara where there's a good possibility we could have a split—

Mr. Martel: Are you sure there isn't something wrong? Doesn't his knee have to be operated on?

Mr. Haggerty: —election there to nominate a chairman for the regional municipality. This opens the door. It gives us a way to appoint somebody to settle an impasse under the terms of the act.

Mr. Mackenzie: I would like to hear you put it on the record to a point.

Mr. Haggerty: I suggest to the members this is the reasonable approach to take under this present circumstance where there is a possibility there could be a tie vote.

Mr. Mackenzie: Oh, come off it! That's the worst argument all night.

Mr. Haggerty: It's that plain, but you're blind and you can't see it.

Mr. McClellan: Let's get that newspaper going.

Mr. Mackenzie: That is the poorest argument all night.

Mr. Haggerty: I suggest that's one of the reasons we cannot support him until the other amendment comes forward under the region of Niagara bill that would give St. Catharines one more representative and would break that tie. It's that simple.

Mr. Nixon: It's the only reasonable way to deal with it. It's very sensible.

Mr. Haggerty: With the blindfolds they have, they can't see the daylight before them. On this basis, this is one of the reasons we on this side will not support the amendment.

Mr. di Santo: That's a very weak argument and a poor excuse.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Come on. Let's have the question.

Mr. Swart: I hadn't intended to get up a second time, but the member for Erie has made some comments that I find rather ludicrous, if I can use that word.

Mr. Nixon: You were the person who thought it was all out of order. How ludicrous can you get!

Mr. Swart: It should be put in perspective. First of all, there is the question of the tie. Of the 11 regional councils, there are as many of them at the present time—

Mr. Nixon: Talk about a flip-flop. You wouldn't even let us talk about it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: This is a filibuster.

Mr. Swart: —that have even numbers as have odd numbers. Whether this amendment passes or whether it doesn't pass, they'd be in exactly the same position with regard to tie votes.

The second comment that he makes leaves me—

Mr. di Santo: Laughing.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't say speechless because we won't believe that.

Mr. Martel: There is the party who voted for election.

Mr. Swart: —with a total lack of understanding of what he means.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Come on. Nobody reads Hansard.

Mr. Swart: Surely the member for Erie and members of this House realize we're not amending section 30(2). We're only amending section 30(1). The section to which he refers still remains in exactly the same form that it is at the present time. There has to be some provision in any act whereby, if at the regional council or county council nobody wants to run, there is some method of selecting the chairman. That section is not touched.

Mr. Martel: He's a Liberal. He'll change his mind.

Mr. Swart: I would suggest that the comment made by the member for Erie has no relationship to the debate that we have before us at all.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let's have the question.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment to section 106 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 107 to 116, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 117:

Mr. Swart: This is number 10.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 9(2) of the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk Act, 1973, as set out in section 117(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in line four and inserting after the word "council" in line five the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council" so that the subsection shall read:

"(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until a successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected."

Mr. Martel: There are only 19 on that council. What does the member for Erie do now?

Mr. Bradley: Somebody might be sick.

[10:00]

Mr. Swart: I would just point out, Mr. Chairman, that this is the final amendment that we have to set to Bill 81, and perhaps no other amendment we have put so clearly demonstrates the inequality of what exists as does this amendment. I had pointed out earlier that the restructured county of Oxford, or the regional government of Oxford, elects its chairman; that that chairman must be a member of council; that the regional municipality or the county of Oxford—and the words are interchangeable—has a population of some 87,000. Here we have the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk with almost an identical population. The services which are under the regional council of Haldimand-Norfolk are in effect identical with the services under the regional municipality of the county of Oxford.

In no way can it be said that the chairmanship of Haldimand-Norfolk is such a time-consuming job that you couldn't elect him from among the members of council, although I reject that argument in any event.

In no way could that argument possibly have any application here.

Interjection.

Mr. Swart: Why should the people in Haldimand-Norfolk be deprived of the right of having a say as to who shall be the regional chairman, where next door in the regional municipality of Oxford, the county of Oxford, they elect their chairman? They cannot have a chairman who is not elected by some part of the county of Oxford.

I suggest that this amendment, perhaps more than any other, demonstrates the idiocy, the unaccountability, the lack of democracy, the unreasonableness of not electing our regional chairman. As a final pitch to our friends on the right, I would say to you, come on you Liberals, let's vote the way you have been talking for the last five years.

Mr. Martel: Vote the way you used to.

Mr. Swart: Face the way you were three weeks ago, the way you voted five years ago and, to the best of my knowledge, the way—

Mr. McClellan: Screw up your courage.

Mr. Swart: —that you have spoken on every occasion on which you have discussed regional government.

Now is the crunch. Now comes the moment of truth. For the first time in the history of this House we have the opportunity to change it, for the 10 regional governments.

Mr. Conway: I thought Billy Graham was at the Gardens.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Oh no, it is over now for the day.

Mr. Swart: Whatever decision is made by my friends on the right here tonight will determine their real view of whether the regional chairman shall be elected.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Question.

Mr. Swart: Words are cheap. It's action that counts and tonight they have the opportunity of bringing about the election of regional chairmen. I suggest that you should take that opportunity, live up to what you have been saying and support us on these amendments.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Question.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should refrain from commenting on this amendment but as member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, I certainly feel that my views should be expressed on behalf of those people whom I have the honour to represent in the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk.

I draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, the explanatory note dealing with sections 1, 15, 30, 45, 58, 68, 80, 94, 106 and 117. Those are the sections that have been the object of the amendments put forward by a number of the honourable members of the NDP.

It says: "The effect of the re-enactment of the two subsections is to make it clear that the term of office of the chairman corresponds to the term of office of the council." If that is the purpose of the amendment, and as the honourable parliamentary assistant or legislative assistant has indicated it truly is merely housekeeping—

Mr. McClellan: How are you going to amend that? Are you challenging the chair?

Mr. Nixon: —because there is nobody in this House who feels that the term of office of the chairman should be anything but parallel and correspondent to the term of office of the council itself.

Mr. Martel: Remember the night they moved the vote about five years ago for regional chairmen to be elected? I remember that night well.

Mr. Nixon: I regret very much that the NDP, and particularly the member for Welland-Thorold, has seen fit to bring it forward in the terms he has adopted more recently. During the second reading of the bill, you may recall, when this matter was discussed by my colleague the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and others, the member for Welland-Thorold indicated to the Speaker that the matter was out of order and that it in fact did not deal with the chairmanship per se. I find it strange indeed that he is taking such a strong alternative position.

Since he has, and since you have ruled it in order—and I believe you are correct as usual in that regard—I do have to deal with the amendment which is before us at the present time.

Under the terms of the amendment it would mean that a member of the regional council, including the mayor of a major municipality, could in fact under the terms of the amendment be regional chairman at the same time. While the member for Welland-Thorold might be capable himself—if he had stayed at the municipal level—and continued to have been re-elected—might have been able to occupy positions of that responsibility—

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is regrettable that he didn't.

An hon. member: He did a good job there.

Mr. Martel: Great member.

Mr. Nixon: I think that at least the House should give careful consideration before passing an amendment whereby the mayor of a major municipality could also be regional chairman at the same time.

An hon. member: The mayor of Welland.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is possible.

Mr. Nixon: It might be possible, but it certainly should be considered.

I would also like to bring to your attention that the amendments in general deal with most of the regional governments—Ottawa-Carleton, Niagara, York, Waterloo; and those at least the NDP supported in principle some years ago when the chairman wasn't elected at all—

Mr. Martel: We opposed it.

Mr. Nixon: —but was appointed by order in council of the incumbent Conservative government.

Mr. Martel: I opposed it then.

Mr. Nixon: It is strange that all of a sudden the bright lights of democracy should shine on the honourable members of the NDP when they were quite prepared—

Mr. Swart: I have always taken this position.

Mr. Nixon: —to support legislation that at the time allowed His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in Council, to appoint somebody back home who had as a recommendation only—

Mr. Bradley: History is being made by the NDP.

Mr. Nixon: —the confidence of the Conservative Party or the government of the day.

Mr. di Santo: Are you saying that you were right then or you are wrong now?

Mr. Nixon: So it is strange that they should now be putting their arguments in favour of this amendment in such, I would say immoderate terms.

Mr. Pope: Are you against democracy?

Mr. Martel: No, he isn't.

Mr. Nixon: My colleague, the member from Waterloo, has made it clear that our position has remained unchanged, that we believe and shall continue to believe that it is only after the reviews of the regional government—many of which are already complete but the program is not yet complete—that there should be general legislation dealing with the chairmanship. Under those circumstances, you may be sure that we shall move or support any member who does move that the chairman of the regional council or the warden in the case of restructured counties, be in fact a member of council at the same time as he or she may become the chairman or the warden of the local government.

We would have to consider, however, whether that would include the mayor of a major municipality. I would say to you, and I feel sure that you would agree, that we are moderate and considerate in our position, that we have not changed them in any small regard, and that in fact much of the time spent in this debate, except for perhaps the last few minutes, has been practically completely a waste of time.

Mr. Stong: Except for the last few minutes, the last speaker.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak, but I can't accept that nonsense from the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. He says his position is consistent.

Mr. Nixon: You voted in favour of the original bill that appointed chairmen.

Mr. Bradley: A little history lesson there.

Mr. Martel: I believe it was the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, in his capacity as leader of that party, who moved—

Mr. Nixon: The sins of the fathers cannot be visited upon the sons.

Mr. Martel: Well you talk about being consistent—I am not talking about your father, I am talking about you, Bob.

The Liberal Party, in fact, moved a motion calling for the election of a regional chairman.

Mr. Nixon: We voted against the regional bill in the first instance.

Mr. Martel: No, no; you moved the motion.

Mr. Nixon: We do support it.

Mr. Martel: You moved the motion.

Mr. Nixon: We supported the election of the—

Mr. Chairman: Order, will the honourable member address the chair?

Hon. Mr. Welch: What does this prove?

Mr. Martel: I'm trying to, but I can't shout any louder.

Mr. Haggerty: Control yourself.

Mr. Martel: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk thinks he's out on the back 40 shouting to get someone's attention—

An hon. member: His 200 acres.

Mr. Martel: —because he comes in here tonight with so much balderdash—

Mr. Nixon: You have my undivided attention.

Mr. Martel: —with the effrontery to say to this House that the Liberal position is consistent.

Mr. Nixon: It is.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: And Mr. Chairman, you'll recall yourself voting on that Liberal amendment, I'm sure, a number of years ago, which called for the election of regional chairmen.

Mr. Nixon: That's out of order.

Mr. Martel: It called for the election of regional chairmen and that's what we're talking about. My friend rises in his place and says "We've been consistent." I'm looking for the consistency when they, in fact, moved such a motion themselves a number of years ago.

Mr. Bradley: Take your blinkers off.

Mr. Martel: You simply can't have it both ways, and that's what you're attempting to do.

An hon. member: You're holding things up.

Mr. Nixon: You sound like Billy Davis.

Mr. Martel: Oh no. Well it would be hard to sound like a Liberal because I'd have to be sucking and whistling at the same time, and I find that impossible.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Let's have the question.

Mr. Martel: Everybody is entitled to one mistake in his life, Robert.

Mr. Nixon: That's what your mother said.

Mr. Martel: Yes, I want to tell you, the only thing consistent about the Liberals is their inconsistency, and they demonstrated it again tonight.

Mr. Hall: On with the bill, on with the bill.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Welland-Thorold.

Hon. Mr. Welch: What are you trying to prove, Mel?

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I think my colleague from Sudbury East—

An hon. member: Are you up again?

Mr. Swart: —has adequately answered the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk about the inconsistency of the Liberal Party.

Hon. Mr. Welch: How far can you carry this vanity?

Mr. Swart: But there were two comments, made both by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe) which I think deserve some further comments.

There was the statement that you might have the mayor of a large municipality standing as the mayor of the regional council and this wouldn't be desirable. Of course there's some merit in that observation; but you see, somehow or other, I believe that when the regional council is going to select their chairman they would very likely give consideration to whether that person had time to do the job. Somehow or other I have enough faith—

Mr. Bradley: And now we rewrite history.

Mr. Swart: —in councils to select the person if we leave that wide open.

Mr. Nixon: Your party voted in favour of Niagara.

Mr. Swart: I have enough faith that they will elect the right person.

I would say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, where would he draw the line if he was going to enact legislation? Would he say the head of any municipality may not be elected as the chairman, even where that municipality might only have 5,000 or 7,000 people and he'd have ample time to discharge his duties?

Mr. Nixon: Are you against reasonable consideration?

Mr. Swart: Would he make it 10,000? Would he make it 15,000? Would he make it 25,000? I say all of those would be totally unsatisfactory. We have to leave it up to the regional council.

I want to answer the other comment which was made by the member for Durham West that he wants to leave the right with the councils to select who shall be their chairman.

May I say you never gave this right to the councils. The councils weren't asked in the first place, nor were the citizens asked whether they wanted to have a chairman appointed. The legislation appointed that chairman. The government appointed that chairman and the government said to those regional councils, "You may not have an elected person as chairman of your council. You may select him, but then he'll have to resign." Granted there's been a change in that, in one or two of the regions, but this was the edict from on high—that if that person was elected to regional council then he must resign his elected seat.

I say to you again this is a contradiction of the whole democratic process, at least it is to me and to the other members of this party. The purpose of the whole exercise tonight is to try to bring about the election of a regional chairman.

[10:15]

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Swart's amendment to section 117 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 118 to 128, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: I want to remind the members of the committee that there are a number of amendments to be voted upon. There will be a 10-minute bell.

On resumption:

Mr. Chairman: The first amendment, moved by Mr. Cassidy, is that section 4(2) of the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton Act, as set out in section 1(1) of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in lines four and five and inserting after the words "council", so that the subsection shall read:

(2) At the first meeting of the regional council after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the regional council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the regional council, provided he continues to be a member of the council and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act, and at such meeting the clerk shall preside until the chairman is elected.

The committee divided on Mr. Cassidy's amendment which was negated on the following vote: ayes, 25; nays, 63.

Mr. Chairman: I would advise the committee that there are nine other amendments before the House with the same content but referring to different municipalities. Will the members accept the same vote?

Agreed to.

The committee divided on subsequent amendments to sections 15(1), 30(1), 45(1), 58(1), 68(1), 80(1), 94(1), 106(1) and 117(1) which were negated on the same vote.

Bill 81, as amended reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported two bills with amendments.

[10:30]

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 80, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Bill 81, An Act to amend certain Acts respecting Regional Municipalities.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before moving the adjournment I wish to table the answer to question 84 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 3476.)

Mr. Speaker: A motion to adjourn is deemed to have been made under standing order 28. The member for Beaches-Woodoine has five minutes to express her displeasure with an answer given previously by the Minister of the Environment.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: We will give the honourable member a minute for those who are not interested in this very important debate to leave the chamber.

PAPER MILL CONTROL ORDERS

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, the practice obtained for the people of Ontario and the aggrieved commercial fishermen through the settlement of the government's seven-year lawsuit against the Dow Chemical Company of Canada has demonstrated the weakness of our environmental laws and the unwillingness of the government to get tough with a multinational polluter.

Since the court route has been proved ineffective as a means of protecting our environment, I asked the Minister of the Environment yesterday if he was now prepared to step up the control order route and to see that control orders are strictly enforced.

Specifically, I asked him what he was doing about the Canadian International Paper Company's mill at Hawkesbury on the Ottawa River, had it met the various deadlines in the control order which was placed on it in 1974? This control order was advertised as a model control order, because it contained a series of deadlines designed to reduce drastically the emissions and discharges from the plant.

This particular pulp mill was named in the recent review of water pollution control programs on the Ottawa River, a review done by the three governments, of Ottawa, Quebec and Ontario. It was named in the review as "the major single source of BOD 5 input to the river on the Ontario side."

BOD, as you probably know, Mr. Speaker, stands for biological oxygen demand. An excessive loading of BOD 5 depletes the supply of oxygen in the water, threatening the survival of aquatic plants and animals.

The May 1978 report to which I referred showed that BOD 5 loadings from this plant had actually increased by 65 per cent since the last water quality survey on the Ottawa River, which was published in 1971. That report showed that in 1969 the loading was 227,000 pounds per day. The new report showed that in 1976 it had climbed to 376,000 pounds per day. The report had set a target of 50,000 pounds per day, one seventh of the 1976 loading.

This standard is somewhat tougher than the 1965 guidelines set by the Ontario government but, as I pointed out in my question, the 1977 loading of BOD 5 from the plant was four times the Ontario guidelines. While the company has done a little better on reducing suspended solids, it is still discharging them at almost twice the 1965 Ontario guideline level. This guideline is below the federal, Environment Canada standard, but the May, 1978 report, which I mentioned, regards the Environment Canada standards for both BOD 5 and suspended solids as "a baseline for control," or a bare minimum.

I understand that the two 1976 deadlines in the CIP control order have been met, but I want specific information about the December 31, 1977, deadline by which date the company was to submit applications for approvals of facilities to control the emission of particulates and the discharge of spent sulphite liquor. I expect an answer to this question; and if the company hasn't met the deadline is the ministry considering a prosecution?

I remind the minister of the statement in the ministry's own report entitled Alternative Policies for Pollution Abatement, 1976 Update by Drs. Donner and Victor, which says on page 47 that, "Adequate economic incentives are needed which will make polluting more costly than abatement." Prosecutions and fines are part of that economic incentive.

I also want information as to whether the minister was engaged in renegotiating the next deadlines in the order which occur in 1980 and 1981. If the minister is in fact considering relaxing this model control order against a company which has such a bad record, how can we have any faith in the minister's commitment to protecting the environment and to the principle that polluters must pay?

I'd also like to ask what he is planning to do about the recommendation of the May, 1978, report on the Ottawa River, which suggests—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Ms. Bryden: I'll just complete this sentence, if I may—which suggests that the existing control programs and measurement methods in implementation schedules should be reviewed.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member has already referred to the parts of the control order which was issued January 23, 1975, which have been complied with.

Condition three was that the company was to submit two proposals by December 31, 1977.

One was a design to correct a particulate emission from the power boiler house, and the company did complete an engineering design for a new boiler house which would require an investment of $5.4 million. The second proposal was that a design for the collection of 90 per cent of the spent sulphite liquor, and its incineration to reduce the BOD 5 load to the Ottawa River. The company hired a consultant to complete and to cost a design for such a chemical recovery system. The required investment is $18.5 million.

Construction on item three—the first item I mentioned—was to be completed by December 31, 1980; and the second item I mentioned by December 31, 1981, to study and to propose abatement of residual effluents, in particular from the bleachery.

The current status of this is that the company advised, in October, 1977, that in view of the current conditions of the customer markets for the mill, to comply with the control order schedule would have serious effects at the mill. An amended compliance timetable was requested.

To meet the original timetable equipment purchase orders would have to be placed in the first half of 1978 and concrete poured during this period also. This has not been done. There have been several meetings with the company to develop an amended control order. On June 7, just passed, Mr. Hughson of CIP met with the ministry and indicated that the company could only afford to spend a limited amount of money for pollution control over the next three years. The company requested the control order be amended to a lesser level of expenditure.

Mr. Speaker: This item is disposed of.

The House adjourned at 10:40 p.m.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

FORD MOTOR COMPANY

84. Mr. R. Mackenzie—(Hamilton East): Would the Minister of Labour report to the House: 1. The total number of hourly rated employees in the bargaining unit at Ford Oakville in each month from January through to May 1978. 2. The number working 40 hours, 48 hours and more than 48 hours in each month from January to May 1978. 3. The number laid off in each of the months from January through to May 1978. 4. The number of permits requested to work overtime if any. 5. The overtime cost (costs in excess of 40 hours) for each month from January through May 1978? [Tabled May 30, 1978.]

Hon. B. Stephenson—(Minister of Labour): Questions 1, 2, 3, and 5:

This information is not required to be filed with the Ministry of Labour under any current legislation.

4. The Ford Motor Company at Oakville requested, and was issued, the following permits from January 1, 1978 to May 30, 1978: a) Permit issued March 30, 1978 covering twenty (20) hourly rated employees in four different classifications; b) Permit issued May 30, 1978 covering two (2) plant protection officers; c) Permit issued May 30, 1978 covering nine (9) salaried employees in the marketing and cost analysis departments.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. M. Davidson: A point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: More delay.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. M. Davidson: On Monday, June 12 during question period, when questions were being asked of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) regarding property taxation, I rose on a supplementary question. Hansard has recorded that question as having been asked by the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson). I simply raise the matter to have the record corrected.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I am sure the member for London Centre will appreciate it.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

BURSARIES PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I would like to advise the House that in conjunction with my colleague, the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), who is in Sault Ste. Marie today, we are re-establishing a bursary program to aid our efforts to correct the imbalance of doctors and dentists in our northern communities.

Mr. S. Smith: They are perfectly well balanced up there.

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is only in southern Ontario where they may not be. The imbalance is in Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Starting in September of this year, the government will offer 50 bursaries of $3,000 annually to medical students and 15 of the same value to dental students to help them through their last one or two years of undergraduate studies. University administrators will have details of the program in September, and we will advise interested students of the application procedure.

In return, the students will undertake after graduation to spend an equivalent length of time, that is one or two years, in either an underserved area or in one of our mobile dental coaches. In the event they are unable or unwilling to carry out their commitment of service, they will be required to repay the bursary plus interest. Interest will be payable from the date of receiving the bursary.

Within the next few days I will be advising the medical and dental schools in Ontario of the specific details of the bursary program, which will be administered by my ministry. Members will recall that my ministry operated a similar bursary program from 1969 to 1973 to deal with a deficit of doctors and dentists in some areas of the north at that time.

The program was successful and provided 120 doctors and 30 dentists for underserved areas. It was discontinued because trends at the time indicated that sufficient doctors and dentists were trying to locate in the north. Recently, however, doctors and dentists have been leaving some smaller communities and the re-establishment of this program will help to provide replacements for them.

A particular problem which we will focus on is the recruitment of French-speaking medical and dental students because some French-speaking communities have difficulty attracting bilingual doctors and dentists. This program will cost a total of $195,000 per year and is one of two programs my ministry operates to attract health-care personnel to underserved areas. The other, called our Underserved Area Program, involves financial incentives or guaranteed professional incomes for doctors and dentists who serve in certain designated areas.

The funds for this program are being provided from the regional priorities budget of the Ministry of Northern Affairs, which last year provided my ministry with funds for five new mobile dental coaches. These well-equipped mobile van clinics are staffed by professional personnel and serve the communities of Ignace, Elk Lake, Beardmore, Hornepayne and Chapleau.

These two programs, the bursaries and the dental coaches, are good examples of the coordinating role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs and its use of the regional priority budget to overcome special problems of residents of northern Ontario.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REVIEWS

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, when the government received the report from Dr. Henry Mayo and William Archer on local government in the regions of Ottawa-Carleton and Niagara, it was clear that their recommendations were matters of intense concern to local people and that much discussion and debate would and should ensue before even the first action on the reports could properly be taken by the government. This, after all, was the purpose of the reviews. In the ample time provided, a great deal of local response was in fact received before the government released its white papers. At that time, I felt that a further month would be sufficient for discussion and consultation on the selected positions taken in the white papers.

This has not proven to be the case. While there is substantial agreement on some parts of the limited package presented in the white papers, other issues remain deeply contentious. The government would prefer, therefore, that more time be allowed for local discussion of these issues before taking any legislative action. It is the government's hope that in the near future, sufficient consensus will exist to permit introduction of legislation on those matters covered in the white papers and possibly some matters—

Mr. Roy: Backing off again.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —not covered in them on which there is a will to proceed.

Mr. Speaker, when the report of the Hamilton-Wentworth Region Review Commission was released, impressed on all of us was the urgent need to settle quickly the question of the region's government. The review had been commissioned to examine the system of government in Hamilton-Wentworth in order to dispel the atmosphere of confusion and doubt that has characterized this particular regional government in the past year. The commission concluded that the two real options for Hamilton-Wentworth were to retain the two-tiered system or implement a one-tier system for the same area.

According to the commission, its major recommendation for a fundamental restructuring to a single-tier municipal government was formulated as the alternative that will best serve the goals of strong and efficient local government.

In the short time since the release of the Stewart report, I have been impressed by the volume of the response and by the many thoughtful and reasoned viewpoints expressed, both by citizens and their elected representatives. Nevertheless, a dichotomy of perspectives continues to exist in the region and no consensus has emerged to indicate to the government that legislation to implement a one-tier government is appropriate now.

The government's decision therefore, Mr. Speaker, is to take no action at this time with regard to Hamilton-Wentworth.

Mr. Bradley: Complete inertia.

Mr. Laughren: A familiar refrain from you, Darcy. No action McKeough.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have concluded there may be merit in giving the existing two-tier system—

Mr. Cassidy: The minister of inaction.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —more time to evolve and mature and to allow all parties more time to study the commission's detailed recommendations for reform.

One widely held view in response to the Stewart report was that the real problems of the region can be worked out within the existing framework. For now, then, we look to the elected representatives for their undertaking to work together to determine appropriate measures which will improve the functioning of the region. We would be prepared, at their request, to discuss suitable changes which may be necessary to effect improvements in the existing system; or, if experience shows that fundamental changes are necessary, to put the appropriate measures into effect.

VISITORS

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the honourable members that we have some special guests seated in Your Honour's gallery this afternoon in the person of 20 youthful Scottish exchange students who are paying a visit to our province and to our Legislative Assembly this afternoon. I would like to invite the honourable members to join me in welcoming these young persons and their tutors to this country.

PARLIAMENTARY INTERNS

Mr. Speaker: In keeping with that sentiment, I would like to call the attention of all honourable members to the fact that we have had 14 young parliamentary interns working for various members and caucuses for the past four and a half weeks and I am advised that tomorrow is their last day. As a gesture of hands across the border they asked if it would be possible to have their names entered into the record in Hansard, and so I am going to do that.

Under the supervision of Dr. Helen M. Graves, who is the assistant professor of political science at the University of Michigan, the 14 young interns, who are under the Speaker's gallery, are as follows: Michael Schwartz, Russell Carniak, Robert Coates, John Gillies, Hal Sargent, Kathy Babcock, Ann Lawton, Helene Nadjuk, Nicole Paron, Marcie Blumenthal, Nikkie Kilpatrick, Alice Pasqualini, Elizabeth Silverman and Richard Roosen.

It has been a pleasure having you.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RENT REVIEW

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, Mr. Speaker: In his statement of March 31, at page 1083 of Hansard, when discussing the committee on rent review, the minister said this "will give us time to move into the legislative drafting stage, implementing the general principles approved by that committee . . ." and "I hope to be able to announce the specifics of at least the government's intention, reflecting the desires of the Assembly as expressed through the standing committee's deliberations."

Given those statements, can the minister state whether he intends to implement the recommendations of the standing general government committee's report on rent review which have been made known through press reports, which I gather follow pretty closely our party's position and which all members of the committee are alleged to have signed?

Mr. Cassidy: Which position is this?

Mr. Foulds: Which one? Today's or tomorrow's?

Mr. Rotenberg: Wait for it.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister going to keep to his commitment of March 31 and will he be bringing forward legislation to implement those recommendations?

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you wait for the report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I will wait until the report is tabled, which I understand may be after question period today—

An hon. member: All you have to do is read the Star and ask the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner).

Mr. Bradley: There's no honour among thieves.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in order that I may assess the report itself and decide what action the government will take, whether we will respond directly to the majority report, or perhaps the Hall report or the Campbell report or the Breithaupt report or the Epp report; or whatever comes out of those deliberations.

Mr. Makarchuk: You guys asked for that one.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the minister knows full well that he will learn in a few moments the report was signed by all members and is quite unanimous, will he stay by his promise of March 31 that he would bring in legislation which would implement the general principles approved by that committee? That's a promise he made on March 31. Is there any reason why he should wish now to weaken that particular promise?

Mr. Roy: The minister might as well back off again, he has the example of Darcy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the honourable member will give us an opportunity to read that report, I think I will be in a position to make a statement to the House tomorrow morning. For those members who will hear it tomorrow morning, I will make a full statement to the House on our intentions. I can assure the member generally that of course I, like the rest of the government, live up to all our promises.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) won't hear it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister agree that unlike the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party has been absolutely consistent on this issue—

Mr. Bradley: Consistently bad.

Mr. S. Smith: Hurrah for you, Michael.

Mr. Cassidy: —that we have fought from the very beginning to get a continuation of rent review on a continuing basis to protect tenants of this province; and that it's because of the initiative taken by my party that the Liberal Party has finally found out the right action and has swung into line?

[2:15]

Mr. Rotenberg: You're consistent in leaking to the press. You're consistent in taking everything to the press, that's your only consistency.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you crawl back into your hole?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The NDP has been consistent—and certainly the party whip has worked more effectively than the Liberal Party's whip—but it hasn't been any more creative than the Liberal Party either.

Mr. Roy: You'll have to borrow Cassidy's roller skates.

Mr. Kerrio: That's all we can say about what you have done, Larry—you've been creative.

PENSION FUNDS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question which I guess pertains both to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and also to the provincial Treasurer. I'll try the Minister of CCR first.

Will the minister move as rapidly as possible to make employee representation on pension boards of private companies mandatory, so that employees are aware of and can influence decisions on their own pension plans? Will he also make mandatory the inclusion of an actuarial statement with each annual report of private companies, stating the position of the fund, the extent of the liability and the assumption upon which liability calculations and contributions are based?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I, of course, wouldn't be prepared at this time to give a commitment to do any of those things without doing what I guess on this side of the House we put a high priority on, and that is first having extensive dialogue with all the people involved—

Ms. Gigantes: Dilly dally.

Mr. Roy: Get an expensive report.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —the companies, the pension funds, the persons running them, and the employees involved.

Mr. Pope: Who refers everything to committees?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We put that as a high priority and we will have that dialogue.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since it is fully within the capacity of the Legislature to have committee hearings on any proposed legislation and to have all the dialogue necessary, and since I assume that the minister must surely be aware of the very serious rumours of unfunded liabilities which presently exist in both public and private pension funds, I would have thought these dialogues would have taken place already. Will the minister give this House some commitment that this is under active study and that we will have some legislation to give employees representation and to make public disclosure mandatory so that we will all know where we stand? Will he bring such legislation forward, at the very latest in the fall of this year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, the member is aware that the royal commission on pensions is looking into the entire area and all aspects of pensions. I don't think it would be appropriate for us to unilaterally come out at this time and undermine the work of that royal commission at this particular time.

Mr. Blundy: Tell that to the Prestolite employees who are losing their pension funds.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's just foolish to suggest that. May I further say that one of the things the private sector is telling us all the time is that it has to be in a position to have some reliability and some predictability on what government is going to do.

Mr. Roy: You can't rely on McKeough for that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When you set up a royal commission and you tell the private sector, the public at large and the employees that this is the forum in which these matters are going to be discussed, then it is obviously incumbent upon us, barring a crisis, to let that process play out. That's what it's all about. With respect, for a party such as the Liberal Party, which is falling over itself in trying to capture that part of the electorate, the private sector, and play up to private enterprise and free enterprise—all of which is quite properly the territory of this party, I am happy to say—

Mr. S. Smith: You are getting nervous, aren't you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —for that party, in an attempt to curry favour with that sector, to now say that unilaterally, without dialogue, without waiting for the royal commission to report, we should just slap on legislation isn't going to help it a heck of a lot as it tumbles down that road, fast on what it has done with the landlords just recently.

Mr. Bradley: That's just what we need, a lecture from you.

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question to the minister, because of the fear which may be created in people's minds because of the question raised by the Leader of the Opposition, will the minister now give a categorical assurance that none of the persons who may become entitled to pensions in the private or the public sector is in any jeopardy at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can phrase it in this way: The superintendent of pensions has not reported any critical cases to me since I have been in this job.

On the basis of that track record, I feel very safe in presuming that there is no imminent crisis upon us and no one is in that position.

I will, however, for the benefit not only of the House but of course, all those who have pensions which they may be concerned about—perhaps unnecessarily throughout the results of this exchange—check again with the superintendent of pensions and perhaps report as early as tomorrow morning, if possible.

Mr. Roy: How can the minister stand there and try to posture as a defender of the consumer, when he will not give an undertaking to my leader, and in fact he will let some of the consumers sit on board and have some input in pension plans?

How can the minister stand there and say that private enterprise in this province is looking for some predictability of government when one of his leaders, the Treasurer, stood up in this House in the last three or four days and backed off on every report he has commissioned in this province over the last two years?

Mr. Stong: Unreliable.

Mr. Makarchuk: Darcy's great flexibility; Flexible Darcy, they call him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What has been occurring in some of those instances—all of which the Treasurer has very carefully outlined and explained—of course to a very large extent results from carrying on the very type of dialogue this government likes to undertake prior to legislation, and obviously dialogue sometimes results in a situation in which you don't proceed.

Mr. Roy: Now he's defending the Treasurer. He is backtracking and he knows it.

Mr. Martel: A one-tripper.

An hon. member: Do you realize the Treasurer thinks your defence is the kiss of death?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member's party and leader, on the other hand, would prefer to go to legislation and talk later; have the dialogue later and then come back and rectify mistakes. We don't think that is the way to govern.

Mr. Roy: We will give leadership here. The minister's party has lost its will to govern over there.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Fiddle. You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Wildman: In his investigations, would the minister check with the superintendent of insurance on the Prestolite matter, where it is rumoured there is an unfunded liability in the range of $5 million in that pension plan? If that is the case, will he look at the provisions of the American legislation which requires at least one-third funding for any pension plan like this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will look into Prestolite and will be pleased to report to the member.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Energy arising out of the discussions of the last couple of days about the—

Mr. Yakabuski: Not again.

Mr. Cassidy: —proposed increase in allowable radiation standards which have been put forward by the interorganizational working group, a committee of which Ontario Hydro and the AECB are, apparently, members.

The proposal would raise the allowable exposure to 100 rads from the present 25. I want to point out that 10 rads causes temporary sterility; 250 rads would kill half of the population if people were exposed to that level.

In other words, it is a serious increase in the exposure level.

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Cassidy: When did Ontario Hydro discover that Ontario reactors could not meet the 25 rad safety standard in the case of an accident; and why is it that nobody at Ontario Hydro notified the Porter commission of these findings?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It depends on the intensity and the length of the period of exposure.

Mr. Renwick: He will answer the second part first.

Mr. McClellan: Let Stephenson answer; she knows the answer.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Involved in that question were two or three premises that I cannot accept.

The premise that 25 rads is not safe is a premise which has not been accepted by the scientists involved.

Ms. Gigantes: What about 100?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The whole study of the interorganizational working group that the honourable leader of the third party has referred to has been looking in detail at this very complex and scientific subject. They presented their first draft reports to the Atomic Energy Control Board some months ago; and also to the reactor safety advisory committee, which is a group made up of scientists and people coming from industry and from government and from universities and so on. They are now working on their second draft.

They have also told the Porter commission that this work was under way. To imply strongly in this House, as has been done just now, that Ontario Hydro is now operating at an unsafe level is most unfortunate. On a subject which is of such great public importance, I would hope that we in this House would try our best not to make a very volatile subject even more inflammatory.

Mr. Martel: You told us that about Denison too.

Mr. Laughren: Where is your responsibility?

Ms. Gigantes: You have blinkers on.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would hope we would keep the alarmist talk down.

We all owe that to the people of Canada and to the people of Ontario.

I can only assure the leader of the third party that Ontario Hydro operates today, as it always has, under the Atomic Energy Control Board's safety standards. Until those standards are changed, we are operating safely. Even Dr. Porter said the other day that he would live outside any of the generating reactors.

Mr. Martel: You told us there was no danger at Elliot Lake either. We got all the platitudes like that then as well.

Mr. Laughren: We have heard that before.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Will the minister confirm that Ontario Hydro has established that it cannot operate in the case of serious accidents within the 25-rad safety standard, and has, therefore, participated in recommending a 100-rad safety standard? Will he also confirm that, while the 25-rad standard could be marginally dangerous to people who were suffering that exposure, the 100-rad standard is very substantially dangerous in the event that anyone was exposed to that level of radiation?

Mr. Laughren: We have learned the hard way.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I regret once again that there are premises and implications in that question which I simply cannot accept. It is true that Ontario Hydro, along with Quebec Hydro and others in the nuclear energy field, is participating in this study dealing with the radiation safety question.

Mr. Laughren: They have a vested interest.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Until such time as that committee has done its work and until the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada has made its decision, we have every assurance they are operating at a reasonable and safe level.

I think it would be most unfortunate and inaccurate if we were to perpetuate the kind of feeling here that until such time as that report comes out from AECB we are living in a very hazardous situation.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: For purposes of clarification, I wonder if the minister would check the terminology of that report to establish whether we're talking about rads or rems or whatever, because there is a very distinguishable difference. It would be a good idea to make sure the statement itself is accurate.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would be pleased to respond to that. The committee itself is dealing with principles and criteria which are being established, which have been established and which may be amended, governing a number of safety features, including the famous acronym rad, which is radioactive something or other.

Mr. Breaugh: Use the technical term "hot stuff."

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I'll get the correct term.

Mr. Martel: And you want us to believe you know the answer?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I will make sure that all members get the report, once the Atomic Energy Control Board has approved it, it will be public knowledge. We also understand it will be written in language which the general public can understand.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary: Is the minister telling us or denying the report that Ontario Hydro is participating in a study which is going significantly to loosen safety standards? Is there a yes or a no to that? If so, would he please table for our information the information on which Ontario Hydro is arguing the case so that the Atomic Energy Control Board will loosen its standards, and then he can come and tell us that it's all right because the Atomic Energy Control Board says so?

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Once again, there are premises and implications in that question I just can't agree with. Ontario Hydro is participating in this study, as it should. I think this is a responsible act on their particular part.

Mr. Foulds: Does the minister think increased radiation is a good thing?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: But the member must wait until the Atomic Energy Board of Canada has taken a look at it and also until the—

Mr. Cassidy: They wouldn't.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —reactor safety advisory committee which is made up of the best scientists and engineers in the country, has looked at it.

Mr. Warner: Why doesn't the minister ask them himself?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Once they have looked at it and come back members get that report, and so will we.

Mr. Foulds: The AECB says increased radiation is a good thing.

ESL PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) in the absence of the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells). Is she aware of the fact that the English-as-a-second-language program in Metro Toronto has been cut from 281 teachers this past year to 202 teachers for September 1978 when the Ministry of Education, which comes under that secretariat, has decided to increase the flow of legislative funds for Metro Toronto in 1978-79 by $3 million to begin to address the needs of children who need to learn English?

Mr. Speaker: I'll turn my question over to the Minister of Education, who has just come into the House. That will leave the Provincial Secretary for Social Development off the hook, I might say. I'll start again.

Is the Minister of Education concerned at all that the Metropolitan Toronto School Board is cutting the English-as-a-second-language program this fall from 281 teachers last fall to 202 teachers, despite the fact the ministry has increased the grant for English as a second language by $3 million beginning in the fall so that the school board could begin to address the needs of children who need to learn English?

Hon. Mr. Wells: We had a very thorough discussion about this particular matter during the estimates.

Ms. Gigantes: But no answers.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would beg to differ with my friend from Carleton East. We did discuss the matter of teachers of English as a second language during the estimates of this ministry. We indicated that the numbers we're talking about now are the numbers identified as teachers of English as a second language. There will be other teachers teaching English as a second language who come from another section of the teaching appropriation that Metro gives to each board. That number will not be known for at least another month or so till the boards decide the numbers that are needed.

Further, I recall at least eight weeks ago giving the figures in this House to show that the numbers are adequate, based on the criteria the Toronto board used, because of the decreasing numbers, in their opinion, of those who need this instruction and based on their criteria of those who would be in classes for English as a second language.

Ms. Gigantes: They're your criteria.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm not saying they're right or they're wrong; however, based on their figures, there was a decline this year in the number of students who should be in these classes.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that the cuts in provision of English-as-a-second-language services within Metro Toronto are going to be of the order of 28 per cent and that the anger and the outrage expressed by people from all of the ethnic group is almost without precedent in the history of the Metropolitan Toronto School Board? Will the minister act quickly in order to ensure that the priority the ministry has put forward to ensure there are more programs like this, is implemented by the board, and results in maintaining the ESL programs at least at last year's levels, if not by improving them?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will give my friend a full report on this particular matter. I would point out to him again, there has been a decline in the number of pupils who would qualify for English as a second language.

Mr. McClellan: The minister knows why that is.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Therefore, applying the formula in the way the Metropolitan Toronto School Board does, it needs fewer teachers. I'm not saying whether that formula is right or whether the definition of who falls into this category is right.

Mr. McClellan: That's the problem, the minister knows it's the definition.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The fact is there has been a decline; therefore, using their formula, they find they need fewer teachers this year than they did last year.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: If the Metro board, through their funding structure, can draw to them from the Ministry of Education additional funds for English as a second language, what mechanism, if any, does the minister have to ensure that those dollars are used specifically for that purpose?

Mr. McClellan: None. He doesn't have any.

Mr. Cassidy: None.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think we have the assurance and the faith in the integrity of those people who are elected, as we are elected, to the area school boards and the Metropolitan Toronto School Board and who take their jobs as seriously as we do, that they will do what is best for those students in Metropolitan Toronto. I believe that they wish, just as sincerely, to be as sure those programs and teachers are available, as those of us who are elected to this Legislature do.

I don't have any legislative procedure, but I do have a procedure to pass that money on to the Metro school board—

Ms. Gigantes: To wash your hands.

Hon. Mr. Wells:—then I believe that those ladies and gentlemen, working with the problem they have before them, will be sure the money is spent in the areas where it should be spent.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister is talking about a decrease in English-as-a-second-language students across Metropolitan Toronto, why is it that he and his ministry felt the need to boost that program by $3 million when, if he is correct and if Metro is correct, the need was decreasing? Is that what the minister is saying, that the need is decreasing?

Ms. Gigantes: By the minister's definition.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am saying that the figures I quoted in the House about eight weeks ago show that the number of students who qualified for English-as-a-second-language classes had decreased this year.

Mr. Foulds: How did they qualify?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Our weighting factor, which generates the extra money, is paid on the enrolment in the previous year; so the enrolment in this year will be what the weighting factor for English as a special language is based on in the next year.

Mr. Cassidy: So the grants will go down next year. Is that right?

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for Kitchener-Wilmot.

Mr. Sweeney: Since the definition of need in Metro Toronto is based on the principle that a student may only stay in the English-as-a-second language class for two years, does the minister have any control over those students who may need it for more than two years? Or is that beyond the minister's control?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That's beyond my control—

Mr. Foulds: Most things are.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think that my friend, having been a director of education, would know that the setting of the definition and the deciding of what the criteria would be for those in English-as-a-second-language classes are established by the local school board.

If they want to establish it at five years rather than at two years, then that's fine. But that's up to them; we don't set that kind of criterion. We just believe that there should be good English-as-a-second-language programs available. That, of course, I certainly subscribe to.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Bellwoods with a final supplementary.

Mr. Peterson: Final supplementary? Mr. Speaker, why do you always change the rule when I stand up.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Does the minister not agree that since he funds the ESL program it is within his power to establish the criteria for funding which would give a broad definition to ESL, incorporating all kids who need ESL programs and not just children who were born abroad? May I ask the minister why he doesn't revise his criteria to require that kind of a definition?

Hon. Mr. Wells: As I said a few minutes ago, I think that's a reasonable suggestion to look at. But my friend shouldn't ever forget that there are also people elected a lot closer to the local community than he and I, who were elected specifically to look after the educational needs of the community.

Mr. Foulds: Speak for yourself.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We all talk in this House about these people having the autonomy and the power to make some of these decisions. They are the ones who have to make some of these decisions, and it behoves us sometimes to believe that they have the sense to make the right decisions.

Mr. Grande: To whom are they accountable?

Mr. McClellan: You know it's the right thing to do; you should just do it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for London Centre with a spanking new question.

PREMIUM ASSISTANCE

Mr. Peterson: Thank you very kindly, Mr. Speaker. I would take the liberty of informing you now, sir, that there's the possibility of a supplementary. I would beg your indulgence for at least one.

To the Minister of Health: Why, in applying for temporary premium assistance under section 24 of the Health Act, are all applicants compelled to give full details of their liquid assets without being informed of the upper limits of such assets which would preclude eligibility from such assistance?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. As the member was reading that question, it didn't come across clearly. Was he asking about why they are asked about liquid assets?

Mr. J. Reed: That's about the way you read them.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to rephrase my original question in view of the Minister of Health's medical problem, not understanding it. The question is, why does the ministry not reveal to an applicant for temporary premium assistance, even though it requires a financial statement from him, what are the upper limits of his financial status which would preclude his being eligible for this assistance? Why doesn't the ministry tell him the rules?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will check into the procedure. I don't review all the applications, obviously, but I would assume that when the procedures were established it was on the basis that those who need it will get it; those who don't, won't.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: In fact, there are no rules about who needs it and who doesn't need it. No one can apply unless the ministry has responded that yes, there are rules.

Let me read a letter from Mr. Hope, head of the pay-direct enrolment: "It was decided by OHIP that the upper limits for temporary assistance criteria may not be made available to the general public." Why does the ministry keep this secret? As there is an appeal, why does the ministry not let people know the rules from which they can appeal?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On the question of appeals generally, I have made it clear to my staff repeatedly—in fact there were one or two things that came to light recently—that in all matters where appeals are available we must develop—and this is under way—set forms or letters or whatever. These are to go to people if they are denied something to tell them that they do have the right of appeal.

Mr. Roy: Secrecy though—respond to the secrecy.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That was made very clear and will be cleaned up where it is deficient.

Mr. Peterson: But the applicant doesn't know; how can he possibly appeal?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I said I would check into the matter. I don't receive the applications to review them, but the taxable income criteria are very clearly spelled out. I'll check all the other information to see if it is deficient in any way.

BURSARIES PROGRAM

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Health with reference to his statement regarding the bursary program for medical doctors: The statement implies there will be a three- or four-year delay before any doctors are coming onstream as a result of this program. How does the minister plan to deal with the immediate program of shortage of medical people in northern Ontario which in some areas is acute right today?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the first benefits of this reinstatement of the bursary program will be within a year. I pointed out that it is for the last one or two years of study so we will start to get people coming out of the schools within about a year. Secondly, I would point out that the underserved area program has been extremely successful. We are reinstating this as an aid to that program.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Not in all areas.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It isn't always perfect but I think our record in terms of the number of vacancies at any point in time has been extremely good.

Mr. Martel: Except if you are in those communities that don't have doctors.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't recall receiving any letters from the honourable member about particular communities, but if he cares to let me know, then we can get Dr. Copeman and his staff working on them. But I think if one looks at places like Chapleau, for instance—it's not that far from Sudbury—

Mr. Martel: Just on the outskirts.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—whereas I recall, there were two doctors—

Mr. Martel: Three hundred miles.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member keeps telling me that in the north that is close.

Mr. Martel: Just a jaunt in the morning.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's right. Might keep in shape.

Mr. Martel: You might jog there some day.

Mr. Wildman: What about Dubreuilville?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have been very successful maintaining services there. We recognize for a variety of reasons we are facing problems in the future. To meet those problems before they get too acute we have reinstated this program to assist the underserved area program.

Mr. Martel: I hope you make a tour to the north.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary: He motivated me to ask the next question. Is the minister aware that the only neurosurgeon we have in the city of Sudbury is leaving town and we are left without a neurosurgeon for a large population such as that?

Mr. Conway: Send Elgie.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am very well aware of that, and that was the prime reason I was motivated to indicate that a CAT scanner will be allocated to Sudbury. It is obvious in this day and age you are not going to get a neurosurgeon back to Sudbury without that particular diagnostic tool. That is why I did it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In view of the fact the minister is bringing this program back in, could he indicate to the House what shortage there is in doctors and dentists in the northern program? Could he also indicate if he has any other programs in mind to stimulate people to move to northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I recall, we are running about 10 per cent vacancy right now, which is not considered to be a crisis or an unmanageable situation. Rather, looking ahead, we want to be sure it doesn't get much worse than that and we think the reinstatement of the bursary program will be of assistance in that regard.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: I would like the minister to clarify, if he would, whether he is restricting his efforts to bursaries for present undergraduate students or does it apply in the immediate situation, for example, to Lakehead Psychiatric Hospital dentists in Thunder Bay from which he withdrew the underserved area program grant? Is he reinstating that portion of the underserved area program—the immediate grant—to someone accepting a job in an underserved area? Secondly, is he applying it to nurse practitioners?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The answer to the second part of the question is no. In answer to the first part, I just sent the honourable member a letter yesterday, explaining all the details of the position at Lakehead Psychiatric Hospital and indicating how I think that can be resolved. I think the effort to date hasn't been totally effective because it hasn't been all-inclusive. What I have announced today is in addition to the underserviced area program; it is not rolled into the underserved area program.

MILK SUPPLIES

Mr. G. Taylor: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. On a newscast last night, there was an item concerning the plight of the cheese processors and milk producers of eastern and central Ontario in regard to the lack of markets and diminishing markets.

Mr. Riddell: That's been asked. Where have you been?

Mr. Wildman: That was already asked.

Mr. Kerrio: I just happen to have the answer right here in front of me.

Mr. G. Taylor: When is the minister going to get tough with Ottawa and get back our quotas for our farmers and cheese processors in this area—

Mr. Martel: The minister put him up to that. Did he get help on this?

Mr. G. Taylor:—so that they will not be left in the proverbial position of sucking the rearmost mammary gland of some animal peculiar to farming?

Mr. Roy: You are only two weeks behind with that. We raised it here.

Mr. Martel: Good question.

Mr. Kerrio: Answer the last question first.

Hon. W. Newman: I believe I answered part of the question the other day for one of the members opposite, but I'll be glad to explain it to the member in a little more detail.

Mr. Martel: The member is fired.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Explain it slowly.

Mr. Bradley: That's an abuse of the question period.

Mr. Germa: Read Hansard.

Hon. W. Newman: I had the opportunity a week ago Monday to meet with the federal Minister of Agriculture regarding this particular matter. I made many suggestions to him about how he could allocate more industrial milk quota or MSQ to this province for the making of cheddar cheese, which we're short of now. We thought they were very constructive recommendations. One was that milk equivalent export outside of Canada would not affect the total national supply management system in Canada. Therefore, we should get credit for what we export from Ontario out of the country.

We felt we should get credit for industrial milk that was moving to other provinces from Ontario. Because we have been encouraged by Ottawa to produce specialty cheese over the last three years in order to replace imports, which we have done in Ontario, where we have produced at lot more specialty cheese, we felt we should get the necessary credit we needed for industrial milk to supply the needs for cheddar cheese.

We went as far as to recommend to Ottawa that Ontario, in conjunction with the dairy farmers of Ontario, would be prepared nto to tender any powdered milk or butter to the Canadian Dairy Commission in return for a reduction in the in-quota levy of milk, and also for the additional quota we would need to produce the cheddar cheese that is desperately needed here in Ontario, not only for our own consumers but for export purposes.

Mr. O'Neil: Supplementary: I wonder if I could ask the minister when he feels these changes will be brought about so that the farmers in eastern Ontario will feel the effects of the changes?

Hon. W. Newman: As the honourable member knows, a week ago Monday I met with Mr. Whelan and all his staff. I think we presented a very good case. He also asked us to send through more detailed information and statistical data. We feel his people did not have accurate data—and that's a matter of opinion—so we sent him the data we had, which we felt was very accurate, in order to justify our particular case.

I'm sure he knows the plight we are in in Ontario. I'm very hopeful that some consideration will be given to some of these matters. We didn't go down only to tell him about our problem and how we needed the milk, but we offered him solutions without disrupting the whole national milk supply management scheme. I think that is very fair because we said, "This is what we will do to make sure it works." As the member knows, the total industrial milk quota is allocated by the Canadian Dairy Commission, which is under the control of the federal government and the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary: In view of the fact that I met just yesterday with representatives of the National Farmers' Union and the Ontario Federation of Agriculture in Renfrew county regarding this very matter—

Mr. Bradley: You need a third arm to pat yourself on the back.

Mr. Roy: Do they still vote for you?

Mr. Yakabuski: —is the minister also aware of their concern that the shortage of cheddar cheese might lead to the acceptance of an imitation cheese that could get on the market here in Ontario and Canada?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Pardon my cold. When I was down in Ottawa talking to Mr. Whelan we talked about many other matters. One of the matters which we talked about was cheese analogue, which is the phoney cheese, if you want to call it that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You are the big cheese.

Hon. W. Newman: We've asked him to do an in-depth study of the contents of that commodity in order that we can deal with it at an appropriate time. I assume we will be talking about it at the federal-provincial conference in July in Yorkton, Saskatchewan.

Mr. Cassidy: I have the experimental farm in my riding, Mr. Speaker, which is why I'm qualified to ask this question.

Hon. W. Newman: I am glad to hear it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I'm not sure that qualifies the honourable member.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister say whether it is a proposal or whether it has been agreed that the export levy in Ontario will, in fact, be cut? If it is going to be cut, what steps will he take to ensure that the benefit is passed on to the consumers of cheese and dairy products in Ontario?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure what the honourable member means by the export levy being cut.

Mr. Cassidy: That is what the minister said.

Hon. W. Newman: No, I said we should get a credit. It may be my cold, and the honourable member may not have understood. The amount of product going out of Ontario, outside of Canada, would not affect the national supply management in Ontario, but we should get credit in the province of Ontario for that MSQ that is being exported out of this province and out of the country.

NORTH BAY PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on June 8, the members for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) and Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) asked me to report on an incident in the North Bay Psychiatric Hospital on Tuesday night, June 6, in which two staff members were injured, one very seriously, by a male patient.

The member for Nipissing specifically asked if I was aware that this particular man had been a patient at Penetanguishene mental health centre on a Lieutenant Governor's warrant for some time. He also asked why the patient was released from the maximum security Penetang facility and transferred to what he referred to as a "loose security hospital" like North Bay Psychiatric. In addition, he requested that I explain the procedures involved in the transfer. The honourable member also stated that on the day in question, the patient had been given a pass to go to downtown North Bay.

In order to put the entire matter into its proper perspective I would like to outline the previous history of the patient in question, beginning on October 20, 1976, when he was admitted initially to North Bay Psychiatric Hospital on an order of remand under the Criminal Code.

On December 21, 1976, two months later, the staff at North Bay Psychiatric Hospital felt that the patient's mental condition had improved to the degree that he was able to stand trial. Consequently, he was returned to court and on January 24, 1977, he was found not guilty by reason of insanity. He was ordered to be held in strict custody until the pleasure of the Lieutenant Governor was known.

On January 27, 1977, the patient was admitted to the mental health centre at Penetanguishene on a warrant signed by Her Honour, the Lieutenant Governor. The warrant stated that the administrator of the mental health centre at Penetanguishene was to safely keep the patient until his discharge or transfer was authorized by lawful authority.

On May 9, 1977, the administrator of the mental health centre at Penetanguishene submitted a request to the director of the psychiatric hospitals branch asking that the patient's case be reviewed by the advisory review board in the fall of 1977.

On May 19, 1977, as authorized under section 31 of the Mental Health Act, I requested the secretary of the advisory review board, Barry Swadron, to have this man's case considered when the review board sat at the mental health centre at Penetanguishene.

The patient was seen by the advisory review board on October 14, 1977, and the board unanimously recommended that the administrator of the mental health centre at Penetanguishene be given the discretion to transfer the patient to North Bay Psychiatric Hospital to be safely kept at that facility. The patient was transferred to North Bay Psychiatric Hospital on January 3, 1978. This patient was not considered dangerous to himself or others on the date he was transferred to North Bay.

On admission to North Bay Psychiatric Hospital medication was prescribed and it was decided that the patient should get involved in work within the hospital. However, he was not allowed off the hospital grounds without staff in attendance because of his status as a patient under a warrant of the Lieutenant Governor.

Records at the hospital indicate that the patient used his privileges well and did not abuse them. He had been working with the gardening crew without incident. However, on February 15, 1978, he refused medication. He agreed to resume medication on March 2 but refused again later that month. Medication was therefore discontinued on March 31, 1978. On June 6, 1978, he was again seen by the advisory review board. Following the interview, staff asked him to return to his ward, but he stayed in the corridor and was using the public telephone. The staff assumed the patient would return to his ward as usual. When he did not return, a ground search was initiated and he was located. When he saw staff in the area, he climbed on to the back of a truck, picked up a board and refused to let staff approach. An emergency call was made and additional staff came to the scene. Approximately 15 staff then surrounded the truck to prevent the patient from escaping.

As Mr. Bob Guillemette, registered nursing assistant, came out of the building near the truck, he was struck on the head by the board held by the patient. Mr. Guillemette had made no overt attempts to subdue the patient but was simply walking by the truck towards the group of staff surrounding the vehicle. Soon after this, Mr. John Black, registered nursing assistant, was struck on the head by the same board. Mr. Black had not made an overt attempt to subdue the patient but was attempting to assist Mr. Guillemette. The patient was finally subdued by staff.

At 7:50 p.m. the North Bay city police and an ambulance were called, and Mr. Guillemette and Mr. Black were transferred to Civic Hospital in North Bay. The administrator of North Bay Psychiatric Hospital immediately arranged with the duty medical officer at the mental health centre at Penetanguishene to accept the patient on transfer and called an ambulance to have him transferred to Penetanguishene, accompanied by staff.

The next morning, Mr. Bob Guillemette was moved from Civic Hospital in North Bay to the Toronto General Hospital. At the present time, Mr. Guillemette is in the neurological unit at the Toronto General Hospital in critical condition.

The second injured staff member, Mr. Black, was discharged from the Civic Hospital in North Bay on June 12, 1978.

Finally, my staff have assured me that on the day in question, June 6, the patient had not been given a pass to go to downtown North Bay.

Mr. Roy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I am certainly not trying to tell you what to do, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the lengthy statement and in view of the fact that the standing orders are quite clear, could we have some time added to the question period for that statement, please?

Mr. Speaker: Due to the amount of detail that was involved in the answer to the question, I think it would have been more appropriately made during statements by the ministry. I will add three more minutes to the question period.

Mr. Bolan: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of the fact that, before this particular incident, several employees had complained to the administrator about the fact that this man was considered dangerous and that he should not be working in an area where there were tools such as garden tools and what have you? If that is the case, what proposals does the minister have where-by employees complain to the administrator about a situation which they might consider dangerous?

Ms. Gigantes: Bill 70.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is ultimately a decision of the physician in charge of a patient's case to assess the potential for physical harm to himself or to other patients and staff, and to prescribe a proper program for the treatment and rehabilitation of the patient. That is always the course that will be followed, and ultimately it is the physician in charge who must assume that responsibility.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Now that the minister has had the opportunity to review not just this case but the general principles underlying the particular situation, is he prepared to recommend to his colleague the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) that no exemption be sought from the health and safety legislation for psychiatric hospitals so that workers in the psychiatric hospitals will be able to work with management in order to get the safest procedures to follow in cases like this so that this kind of tragedy will not happen again?

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, the question of that particular legislation is one which is under active consideration by my colleague and the government but, as he also knows, the question of safety in the workplace in terms of dealing with patients and care for oneself is something which is stressed repeatedly and regularly in the psychiatric hospitals as well as in the public hospitals.

I may say that one of the things that happened yesterday in the standing committee on social development in reviewing Bill 19 is particularly germane to this particular incident, inasmuch as the committee had proposed to it by one of the members—my colleague the member for York East (Mr. Elgie), a treatment model which we had discussed with the medical association and others six months ago, which will be of tremendous assistance in cases like this, because this particular individual had refused—and he was competent, a competent patient—to take his medication as of the end of March. Under the amendment passed by the committee yesterday, we will now be able to deal with that kind of a situation to ensure that all possible is being done to assist the patient and, thereby, hopefully avoid any unnecessary incidents.

COLUMBUS McKINNON LIMITED

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Minister of Labour: Now that the strike at Columbus McKinnon in St. Catharines has reached a Niagara Peninsula record, I believe, of eight months in length and in view of the fact that several mediators from the ministry have been unable to bring about a settlement of this very difficult labour dispute, would the minister be prepared to intervene personally to resolve the differences between the two parties?

Hon. B. Stephenson: To my knowledge there has been no face-to-face negotiation for the last several days between the parties in this dispute, and it would seem to me to be the most appropriate action to encourage them, persuade them, cajole them, do something, to get them back to the table again to discuss their differences. That is actively being pursued at the present time by the director of industrial relations and it's hoped at this point that there will be yet another meeting early next week, at which time we will be actively attempting to resolve the problem.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: In light of the fact that the union reduced its proposals on the last two occasions when the parties met in Toronto and that the company has rejected these proposals without even offering the courtesy of a counter-proposal and in view of the fact that, as the minister says, no meaningful face-to-face negotiations have taken place, would the minister not agree that, since her ministry has worked very hard to resolve this question, the only real option left would be the minister's own personal intervention using the best in her office, so to speak, to bring the two parties together and to encourage them to meaningfully negotiate a just and equitable settlement?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, I am not convinced that I am the most able individual in the area of labour-management relationships in resolving problems.

Mr. Mancini: I have said that all along.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There are many on the staff of the Ministry of Labour who have had much more experience and, I think, are very much more capable. Those people we will be delighted to direct towards finding a solution to the Columbus McKinnon problem.

MANITOULIN ISLAND JAIL

Mr. Lupusella: I have a question of the Solicitor General: Considering that the conditions in Manitoulin Island police jail are "a clear insult to human dignity, disgusting and worse than a Nazi concentration camp" as was stated by a county court judge in last Tuesday's Globe and Mail, can the minister state to this House what he is prepared to do in order that the basic concepts of decency and humanity will prevail and that steps will be taken to provide adequate cells in the cause of law enforcement?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, this is a rather unique situation in this particular area and as the article points out quite correctly—

Mr. Cassidy: They are all unique.

Mr. Germa: Whose riding is that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —the OPP is using other facilities when this particular facility is full.

Mr. Wildman: Yes—Espanola and Sudbury. Sudbury's 100 miles away.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is only in certain times, when this has happened in the past, and I have asked—

Mr. Germa: It is the member for Algoma-Manitoulin's (Mr. Lane) riding. He is not looking after it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —the commissioner to look into it. But as the article states there is a change in policy there. When that cell is filled, they use facilities in an adjoining community.

Mr. Laughren: You should spend a week-end there, George.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is quite definite that the conditions that prevailed in respect to the trial that took place before Judge Hogg will not happen again, and I have asked for a report that that will be confirmed.

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: It's really a shame that this particular incident took place in Ontario. But, anyway, taking into consideration that maybe other OPP jails similar to the one which exists in Manitoulin Island exist elsewhere, would the minister undertake a widespread investigation of all OPP jails existing in the province in order that the situation will be corrected as soon as possible?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As usual, Mr. Speaker, the member is prone to exaggeration.

Mr. Laughren: Spend a weekend there.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is not happening all over the province and he knows it.

Mr. M. Davidson: He didn't say that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There is nothing the matter—

Mr. M. N. Davison: They should lock you in that cell for a week.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —with that jail cell. The cell is quite clean.

Mr. Cooke: You try to minimize everything.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It's quite proper. It is quite a modern cell from that point of view.

Mr. Cooke: Why don't you talk to Frank?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The problem here has been overcrowding. That is the problem. You can't put three or four people in a cell, and it shouldn't be done. It's a question of overcrowding. It's not a question of an old, ancient, improper facility at all. If it is used properly, it is quite a modern facility. To imply this is happening all over the province in OPP lockups is nonsense.

Mr. Foulds: One place is too much.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: If you have any evidence that there are other areas and other lockups that are like this, please let me know.

Mr. Lupusella: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think the implication which was expressed by the Solicitor General is not what I have said. I encouraged the Solicitor General to undertake an investigation around Ontario in order that similar incidents wouldn't take place. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Laughren: He is misleading the House.

JURORS' UIC PAYMENTS

Mr. Roy: I have a question of the Provincial Secretary of Justice, in the absence of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry). That's one of the useful features of policy secretariats when the minister is not here. I would like to ask the minister this, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the fact that one of the highest duties of citizens in this province is serving jury duty, and in view of the fact there are a great number of people unemployed, would the minister agree to get in touch with the federal Minister of Immigration and Manpower and advise him that as a minister of the crown and as Provincial Secretary of Justice in this province he abhors, or disagrees with, the fact that unemployment insurance benefits should be cut off for an individual who serves on a jury and happens to be unemployed in this province?

Mr. Worton: Pay a little more for jury duty.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am surprised that is being done in view of the amount we pay jurors.

Mr. Roy: Yes—10 bucks. That's a supplementary income.

Mr. Martel: Don't brag about that one, George.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I can't see how that would be considered a supplementary income to any extent. I would be happy to look into that.

Mr. Roy: If I may ask a supplementary, Mr. Speaker: While the minister is informing the federal Minister of Immigration and Manpower of the wishes of this House, that there is a contradiction in having UIC benefits cut off while serving jury duty, would he also give some consideration, as has been promised by many of his predecessors, to looking at what people who are serving on juries are paid in this province?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: To answer the last question, we are doing that, particularly in cases of long trials. For example, if, like the Jaques case, they extended over 10 days or two weeks, there certainly should be added compensation.

Mr. Roy: That's right, for self-employed people.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Charlton: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. In light of the fact we are going to be allowing for French-speaking juries in some areas of the province, and in view of the fact that French-language advisory committees are supposed to be elected this fall by the French-speaking ratepayers of this province, why is the minister not prepared to have identification of French-speaking Ontarians as a part of the municipal enumeration which will be conducted by the assessment division of his ministry this fall?

Mr. Laughren: Good question.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have never made the statement that we wouldn't be able to do that.

All I have said is we couldn't do it for this year—

Mr. Laughren: You came pretty close.

Hon. Mr. Maeck:—simply because the forms are already at the printing presses. The request for that came too late to the ministry. I am prepared to say now we can get that information next year. There was a misunderstanding with that particular group.

Mr. McClellan: It is a new idea.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: They understood we only enumerated every two years, which is, of course, wrong.

Ms. Gigantes: But there's only an election every two years.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We do an enumeration every year. We are prepared to get them a list next year.

Mr. Charlton: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that in addition to the information which the enumerators in his ministry collect for input into the computer, they are already collecting additional information which is dealt with manually by the assessment division? Does he not feel that in light of that fact, and the fact market value re-assessment has been postponed again, and in fact the staff in the assessment division may have a slight breather, he could ask the enumerators to ask one additional question when they are at the doors this fall and have his assessment staff take two or three weeks to compile those lists manually?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As the member very well knows, the people who do the enumerating are temporary people. They are not civil servants as such and I think it would be a very difficult situation to ask each one of them to ask that particular question as they are enumerating.

Mr. Foulds: Just give them a second sheet of paper with questions typed on it.

Mr. Breaugh: Just because you can't walk and talk at the same time doesn't mean they can't.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The other thing is, because of the changes in the Municipal Act this year, there is less time to do the enumeration than there has been in previous years, as the member also knows. I am not prepared to ask people who work on a part-time basis to obtain information that is not contained on the forms.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. The Environmental Assessment Board report on the Nanticoke waste disposal site made the observation that, "There should be appropriate precautions and criteria established by the Ministry of the Environment for site selection, design, operation and security of any facility for the reception, treatment and containment or disposal of such materials." Does the minister agree with that statement? If so, are such criteria being developed and when will they be in place?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The criteria that the honourable member is mentioning I think could be subject to various opinions from any given number of experts. They are very difficult to develop. We are looking at it.

I think it would be valuable, if anybody is contemplating a facility such as the one in question, prior to that, to talk with the people in our ministry. Of course it still is subject then to the hearing and the opinion of the members of that board.

Mr. S. Smith: It didn't help in Nanticoke.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What is happening to liquid industrial waste for which there are no other alternatives, particularly in view of the fact there have only been five loads delivered to the Beare Road site since April, all by the one company? Secondly, why isn't the ministry giving approval to Canadian Waste Technology Incorporated?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I didn't get the last part.

Mr. Gaunt: Why isn't approval being given to that company, because they do have a new technology which is apparently working?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I think the member said "why isn't?"

Hon. B. Stephenson: Is not.

Mr. Gaunt: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCague: To the best of my knowledge the company has not asked for approval for its process. I think you are referring to a letter they wrote to me a couple of days ago in which they claim they can treat all liquid industrial waste in the province. I think that is subject somewhat to other opinions. They have not asked for approval, to my knowledge. There are people in the same solidification business who have asked for approval, and I am sure the honourable member is well aware of that.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister, in view of the crisis situation that is developing in the liquid industrial waste field and the need to develop these complicated criteria he is mentioning, would he consider recommending setting up a select committee to meet over the summer perhaps, to develop these criteria and to develop a policy for disposing of liquid industrial waste in developing criteria?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Set up another select committee.

Mr. Breithaupt: Excellent idea.

[3:15]

Mr. Ruston: We can't get a quorum together for what we've got.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's called strange encounters of the fourth kind.

Hon. Mr. McCague: The suggestion the honourable member makes is one that was suggested to her as well as, I'm sure, the Liberal critic and myself, by Pollution Probe. They have a very nice letter in which they suggest that there should be a select committee.

I would have no personal objection to it. However, I think if the member would check with the members of her own caucus and if the member for Huron-Bruce were to check with the members of his caucus and we were to do the same here, I am of the understanding that there is absolutely no time this summer or into the fall for a select committee to sit on this matter. Furthermore, if the Liberal Party critic agrees with this letter from Canadian Waste Technology Incorporated, I don't think there would be any necessity for a committee.

REPORTS

STANDING STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Williams from the standing statutory instruments committee presented the committee's first report.

Mr. Williams: I would ask that under provisional standing order 6 this report be placed on the order paper for consideration by the Legislature at a later date. Copies of the report have been placed in all members' boxes.

In presenting this report, I would point out to the House that this is the 10th committee of the House appointed pursuant to the Regulations Act to examine regulations of a legislative nature made under authority delegated by the House. Yet, this is the first substantive report to be made on the subject.

This report will provide all members of the Legislature with the first real opportunity to give consideration to a broad field of law that has received virtually no attention in recent time. This lack of attention is undoubtedly due to the fact that the regulatory process and all procedures thereunder have been working well in Ontario. However, as a committee, we think there is still room for making improvements within the system.

Mr. S. Smith: Is this a speech or a report?

Mr. Williams: We will address ourselves to these matters in detail when the report is before the House.

Mr. Foulds: Is this speech necessary?

Mr. Williams: In the meantime, I wish to thank the members and staff of the committee in their dedication to the task.

An hon. member: It must have been tough.

Mr. Williams: In particular, I would recognize our legal counsel, Lachlan MacTavish, QC, without whose professional assistance, sage advice and commitment this report would not have been able to be presented to the Legislature this afternoon.

STANDING GENERAL GOVERNMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. McCaffrey from the standing general government committee presented the committee's report.

Mr. McCaffrey: I'd like to take this opportunity on behalf of all members of the committee to express our thanks and gratitude to our consultants, Lionel D. Feldman, who is with us in the gallery today, Mr. Henry Sears, Katherine A. Graham and Peter McInnis of the consulting firm Lionel D. Feldman Consulting Limited, who worked so diligently during the public hearings and who wrote this report.

On behalf of all members of the committee I would also like to thank Stephen Fram and Scott McAuley of the Ministry of the Attorney General for their valuable contribution.

The committee received full co-operation from the Ministry of Housing, the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, the rent review board, and the appeal board. We are also appreciative of the assistance extended to the committee during its deliberations by our clerk, Mrs. Fran Nokes, and her assistants, Frances Davidson, Donna Cantar and Barbara Michalak.

In arriving at our recommendations the committee conducted some 50 hours of public hearings in Toronto, London, Ottawa, Sudbury and Thunder Bay, at which close to 100 briefs and presentations were made, and we reviewed together more than 150 letters. In addition, two nongovernmental experts were invited to make presentations before the committee. The committee wishes to formally thank all those who devoted time and effort to make their views known, in particular those landlords and tenants who took time off from work to make their presentations, during the day and evening hours in some cases.

The majority of briefs and letters concerning rent review came from individual tenants, tenant organizations, individual landlords and landlord organizations. The tenants almost uniformly argued for continuing the current rent review program indefinitely, with major modifications which would strengthen the controls and improve the administrative process. On the other hand, landlords' submissions almost uniformly argued for termination of the rent review program.

However, many landlords indicated, either in their written briefs or under questioning, a willingness to move from their preferred position of termination to an acceptance of a further extension of rent review or controls provided certain conditions are met. In essence, that was the balance that his committee tried to arrive at. Whether we were successful will be discussed by others and determined in this Legislature at another time.

Mr. S. Smith: You were successful.

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing social development committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill with certain amendments:

Bill 19, An Act to amend the Mental Health Act.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Mr. Breaugh from the standing procedural affairs committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

County of Lennox and Addington;
Poly Aire International Limited.

MOTIONS

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that standing order 62 be suspended for the consideration of Bill Pr29, An Act to revive Poly Aire International Limited, so that the standing justice committee may consider this bill at its meeting tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the standing procedural affairs committee be authorized to sit concurrently with the House next week to consider the matter of the privileges of the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell).

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

GAME AND FISH AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved first reading of Bill 123, An Act to amend the Game and Fish Act.

Motion agreed to.

POLY AIRE INTERNATIONAL LIMITED ACT

Mr. Leluk moved first reading of Bill Pr29, An Act to revive Poly Aire International Limited.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, might I just take a minute for the information of the House while we are here.

This evening it was our plan to do second reading of Bill 103, which is An Act to revise the Condominium Act. For the information of the members, it is generally hoped that we might still proceed with that at 8 o'clock. Following that bill's getting second reading, we plan to go into committee of the whole to complete Bill 83. So for tonight we have for consideration Bill 103 and Bill 83 in committee with the understanding that divisions called for with respect to Bill 83 would be stacked and that there would be a vote at 10:15.

I thought the members should know that before they went to some other responsibilities. This would mean that for tomorrow morning we would do Bills 110, 111 and 121 for second reading and committee work if necessary. Then we would go into committee of the whole to do Bills 91, 85 and 96.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. McClellan, on behalf of Mr. Breaugh, moved second reading of Bill 65, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, could I ask you to remind me when I have used 15 minutes, so that I may reserve at least five minutes for a wrap-up?

I am very pleased to have the honour to introduce and debate Bill 65, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act. I would like to take a couple of minutes to explain—I hope clearly—to the members exactly what this bill does. I think there has been some deliberate misinterpretation of what it does. I would like people to understand what the bill does so that they can at least vote for or against it on the basis of what it does and not on the basis of what other people say it does.

What this amendment to the Labour Relations Act states is, first, if a group of workers who are members of a certified bargaining unit go on strike, the bill will prevent anyone except, one, management or supervisory staff, and, two, anyone except people agreed to jointly by the union and by management, from doing the jobs that are normally done by the striking workers. That's the first thing the bill does. It prevents people from going into a plant, factory or workplace that has been struck and taking the place of the workers who are out on strike unless they are members of management or supervisory staff or unless management and union mutually agree to allow them to do the work of the workers who are on strike.

The second thing the bill does is establish unequivocally and clearly who may cross a legal picket line. The bill sets down five classes of people who may cross a picket line. I will review them quickly: 1. people who are management or supervisory staff; 2. people who are members of a bargaining unit at the plant who are not on strike and are not doing jobs that are normally done by the striking workers; 3. non-union employees who are not doing jobs that are normally done by the striking workers; 4. persons who need to have access to the plant for the purpose of doing emergency repairs or providing emergency services; 5. anybody whom management and the bargaining unit on strike agree should be allowed to cross the picket line.

Those five categories of people would be allowed to cross a picket line during a legal strike. Anybody else who crossed the picket line would be subject to the laws of trespass. Under subsection 4 of the bill, it becomes the duty of the police officer to ensure that only persons authorized by the bill cross a legal picket line.

It is useful to understand what the existing rights in law are of people who are legally on strike, and attempting to picket the struck workplace. I have done some research on the subject and it is very interesting to discover that there are no provisions in the Labour Relations Act governing the right of workers to picket. As a matter of fact, the legal right of striking workers to run a peaceful picket line is enshrined in a kind of backhanded way in the Criminal Code, curiously enough, under the section that deals with sabotage and the section that deals with interference.

In both of those sections there is a specific exemption. The sabotage section reads as follows: "No person does a prohibited act"—that is commit sabotage—"by reason that he attends at or near or approaches the dwellings, house or place for the purpose only of obtaining or communicating information."

We are in the ludicrous position of standing in 1978 with one of the basic human rights enshrined in law only by way of exemption to sabotage or to interference. Fortunately, the courts have defined and have enshrined through convention that striking workers have the right to picket for the purposes of providing information and communication. As I have said, that is the only right in law that striking workers have in 1978.

The question is how is this right upheld? The Fleck strike, which has been on now for three months, has shown very clearly that this right is not upheld at all in this province. Even the backhanded enshrinement of the right to picket through the sections of the Criminal Code that I cited seems not to be understood either by the Ministry of Labour or by the Ministry of the Solicitor General or by senior officials of the Ontario Provincial Police.

How is this right upheld in Ontario in 1978? On April 10 at the Fleck plant there were 520 officers of the Ontario Provincial Police on the picket line. On April 11 there were 523 officers of the Ontario Provincial Police at the Fleck picket line. On April 12 there were 517 OPP officers. On April 13 there were 516 OPP officers at the Fleck plant. What were they doing there? They were not there to uphold the right of the 75 courageous women who were on strike at the Fleck plant to run a picket line, an informational, communicative picket line.

They were not there to do that at all because of a combination of two things. First, the law does not seem to be sufficiently clear to guarantee to striking workers the right to a picket line. Second, the OPP has failed to understand, as has government, what their responsibilities are respecting workers in this province. What the 500-plus OPP officers were doing there was providing an escort service to strikebreakers. In fact, what the 500 OPP officers were doing was preventing the 75 striking women from communicating at all with the strikebreakers going into the strikebound Fleck plant.

The time has come simply to modernize our labour relations law. That's what this bill attempts to do. In a labour dispute in this province, there are at least four parties to an industrial dispute. There is management, there is the bargaining unit that is on strike, there are the strikebreakers, and there is the Ontario Provincial Police. Under the present law, they are all entangled in the labour dispute, because the law is sufficiently unclear and sufficiently inadequate that it does not specify a proper role for the police and it does not bar strikebreakers from coming in and taking the jobs of workers who are out on a legal strike. It puts the police in the absolutely impossible position of having to provide an escort service for strikebreakers. It therefore puts the police in the position of having to support management as against the workers in an industrial dispute.

We believe that the role of police during a strike very simply ought to be twofold: to protect property and to keep the peace. That's precisely what these amendments would achieve. No longer would the police be required to provide an escort service for strikebreakers. No longer would the police be in the impossible and ludicrous and unfair and unjust position, because of inadequacies of the law, of having to side with management in an industrial dispute. Their role would be clear and simple: to protect property and to keep the peace.

This is not entirely novel legislation. A version of this legislation has been enacted in Quebec. It was enacted because that province was experiencing labour problems similar to the kinds of problems we are experiencing here in Ontario at the Fleck plant, or some time ago during the strike at Sandra Instant Coffee Company Limited in Ajax.

The time has come to give working people in this province the rights in law which are universally recognized as natural rights. It is very much to be hoped that there will be sufficient members on all sides of the House who will realize and accept the principle that it is wrong for laws to force the police to take sides in an industrial dispute and it is wrong for laws to make it possible for strikebreakers to take the jobs of workers who are out on a legitimate, legal strike.

I will reserve whatever time I have left, Mr. Speaker, for some concluding remarks after the rest of the debate.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You have eight minutes left. Do you wish to reserve all eight minutes?

Mr. McClellan: Yes, thank you.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, right at the outset I should state that I really cannot support this bill. I object strongly to the central concept of Bill 65, which is the fact that struck employers may not realistically attempt to continue to function during a strike.

It should be pointed out that the Labour Relations Act in this province is predicated upon a balance between the rights and responsibilities of organized labour and the rights and responsibilities of management. The Labour Relations Act gives labour and management the right to exercise what has to be construed as approximately equal economic sanctions, the strike on one hand and the lockout on the other.

There are those who may argue that the strike is less effective as an economic sanction than the lockout. I'm not really sure that that is so, but I think it should be noted that the strike effort is, in effect, an extremely effective, economic sanction. It's been used effectively by unions to achieve their objectives in the collective bargaining process.

I think one only has to look at the importance which trade unions place upon the strike as an economic sanction to understand just how vital this is to their role in collective bargaining. They certainly object very strenuously when any mention is made of any infringement upon that right and, certainly, there is major objection if any suggestion of the removal of that right is made.

But it should be noted, I think, that neither the strike nor the lockout is a totally effective economic sanction. At present, a struck employer may, under the act, reassign management personnel or, indeed, the employer may engage temporary employees in order to continue the operations. Conversely an employee who is locked out or who is on strike may seek employment elsewhere in order to continue to obtain an income during the strike or the lockout.

Bill 65, as it's presently written, would upset this balance totally. It would, in effect, totally shut down a struck plant. It would prevent the employer from hiring any temporary help of any kind and, I think, thereby intensify the effect of the union's economic sanction. However, it would not provide the employer with any additional power to exercise economic sanction over its locked out employees. It does not prevent the locked out employee from getting a job elsewhere during a lockout.

Mr. Speaker, I think the passage of Bill 65 would create an imbalance in labour management relations in this province which, I fear, could seriously damage the collective bargaining process as we know it in Ontario. For example, the bill would abolish the right of those persons who do not support a strike to continue working. This, of course, flies in the face of the democratic principles upon which the Labour Relations Act in this province is founded.

From the organizing stage to the certification stage, each employee in each workplace is given the opportunity to exercise his or her democratic right to self-determination. I think one must question whether that right should be totally abrogated during the strike or lockout situation. Yet such abrogation is implicit within Bill 65.

A union member would lose the right to decide whether or not he or she wants to support the strike or to continue working during a strike. The bill would require all members of the collective bargaining unit to refuse to do work. Regardless of personal choice, that would be imposed upon them. I'm sure such an infringement upon democratic principles must be unacceptable in this jurisdiction.

Under section 64 of the Labour Relations Act of Ontario, an employer must reinstate a striking employee within six months of the commencement of a legal strike upon the request of the employee.

Mr. Foulds: You know how well that worked in the Port Arthur clinic strike, don't you?

Mr. Breaugh: Then why don't you do it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: And this section also states, and I'd like to quote this: "The employer, in offering terms of employment, shall not discriminate against the employee by reason of his exercising or having exercised any right under the Labour Relations Act, such as the right to strike." This section, I think, incorporates the principles I mentioned earlier, the concept of balance and the concept of free choice.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, and you know how that is enforced, too, don't you?

Hon. B. Stephenson: If Bill 65 were to be passed, the right to seek reinstatement, I think, would be nullified. An employee, even when reinstated, would not be permitted by this bill to do any struck work. I find such a concept unacceptable.

[3:45]

Having raised those specific objections to the bill, I'd like to make a general observation. The institution of collective bargaining is complex and delicate, but vital to the economy of this province. I don't think it can be, nor do I think it should be restructured without a great deal of thorough and thoughtful analysis. It cannot be changed piecemeal, as Bill 65 attempts to do, because if that is done, I think we run the risk of very severe long-term consequences.

I recognize the concern which I think has prompted this bill, the concern about collective bargaining and the process of collective bargaining. I would agree that as it is presently structured within this province and defined within The Labour Relations Act it is not perfect. However, I think it is important to state, and to remind the members of the House, that more than 90 per cent of all collective agreements in this province are renewed without resort to either strike or lockout.

Mr. Foulds: What about first agreements?

Hon. B. Stephenson: But if we look at the structure of collective bargaining and amend the Labour Relations Act in ways which will indeed improve that vital process, I think we have to do it thoughtfully and carefully.

Mr. Lupusella: When are you going to do that?

Mr. Foulds: You promised that that would be reviewed two years ago.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think I should also remind the members of this House that over the last several months there has been an improvement in the labour-management climate in this province. I think it is partly due to the increased initiative in the areas of—

Mr. McClellan: Where have you been?

Hon. B. Stephenson: —preventive mediation by the Ministry of Labour and certainly in the areas of new initiatives and the quality of working life.

Mr. Foulds: Justify that statement.

Hon. B. Stephenson: There is no doubt in my mind that the collective bargaining process and the act which in fact guides it require further improvements, but the principles embodied in Bill 65 I don't think will assist us in that improvement. In fact, I believe deeply that they will do just the reverse.

Mr. Foulds: How?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Therefore, as I stated at the beginning, I truly cannot support this bill.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the comments that were made by both the NDP member and the minister. I might remind the members of this Legislature and the member who brought in the bill, that a bill similar in some respects was introduced in the third session of the 30th Legislature of Ontario in 1976 by the then critic for the Ontario Liberal Party, Mr. Bullbrook. There is quite a difference in the bill he introduced and that bill brought forward today.

His explanatory note read, "The bill prohibits the use of professional strikebreakers," and I feel, as do some of the members of this party, that the explanatory note of Bill 65 is not the same at all. It was my understanding when Mr. Bullbrook introduced this bill that what he was trying to do was remove or get rid of the definition of the professional strikebreaker as someone who came or was hired by a particular company to come into a picket line and could possibly use force to break up that picket line. It is my understanding that that bill, dealing strictly with professional strikebreakers, would have been supported by this party. We do not see this bill here as dealing with professional strikebreakers.

Mr. Foulds: No, just amateur strikebreakers.

Mr. O'Neil: We see it as excluding replacement employees. We also see some problems in the definition of the legal picket line in the bill. We think it is vague and could lead to unusual results.

Mr. Breaugh: How about the principle of the bill?

Mr. O'Neil: Suppose the Teamsters are on a legal strike against a transport company. The Teamsters could set up a picket line outside the premises of any non-union employer, for example Eatons, and the employer would be prevented from hiring any new staff to cross that picket line. If the member doesn't agree with that, I would like his comments.

Mr. Breaugh: It is not a legal picket line.

Mr. McClellan: That is not a legal picket line.

Mr. O'Neil: That is why I said that the definition of a legal picket line is vague and I think it should have been expanded before this bill was written.

Mr. Foulds: Eatons probably should be unionized.

Mr. O'Neil: The labour relations experts estimate that only two or three per cent of all employers hire new employees during a strike and we feel an argument might be made that this practice should be re-examined. It might also be suggested that this bill will reduce the violence that has been sometimes associated with labour disputes. The province of Quebec, as mentioned by the second previous speaker, introduced similar amendments to its labour code. However, there are currently a number of strikes in Quebec which have been characterized by violence, most notably the Commonwealth Plywood plant in Ste. Therese. As mentioned by the minister, it is also our fear that some of the smaller employers could be forced to shut down operations during a labour dispute, which could result in them being forced out of business. I don't think that any of the parties would like to see this happen. We are certainly interested in getting rid of labour disputes, but we also have to make sure jobs are retained, that jobs aren't lost across this province. We feel that possibly this bill would be the cause of some of those problems.

The concept of performing the work of an employee who is exercising a legal right to strike is vague and could give a rise to disputes. How would the labour board decide if a given piece of work was included in the definition or was excluded from it? The minister mentioned a few other examples. I would like to quote from one of the editorials in one of the large papers which quotes the Quebec law.

Mr. Foulds: Name it.

Mr. O'Neil: I think it was in the Star of last year.

Mr. Foulds: How can you quote it if you don't know where it is from?

Mr. O'Neil: The editorial talked about the bill that was put through in the Quebec legislature. The editorial said: "Quebec's plan to amend the province's labour code and outlaw strikebreakers threatens to undermine a basic principle of collective bargaining, the right of a company to try to continue to operate when its employees strike."

Interjection.

An hon. member: Are you the labour critic here?

Mr. O'Neil: I would invite the comments of members on this when they get up to speak, because they have a chance to refute some of these things that were said. I would like some of the answers on some of these things which we have looked into. Another thing the editorial refers to is the assumption that the union is always right in its demands and is, therefore, justified in shutting down a business if its demands aren't met. But, as the editorial says, experience shows this is not always so.

As I say, we had some worries about the wording of this particular bill and the effects that it might have on destroying of jobs in both larger and smaller unions and businesses. We also are not happy to see some of the problems that have happened throughout the province, one being the strike at the Fleck plant. The intention of the bill is not to allow the employer to hire additional help to come in to take on temporarily some of these jobs that the strikers have left. We also wonder whether it was the member's intention in the bill that members from larger unions from across the province can't be brought to a picket line during a strike, and whether the definition of picket line would exclude people from other parts of the province taking part in those strikes.

There are several things at the Fleck plant which have inflamed the situation there. It could be said that the police have inflamed it. It could also be said that groups coming in from all over the province or other parts of the province have also inflamed it. We don't feel that the definition of a strike-breaker is covered enough. I would invite and like to hear comments of members to my left and from across the House on some of these matters. As I say, we are looking at the bill and we have some worries about it.

Mr. Breaugh: I am a little concerned that people are addressing themselves to clause-by-clause issues as opposed to the principle. I still am not sure whether the Liberal Party labour critic is in support of the principle of the bill or not?

Mr. O'Neil: I am in support of professional strikebreakers—

Mr. Breaugh: Let the Hansard show that the Liberal labour critic just indicated that he is in support of professional strikebreakers.

Mr. O'Neil: I am sorry. I am against professional strikebreakers, as I mentioned in my remarks on the bill.

Mr. Breaugh: That's one of the fastest turnarounds we have had.

Interjection.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

Mr. Lupusella: Keep him under control, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Breaugh: Let me attempt to deal very succinctly, if I can, with the principle of this legislation, recognizing that I am seeking the wisdom of the House in proposing that it would go to a committee stage later on where the opportunity to debate it clause by clause would be provided. The principle is a relatively simple one, namely, that in this day and age and in this province the status of the trade union movement is recognized as such that it is no longer fighting for recognition. One of the few concessions we have managed to get from the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson) lately is that she is now recognizing the validity of people getting together into a bargaining unit, that people have a right to do that.

Mr. Germa: She does it reluctantly.

Mr. Breagh: Perhaps with some reluctance—

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, it wasn't. For two years I have been asking that the validity of unions as part of our social structure be recognized.

Mr. Breagh:—but she did say that, and that is certainly to her credit. I want to address myself, though, to the principle of the bill, which basically is that in this day and age it is no longer appropriate to apply the use of force on a picket line. Where a picket line is legally recognized—and that is contained within the bill—and where the bargaining unit is legally recognized—and that is also contained there, so there are those two provisos—the use of force is no longer a proper exercise, certainly not on the part of the police officers—whom we all support; we all appreciate they have a difficult job. As the Solicitor General (Mr. Kerr) said in this House of the Fleck Manufacturing Company strike: "They are doing a job they don't want to do and that they don't like." Frankly, I think even the Solicitor General is beginning to recognize it is basically not their proper role.

The principle of the bill, very simply, is to remove that use of force—and in particular to remove from police officers the job they don't want to do and one that they don't do particularly well, that is to provide access to a legally struck plant.

What I find particularly irritating is that basic police decision which must be made at every picket line almost every day in the course of a strike where strikebreakers are used; that is some superintendent or sergeant deciding: "Can we provide access to that plant now? Do I have enough personnel on hand; do I have enough equipment on hand to move strikebreakers through a picket line?" That surely has to be a soul-searching moment for him.

The difficulty, too, is that whether they want to or not; whether they are there to do this or not, the police are seen to be the aggressors in the instance. They are not keeping the peace; that's quite clear. They are not acting in a passive or defensive role; that's clear. They have to take, usually, a bus full of strikebreakers—in the vernacular they are scabs—through a legal picket line. A distasteful job at best, one that can't be done with much dignity or grace.

In particular, the initial instance for the drafting of this legislation was a strike at Sandra Instant Coffee Company Limited in Ajax. Even though that dispute has not been settled fully yet it is still apropos, and perhaps more so with the strike at Fleck where again we see the classic case of a small bargaining group attempting to get what they think are their legal bargaining rights, an exercise in what they think is a legal right to strike, and yet having the massive power of the police in this province directed against them to break that strike.

The minister talked about the economic sanctions and the differences between a strike and a lockout. I didn't hear her say that when a company locks the employees out the employees should have the democratic right to go to work and to receive a pay cheque. I didn't hear her say that; that certainly would be a needed balance that would have to be put into it.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I said they have the right to work elsewhere.

Mr. Breagh: What is the use of providing employees in Ontario with the right, in a legal sense, to get together in a bargaining unit, the right to have a legal strike and pretending they have an economic sanction, when you turn the full force of our police against them? That's certainly unrealistic in this day and age.

Interjection.

Mr. Breagh: There is a measure—and I am quite prepared to admit it—of infringement of democratic rights on people who might previously have been employees in that plant, there is no getting around that; but there is also no getting around the fact that if you join a bargaining unit and they negotiate a set of wage packages for you, you get them; whether you walk the picket line or not you are represented by those people. In the process of certification—and we might talk on some other occasion about whether that's fair or not—a majority of those employees in that plant said: "Yes, we want to belong to this bargaining unit." Before employees who do not support the strike to the secondary location.

they go on a strike, the majority of those people say: "Yes, we want to go on strike."

We can argue individual cases as to whether that was fair or properly conducted, or whatever you want, but you can't get away from the democratic process at work there. They voted, the majority of them, to join the bargaining unit in the first instance. Secondly, they voted, a majority of them, to go on strike. True, in any democracy sometimes we lose a bit of our rights. That's what a democracy is all about; a democracy exercises the right of the majority opinion. We don't get away from that, we should never apologize for that; it is the best system of which we know to function in.

So there is some infringement of democratic rights, for sure.

Mr. Ruston: That's not correct.

Mr. Breough: There's also some infringement of democratic rights, though, when human beings who work very hard for a living, who negotiate a contract and find themselves in a position they don't want to be in in the first instance, and that is on a legal strike.

You can't find me a trade unionist in this province who doesn't spend most of his or her time making sure the people they represent don't go on strike. The purpose of sitting through all that negotiation is not to get your people out on the picket line; it is to get a settlement. That's the purpose of the entire exercise.

[4:00]

There aren't people in this province who go around saying, "We want to have a strike." There are people who get to that point in the series of negotiations where they say: "We don't have any alternative. The last thing we have got is to withdraw our services as a unit." And that's the way it goes.

There are a number of related issues in all of this, not the least of which is—and I don't want to overemphasize this, but it has certainly got to be a factor—when you take an example like the Fleck plant, where we have now spent better than $1 million from the public purse to provide police protection, police access to a plant. At some point in time there has got to be a limit to that price tag.

Stop to think about this: If we handed that $1 million to the company—which I suppose this government would be quite prepared to do—and said, "Go settle your labour dispute with that $1 million," perhaps that would be a preferable option. If we gave to the employees their share of that $1 million of police costs, they would probably say:

"That's a good enough bribe for me. We'll go back to work now."

At some point in time we have to make that distinction; public cost must enter into the picture and, as of now, it does not.

The management of any company on a strike is given access to a rather substantial amount of protection, which they warrant, and of interference, which I don't think they warrant.

That public cost is getting to be a rather substantial total, which has got to be a consideration as we move through this type of legislation.

There are those who might say this bill expresses a bias on the part of a worker. I wouldn't back away from that at all. If anything, I would be saying they have been robbed of their rights for long enough that it wouldn't be a bad idea to put a little bias into legislation these days that would support the stance of the worker. In theory and in practice it would not do that.

In theory and practice the bill does two basic things. It says you can't, as an employer, hire strikebreakers. Whether you want to call them scabs, strikebreakers, amateur strikebreakers, or professional strikebreakers, they all accomplish the same purpose: they take the job of someone who is legally on strike. The bill does do that, and I do not back away from that at all.

The second thing the bill says is that in the instance of a legal picket line—and for the first time in our history it gives some reasonable definition of what a legal picket line is—the job of a police officer is to keep the peace. He does not have to mount up with riot gear on and escort a busful of strikebreakers through a legal picket line. He simply keeps the peace. That seems to me to be a job our police are well equipped to do and could handle without question.

If we see some awkwardness in the way the police forces of Ontario, both the provincial force and local forces, face this kind of situation, it is because it is not only distasteful, but also one which they cannot do without being seen to be taking sides in the issue. They don't want to do that. Frankly, every time they escort a busful of strikebreakers through a legal picket line, whether they intend to or not, they are taking sides in the issue. They don't like that role. They don't do it particularly well, and I am suggesting this legislation would put a stop to that and provide some measure of evenness in it.

In closing, I go back to the basic point. I think it is inappropriate in this day and age that the battle should be a street fight. In my view that is precisely what is happening in a number of labour disputes. The police officers look down the line and say, "Can we make it through that line this morning?" If they can, through they go. If they can't, they simply call the management of the plant and say: "We're sorry, we can't give you access this morning. Try later on in the morning, try earlier in the morning, or don't try at all." That strikes me as being a ridiculous situation for us to be in, in this day and age—

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr. Breaugh:—and I would urge the members to set aside their bias on this particular type of legislation and support the principle of this bill.

Mr. Pope: Mr. Speaker, certain aspects of picketing and the strikebreaker issue are dealt with in other jurisdictions but, with the exception of Quebec, no province has a comprehensive prohibition on the use of replacements.

British Columbia legislation prohibits the hiring of professional strikebreakers as has been referred to by the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neil), and regulates the where, when and how of picketing.

Manitoba prohibits an employer from disciplining an employee who refuses to perform the work of a striking fellow employee.

Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia prohibit the supply of employees during a strike or lockout in the construction industry in which an accredited employer organization is involved. Ontario contains a similar provision, section 119. The Quebec provision, section 97(a) of the Labour Code, is the only one similar to that in the proposed bill. It has been in force for only a few months and Quebec officials indicate that it is much too early to assess the effects of the recent amendment.

I would like to deal with clause 1(b) of section 59(a). There are three requirements for a legal picket line: It must be composed of members of the certified bargaining unit; they must be moving; and they must be carrying signs.

I assume that if any one of those conditions has been breached—for example, if the line is not moving—it would not constitute a legal picket line. Neither the moving requirement nor the sign requirement are significant and I wonder why these prohibitions are necessary. It should be noted that this definition is more restrictive than the present law.

It excludes from participation in the picketing all persons who are not members of the bargaining unit. This group would include not only third parties but also, in many cases, the union officials who have responsibility for conducting the strike. Third parties and union officials who are not members of the bargaining unit are currently allowed to participate in picketing.

Since bargaining rights need not be based upon certification, it is presumably not intended to restrict legal picketing to members of a certified union.

The reference to legal picketing raises the inference that all other forms of picketing are illegal. Picketing which meets the definition of 59(a) 1(b) will still be presumed to be illegal if it involves a common law tort or a violation of another section of the act.

I would like to deal with section 59(a)(ii). The principal problem with this section is in defining the work of a struck employee. The term "the work" is used in that section. This term must be more specific, both in economic and geographic terms. For example, is this section triggered if an employer chooses to produce the product at a second location and to supply his customers from that location? In a sense, the work of the striking employees is now being done elsewhere by other employees who may or may not themselves be organized. Is the section intended to cover this situation?

Mr. Cassidy: Did Bette Stephenson's ministry write this for you?

Mr. Pope: If not, larger multiple plant operations will have a decided advantage over smaller single plant operations and there remains the possibility of picketing activity at the secondary location. If it is intended that a secondary location of the same employer should be covered by the prohibition, there is an incentive to expand or locate secondary industry outside of Ontario.

It is also unclear whether the bill applies to an ally of the struck employer who performs the work ordinarily done by the employees of the struck employer and thereby assists him to continue to supply his customers.

I'd like to deal next with section 59(3), which deals with the definition of work premises. If "work premises" means where work ordinarily done by striking employees is done, it admits to the same geographic ambiguity referred to previously. It is not clear whether access is restricted to secondary locations of the employer or to the premises of an ally if struck work is being performed there. It is also not clear whether there is any prohibition against hiring new employees at a secondary location to perform struck work; or transferring managerial employees, non-union employees, or bargaining unit em-

All of these possibilities have occurred from time to time under the present law. If they are not covered by the proposed bill there will remain the potential for particularly bitter forms of picketing and confrontation. Alternatively, if secondary and ally situations are covered by the present law, then it will raise difficult questions of definition and its ramifications are consequently impossible to foresee.

It should be noted that the bill implies that legal picketing can only occur at work premises and not elsewhere. Even if one assumes that the restrictions on access apply only to primary location of the struck employer, section 59(a)(iii) seems to be drafted much more narrowly than is necessary. By implication, access is forbidden to members of the bargaining unit who do not support the strike and are prepared to continue work and perform work of their striking fellow employees.

The bill also forbids entry to the premises unless a person is a member of a certified bargaining unit—

Mr. Warner: This is close enough to clause by clause that we might as well give it third reading.

Mr. Pope: —that is not on strike and is not engaged in performing struck work; thus it would appear that even persons who are not performing duties of striking employees could not enter the plant unless they were also members of certified bargaining units. For example, a delivery could be made to the plant if the carrier was unionized but not otherwise. There appears to be no logical reason for this distinction.

Mr. Grande: Why don't you send us a copy?

Mr. Pope: I would next like to deal with subsection 3(c)—

Mr. McClellan: I think you should publish this as an article. Send this to the Law Journal, they will publish it.

Mr. Pope: —which deals with the position of members of the bargaining unit who do not support the strike. The position of the members of the bargaining unit who do not support the strike is unclear and depends upon the meaning of the term "non-union employee" used in section 59a(3)(c).

Mr. Grande: Don't support it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: You know you won't read a law book.

Mr. McClellan: I'd like to think you're right.

Mr. Pope: This term could mean non-member of the bargaining unit, non-union member of the bargaining unit, or member of the bargaining unit who does not support the strike. Whatever the meaning ascribed to the term "non-union employee," it is clear that such persons cannot perform the work of any employee who is on strike, no matter how many employees there may be who do not support the strike.

Likewise, the restrictions on access to the plant attach regardless of how many employees in fact support the strike. Again, it will be important to determine what "the work of an employee on strike" encompasses, since there may be a qualification on the section 64 right of the employees to return to work as mentioned above.

Mr. Breagh: He is reading from a prepared text.

Mr. Haggerty: That's the worst part of it.

Mr. Pope: I'd also like to refer to subsection 4 of section 59(a)—because this is a mess—and ask how you can reach the conclusion that you're dissatisfied with the role the police now play? You set out a whole line of tests police officers at a striking plant have to perform in order to determine whether or not someone can gain access to the plant. In fact, the onerous conditions that police now have are made worse, because they have to go through a virtual checklist—

Mr. Ruston: By far, by far.

Mr. Pope: —in the presence of everyone to determine who can get access and who can't get access.

Mr. Breagh: Why don't you go out and visit the real world for once in your life?

Mr. Pope: In other words, this is a mess.

Mr. Cassidy: How many days have you spent at Fleck Manufacturing?

Mr. Pope: The principles are a mess—and I'm not through, I'm not through.

Mr. McClellan: You were through before you started.

Mr. Pope: I'd like also to deal with the use of the reference of the Petty Trespass Act.

Mr. Grande: Are you going to make mistakes if you don't have the right place?

Mr. Pope: In addition, it is simply not clear how the procedures of the Petty Trespass Act and the Ontario Summary Convictions Act can be applied to this situation.

Mr. McClellan: Did you lose your place in your prepared speech?

Mr. Pope: Normally, a trespass can only occur if a person enters upon lands or premises without the owner's permission, whereas here persons potentially liable to trespass will inevitably have the owner's permission. Who will institute proceedings? Assuming one wished to create an unfair labour practice of this kind, there seems to be no reason why it should not be dealt with in the same manner as with any other unfair labour practice.

Mr. Breaugh: He is doing what Norton does all the time.

Mr. McClellan: Turn the page.

Mr. Pope: I certainly will.

Mr. Breaugh: He turned it back again. He lost his place again. Get them to do it in crayon.

Mr. Pope: The proposed bill seems to envisage a novel means of enforcement by prosecution before a provincial court judge under the Petty Trespass Act. At the present time many contraventions of the act may be brought to the Ontario Labour Relations Board, and in addition may, with the consent of the board, be subject to the matter of a criminal prosecution which can lead to the imposition of substantial fines.

Mr. Grande: We know you can read.

Mr. Pope: It is not clear how the new prohibitions would fit into the existing scheme. Neither the board authority nor the current consent to prosecute provisions are mentioned in the bill and the fines in the Petty Trespass Act are much lower than those currently possible for other breaches of the act.

Mr. McClellan: Have you ever seen a picket line?

Mr. Pope: Just before I sit down, I would like to quote from, I think someone in authority, who may have the respect of the third party, although I doubt that they respect anyone.

Mr. Breaugh: You can't impugn the motives of the members of this House.

Mr. Pope: This is a quote, and I'll read it: "I want to tell you something else which may be indiscreet of me, but I'll say it anyway. I don't agree with some of the people, including senior labour leaders in this province like Cliff Pilkey—"

Mr. Grande: See what happens when you talk, you get into trouble.

Mr. Pope: "—when they say that non-striking workers should somehow not have access in law. The law stands that you have a right to go on strike. The law also says that those who choose not to go on strike—"

Mr. McClellan: He was talking about the law as it is.

Mr. Pope: "—have a right to continue working."

Mr. McClellan: That's the law.

Mr. Pope: "That seems to me to be a legal and supportable proposition. I've never much liked the idea that should be impeded. So with considerable regret, I don't agree with Mr. Pilkey on all of that."

Mr. McClellan: He was supporting the law as it is.

Mr. Breaugh: The next thing we know he's going to read the Thoughts of Chairman Mao.

Mr. Pope: That quote is from May 31, 1978, by the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis).

An hon. member: It's a joke.

Mr. Breaugh: Yes? Yes?

Mr. McClellan: He was telling you exactly what the law is.

Mr. Breaugh: Dynamite speech, but are you for him or against him?

Mr. McClellan: He was telling the police to enforce their own laws.

Mr. Mancini: I would like to address myself to Bill 65, which has been introduced by the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan), but which had been, I believe, previously introduced by the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh); which had previous to that in fact been introduced, almost somewhat in the same manner, by my former colleague, the former member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook). Although I commend the member for Bellwoods for introducing the bill, it's not that original. Maybe the next time he gets a ballot item he can do a little better.

Mr. Lupusella: Will you support it?

Mr. Cassidy: Will you support it?

[4:15]

Mr. Mancini: Bill 65, I believe, deals with the basic rights of working people in this province. When an area, work site, manufacturing plant, a mine, or these other various work places are on strike, I don't think its very much to ask of anyone to let the strike continue legally and not jeopardize the rights of the working people who are trying to gain a fair and equitable contract. I have many establishments in my riding, some of which have been on strike on some occasions.

Mr. Lupusella: That's exactly the principle of the bill.

Mr. Grande: You don't understand the principle of the bill. I am sure about that.

Mr. Mancini: Even my father was one of the striking workers. I don't think it would have been fair for him or for any of those other workers to have someone else go in and do their work, because if that is the way we are going to handle strikes in this province then the working people have no strength and they have absolutely no protection of their rights at all.

Mr. McClellan: You are right on.

Mr. Mancini: The principle of the bill is what I have just stated. That's why I am in support of the bill although the honourable member for—where is he from?

Mr. McClellan: Texasgulf.

Mr. Haggerty: From Spadina.

An hon. member: He is only temporary, don't worry about it.

Mr. Mancini: Yes, although the honourable member for Cochrane South, (Mr. Pope), who is a lawyer, raises many legalistic—

Mr. Pope: The member for Scarborough West doesn't agree with the principle of the bill.

Mr. Mancini: —problems about this bill, I don't think any of his concerns are things that cannot be corrected if he believes in the principle of the bill. If he doesn't believe in the principle of the bill, that striking—

Hon. B. Stephenson: The member for Scarborough West doesn't believe in this bill.

Mr. Mancini: —people have the right to strike when they are on a legal strike, then that's a different matter totally. Anyone who agrees with the principle of the bill knows that it states very clearly—

Mr. Grande: You show very little understanding of what is going on.

Hon. B. Stephenson: That's a different matter.

Mr. Mancini: —that under emergency situations certain personnel can go in and take care of emergencies. It states very clearly that groups who are authorized by the union and the management can go in and perform work activities. It states very clearly in this bill that all the management and supervisory staff can go in and work on the premises.

This is an utmost fair bill, and I say the bill deserves the support of the members of this House. The Minister of Labour can nod and shake her head all she wants, but she has not been a real Minister of Labour, although I consider her to be a good friend of mine.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You should have read Claire Hoy today. He would set you straight.

Mr. Mancini: On no occasion has she refused to accept some of the very good suggestions made by both opposition parties. We have witnessed other things that have greatly disappointed us with the Minister of Labour.

I refer directly to the compensation benefits paid to injured workers.

Getting back to the principle of this bill, there is one section which I think would possibly have to be changed by the committee. It is section 2, subsection 4, and that deals with the police who are on duty. I think we would create some problems with the police and with the people involved on the strike site, so I think a great deal of work would have to be put into that section to make it more fair. In total, and generally, I support the bill.

Mr. Gregory: You are sitting in the wrong seat. You should be sitting over there.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the speech by the member for the Liberal Party. I hope that indicates that all of his party, and not just one or two members, will be prepared to support the bill that has been put forward by my colleagues.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Did you read Claire Hoy's article today?

An hon. member: You should listen to Remo.

Mr. Cassidy: It is a good bill. It is a bill which, in my opinion, will go a long way towards implementing the basic purposes of labour relations in the province of Ontario, to which all parties have, in fact, subscribed in the past. I just want to read the preamble to the Labour Relations Act of Ontario, which says and I quote:

"Whereas it is in the public interest for the province of Ontario to further harmonious relations between employers and employees by encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining between employers and trade unions, as the freely designated representatives of employees."

It is our purpose to encourage harmonious relations through the practice of collective bargaining, and this is a bill which is designed to ensure a better balance between management and labour. Therefore, it is a bill which is designed to strengthen the practice of collective bargaining and this is a bill, Mr. Speaker, which is designed to ensure a better balance between management and labour and, therefore, it is a bill which is designed to strengthen the practice of collective bargaining in the province of Ontario—a right which, alas, is too often honoured in the breach rather than in the observance in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I was sorry not to be present for the minister's speech, when she talked about a need for balance. This is something with which I can agree; although I disagree from time to time with the way in which she interprets that, because her interpretations seem to lean so far in the direction of management and so little in the direction of working people.

When the Fleck strikers came to meet with the minister not long ago, she told them she didn't see why they had to be out on strike for union security for as many days as they had been out. Unfortunately, the Minister of Labour doesn't see that a government has to act in order to implement those things to which it subscribes in words. All she has been capable of doing on that issue, as on so many others, is coming up with pious words which are not matched by action.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker that my predecessor, the former leader of the NDP, the member for Scarborough West, talked about the present legal situation in the province of Ontario. The present legal situation, as he said, is that there is a right of access by workers who wish to go into a plant where there is a legal picket line.

That is a legal and supportable fact, Mr. Speaker. What he had to say in addition was that if we are unhappy with the existing state of the law, as many in this province are, it is not up to us as legislators to go and tell people that they should break the law. It is up to us to change the law, and that is what we are doing in the province right now with this bill.

Mr. Pope: That wasn't what he said. You had better read the transcript of May 31, page 53.

Mr. Cassidy: We in the New Democratic Party believe that there is a crucial need for Ontario's labour relations laws to be thoroughly reviewed and amended on many counts; and this is one of the improvements which we consider to be absolutely vital.

The bill addresses one of the most serious failings of Ontario's present law. The law now allows employers to hire strikebreakers; even to hire professional strikebreakers who deliberately provoke, inflame and try to create violence on the picket line as a means of trying to prevent workers from exercising their rights of collective bargaining and using the right to strike as part of that particular right.

The present law also allows employers to take advantage, as we have seen at Fleck Manufacturing, of police forces—be they local or be they provincial police—by turning them into a kind of company police force. It is something we find unacceptable but which has to exist under the present law. That is another good reason, Mr. Speaker, why we think the law should be changed.

The way the law stands right now, the openings are there for an employer to find many means of prolonging a strike, because the employer can use these devices and is not necessarily subjected to the same economic penalties as the employees who are locked out or who have gone on strike. Surely if our position is that there should be a balance of rights and obligations, then in a situation where workers lose their income or livelihood, in a strike they have had to go into being unable to get a reasonable agreement, the employer should suffer the same kind of economic penalties. That is the basic position which is being taken in the bill which the members for Bellwoods and Oshawa have put forward.

What is at stake, Mr. Speaker, is not just the right to strike, not just the right to picket, but the rights of collective bargaining in general, which are fundamental rights in a free society, which I think every member in this Legislature should be prepared to uphold.

Mr. Speaker, if an employer has the right to continue operation without suffering economic penalty when a strike is taking place, then the collective bargaining right which the workers are meant to have becomes something like a myth. That isn't just a fanciful extension or hypothetical kind of suggestion of what might happen, because the facts are that for two thirds of the workers in the province of Ontario, the right of collective bargaining is something which exists on the statute books but not in reality because of antiquated labour laws in the province of Ontario. If we are committed to ensuring that any group of workers who wish to have a trade union, wish to get certification under our labour laws, wish to engage in collective bargaining and wish to have a legislated or agreed upon code of rights in its relation with its employer, that it should be able to have that right and not confine it to just one third of the employees in the province of Ontario, then I do not see how anybody in this House could not support the bill which we have before us today.

There are two specific situations to which this kind of bill applies. One situation is the kind we have at Fleck Manufacturing, where the strike is now close to 100 days old. In that situation, the workers are seeking a first contract. They're seeking a first contract and they're coming up against every possible hurdle that management and government together can put in their way—OPP constables who intimidate; the cops coming into the picket line the way that the member for Bellwoods has detailed in his speech; the problems with the local justice system being used as a means of standing in the way of the workers, the use of the Ontario Labour Relations Board in order to try to block the workers getting a perfectly legitimate, reasonable set of demands to have a contract and to have the protection of a union.

We shouldn't be in that situation in this province where workers have got to go through every hurdle imaginable just to get a basic right of collective bargaining. It's a difficult kind of thing to form a union. It should simply be accepted that if there are enough workers to form a union they shouldn't have to go through hassles where a management lawyer who is paid thousands of dollars tries to put them through the hoop to prove that everybody there is a member of the bargaining unit. These kinds of things should be accepted in the province of Ontario. It is in that spirit that strike-breaking should also be prohibited, if they get into a situation where a strike breaks out.

We think that another reform is needed, and that's why, within a very short period of time, Bill 107, proposed by the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba), which would guarantee workers seeking a first contract the right to a first contract, is going to come forward. That will have the support of all of the members of the New Democratic Party. That is another essential reform in the labour legislation of the province which, in our opinion, would help to create more harmonious relations between workers and management in the province of Ontario. That's clearly the goal which we should all be looking towards.

In other cases, there is an established trade union and there is a management which is trying to break the trade union and that's where you see the use of professional strike-breakers. That, too, is a situation where this bill is clearly applicable and clearly should be applied.

I'd like to see some other changes in the province. Forgive the frog in my throat; it's a toad, in point of fact. I'd like to see some other changes. I'd like to see a labour relations board which imposed and enforced the law about good-faith bargaining in the province of Ontario.

Mr. McClellan: That would be a change.

Mr. Cassidy: If that law were enforced and if managements were forced to bargain in good faith, then some of the situations against which this bill of the members for Bellwoods and Oshawa is directed would not, in fact, exist. It seems to me that the time has come in Ontario society when we do away with the antiquated relic of nineteenth century labour relations. That's what we're proposing to do in the House today.

It seems to me that the government party, the Conservative Party, should have the good sense to understand the importance of this bill for labour relations in the province of Ontario, the positive contribution it can make to the interests of working people and of labour relations across the province of Ontario and that the government party should be prepared to take the opinion of this Legislature—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Cassidy:—and not take the crafty way out, the easy way out, the dirty way out of blocking the bill. We would like to see a vote on this bill—

Mr. Ruston: Time's up.

Mr. Cassidy:—and I am confident that if a vote is not blocked by the government party this bill will pass. I'm then confident that it will contribute enormously to labour relations. I hope that the bill goes all the way through to be enacted in the statutes of Ontario.

Mr. Ruston: Come on. You're taking somebody else's time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Bellwoods has reserved eight minutes. That means there is only one minute left for any other member. Does the member for Bellwoods intend using the full eight minutes?

Mr. McClellan: I intend to yield my eight minutes to the member for Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson). If another member wishes to use up the minute, feel free.

Mr. Ruston: You're so generous.

Mr. Bradley: I'll forgo the opportunity to use up one minute, Mr. Speaker, because I couldn't express my views on this bill in one minute.

Mr. McClellan: I will yield my eight minutes to the member for Cambridge.

[4:30]

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the member for Bellwoods for having allowed me the opportunity to participate in this debate. I do so because this is a piece of legislation which I personally, and many people I know within the trade union movement have been pursuing for many years.

I'd like to inform the members of this House that, contrary to some people's opinion, this piece of legislation was not brought forward simply because of the situation at Fleck, but this legislation has been brought forward and proposed because of the injustices that exist within the collective bargaining structure in the province of Ontario and have existed over a good many years.

I would like to go over five major strikes that have occurred in the last 10 years. I emphasize that they occurred only in one industry. That was the textile industry, with which I was associated. First of all, we had the Tilco Plastics strike in Peterborough: violence on the picket line; the reason, the company was hiring outside workers to come in and replace the people who were out on the picket line. Sinrite Yarns in Listowel: violence on the picket line; the reason, the company was hiring outside workers to come in and replace those on the picket line. Hanes Hosiery, Rexdale: violence on the picket line; the reason, the company was hiring outside workers to come in and replace those who were participating in the strike. We had the same situation at Texpack in Brantford and Harding Carpets in Collingwood. In both of those cases, major violence on the picket line; the reason, because the company was hiring outside workers to replace the people who were participating in the legal strike.

All of those strikes were legal strikes. The reason for them being on strike was that the majority of workers in the plant, after negotiations failed, had agreed that their only recourse was to take strike action, and did so.

Either the Minister of Labour or the member for Cochrane South indicated that you could not change the Labour Relations Act in a piecemeal fashion. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is perhaps true, but the reason that we find it necessary to put forward these so-called piecemeal amendments to the act, if that's what they can be called, is because the government on that side does not have the intestinal fortitude to bring forward the kinds of amendments that are necessary to bring the Labour Relations Act in Ontario up to today's standards.

We will continue to move so-called piecemeal amendments until we do, in fact, bring to the attention of that government over there, and to the people in the province of Ontario, its failure to move until it gets the message and does, in fact, amend the Labour Relations Act so that it does have some sense of relating to today's society.

Let me point out that although the member for Cochrane South seems to feel that this bill just doesn't do anything, it is supported by the Ontario Federation of Labour, it is supported by the union which I represented at one time, the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers' Union, it is supported by the United Steel Workers of America, the United Automobile Workers of America and every other trade union organization I know of in the province of Ontario. So to say that the people out there don't feel this kind of legislation is really necessary, let me assure you that there are countless thousands of people out there who do.

When I say they're supported by these organizations I'm not necessarily talking about the people at the top of these organizations, because the positions that are taken, either at the OFL convention or the Canadian conventions of the other unions that make up the Ontario Federation of Labour, those people are direct workers in plants who have been delegated to go and represent their trade union locals and speak on their behalf.

When this kind of resolution is being passed, it is not by Cliff Pilkey, nor Bud Clark nor any of the other people that make up the executive, it is being passed by the workers in the plants, and what we are trying to get across to the Tories over there is that the very workers that they seem to be condemning are the people who are asking for this kind of legislation, and it's about time this government found out that this is what's happening.

I would suggest to them that if they've never been on a picket line, if they've never participated or talked to people on a picket line, that they do so, because maybe then they might get a better understanding of what it is that this piece of legislation says. Maybe they'll understand that the kinds of laws that exist in the province today—

Mr. Pope: Stop being patronizing.

Mr. M. Davidson:—where violence occurs on picket lines during strikes, tears people apart, tears families apart and costs the taxpayers of this province thousands and thousands of dollars.

Now that is what this piece of legislation is trying to stop, that is what this piece of legislation is trying to get across to you; that the workers of this province do not want their families torn asunder anymore; they do not want to have to fight with their friends; and they do not want to have to pay taxes in order to bring police officers in from all over the province to ensure that the picket line is run the way the present law suggests.

I would urge the members of this House to support this amendment to the act, and then we can move on again, if the government does not see fit to bring in a full package of amendments, to another so-called piecemeal amendment that will help strengthen the Labour Relations Act for the working people in this province.

Mr. Speaker: We have two minutes before we transfer over to the second item. Does any other member wish to get involved in the debate?

Mr. McClellan: I think this has been a good debate. I think there has been good support of the principles of this bill expressed by two of the three parties. I hope very much that these very excellent remarks, from all of the speakers in support of this bill indicate sufficient votes for this bill to carry.

I want to stress again the words of the leader of this party, that we hope very much that this bill comes to a vote. The opposition parties are getting sick and tired of watching the government impose its quillotine on bills they are afraid of or do not agree with. The reality is that we have a minority government situation in Ontario and the will of the majority in this House ought to prevail, particularly in private members' hour. It is really a source of increasing disgust for members of both opposition parties that the government refuses time and time again to allow private members' bills to come to a vote. Let the majority of the legislators in this House decide whether a particular bill will pass or fail on the merits of the bill and not on the fears of the cabinet.

I hope that the Tory backbenchers, just once Mr. Speaker, will have the guts not to act like a bunch of trained seals and jump up and kill private members' bills on the orders of their political masters, because it is an increasingly servile performance.

Mr. Speaker: That concludes item 27.

SIMCOE DAY ACT

Mr. G. E. Smith moved second reading of Bill 99, An Act respecting Simcoe Day.

Mr. G. E. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve approximately four minutes for the wind-up.

In most countries of the world it is a tradition to recognize and remember historical figures who have made a valuable contribution to their country by making a public holiday for them. In the United States, for example, the contributions of George Washington, the first president, and Abraham Lincoln, the man who abolished slavery, are duly recognized. Indeed, American commemorative enthusiasm extends to Christopher Columbus, the man who discovered the land mass on which the United States was built. Sadly, this is not so with Canadians.

Mr. Wildman: How about Sir John A. Macdonald?

Mr. G. E. Smith: Our tradition seems to be to forget or ignore the contributions of our national historical figures. We have an opportunity, through this bill, to recognize the contribution of a man who, like Washington, was our first leader, and like Lincoln, was the man responsible for the abolition of slavery in Upper Canada. That man was John Graves Simcoe. Let me refresh the assembled members' memories this afternoon—

Mr. Wildman: Rather a William Lyon Mackenzie day.

Mr. G. E. Smith: In 1790, Colonel Simcoe was elected a member of the British Parliament where he took part in the debates on the bill by which the province of Quebec was divided into Upper and Lower Canada. Therefore he had an intimate knowledge of what was intended by that bill, and no man was better qualified to be governor of this province than he was. In 1791 he was made first governor of Upper Canada, now Ontario, which had recently been settled by the United Empire Loyalists, a grand body of people to whom but scant justice is done by our historians, and whose descendants to this day are the backbone of Canada.

On July 8, 1792, Colonel Simcoe was sworn in as Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada at Kingston. From July 9 to July 21, he held the first meeting of the newly appointed executive council in Kingston at St. George's church. His first task upon his arrival at Kingston in 1792 was to organize the government of the colony, and following the traditions of British colonial administrations, the form of government envisaged for Upper Canada differed profoundly from the republican institution of the United States, which virtually surrounded the colony. An elective assembly, with a legislative council, was brought into being, and an executive council was appointed to advise the Lieutenant Governor.

Simcoe had found it advisable to divide the old districts of Upper Canada into 19 counties, and these counties or regions still exist today although some of the boundaries have changed. The administration of justice, the development and control of a militia force, and the allocation of elected representation in the assembly were all facilitated by this move.

In September of 1792, he selected Newark, now Niagara-on-the-Lake as the capital and met his first legislature. He energetically organized the new province, providing especially for its agricultural development and military defence. During that winter Simcoe toured the southwestern part of Upper Canada as far as Detroit. He founded, on the River Thames, the village of London and the county of Middlesex, both of which he also named.

In May, 1793, the second session of the first legislature met at Newark. One very important act passed during the second session concerned slavery. Simcoe was determined to eliminate this practice, although the final legislation only provided for its gradual abolition. It did, however, forbid the further importation of slaves into Upper Canada and provide freedom for those born in the province on attaining the age of 25 years.

He also introduced the Weights and Measures Act which was adopted, and was subsequently also adopted in the United States. There was also, at this time, a growing tension between Britain and the United States. Simcoe, therefore, set the Rangers to work constructing Dundas Street from the present site of London to the head of Lake Ontario. This road would provide a less exposed military route in case of war. It's interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, the allocation of the duty time of the Rangers. A third of the time, or two days of the week, was devoted to military work; two days of the week for road construction or other construction work; and two days were to develop housing and personal projects; with of course the seventh day a day of rest.

It might be interesting to note, too, that in the fall of that year when Simcoe journeyed to Lake Huron, he named Lake Simcoe after his father. He also visited Penetanguishene and the Midland area I might just pause here, Mr. Speaker, if I may, to make a personal reference. The town of Midland is recognizing its history and the early days. It's their centennial this year and this honourable member is attempting to get into the spirit of the centennial by growing a beard and attempting to promote here in the Legislature that outstanding event which will take place on July 1.

Having determined to move his capital, Simcoe chose the site of an old French fort on Lake Ontario for the new town, and in 1793 he founded York. This village of York eventually became the city of Toronto in 1834. Soon after, in the new year of 1794, a house was built for him on a hill overlooking the Don River. Simcoe named the house Castlefrank, after his son Francis. In May 1794 the first survey of Yonge Street was undertaken, and construction continued, with interruptions, until the road northward was completed in 1796.

Simcoe's governorship lasted only four years, and throughout his term of office Simcoe attempted to fortify the colony against the powerful influences of the United States. He encouraged emigration to Upper Canada by advertising the colony's advantages throughout the Atlantic states and this advertising was most successful. At the same time, he prudently undertook road construction in the interior of the province in order that British supply routes would not be so easily exposed to American attacks in the event of war. He fortified the British frontier posts at Detroit and Niagara, which were technically in the United States' territory but were held by Britain until the ratification and execution of Jay's Treaty after 1794.

It is the good measure of Simcoe's ability and success that he guided the infant colony safely through the first few years of its existence with so many dangers on every hand, and he succeeded in establishing the solid governmental and social foundations on which this province has developed for over 180 years.

As I stated before, it is indeed unfortunate that we Canadians as a whole take our ancestors for granted to the point where they are almost forgotten. We in this Legislature have the ability to reverse this trend. We can unanimously approve this bill and show the people of Ontario that we have not forgotten the man who created the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, of which we are all so proud to be members.

Until very recently, Canadians had been content to let the past be forgotten. Slowly we have begun to appreciate that we have a heritage and that interesting and dynamic people like John Graves Simcoe have been a part of that heritage. Let us move one step further and officially acknowledge one of our fine founding fathers. Canada and Ontario have a great many historical figures who deserve to be recognized, and their contributions to this province and to the nation should be applauded.

I can think of Major General Sir Isaac Brock, William Lyon Mackenzie, Reverend John Strachan, John A. Macdonald, and I think the name suggested in the Legislature on one previous occasion was Richard Cartwright. However, I think that John Graves Simcoe deserves our attention first in Ontario as he was the founder of the government which we are a part of today.

I am not asking that a special holiday be created in his honour. I am asking only that an existing holiday known as Civic Holiday, which is virtually an unmeaningful name, be honoured by his name. It is an easy task, requiring no money, and fulfilling the need for attention to be focused on the past, albeit only for one day of the year, which can help us to foster a unique Canadian identity.

In my campaign over the years to have Simcoe Day proclaimed, I have received increasingly overwhelming support. At the moment I have the support of 65 municipalities, 23 associations and five newspapers. Needless to say, the John Graves Simcoe Memorial Foundation has offered encouragement and assistance from day one. The chairman of the foundation, Mr. John Fisher, "Mr. Canada," has been kind enough to write me a letter. He is here in the Legislature today, in the members' east gallery, and I personally appreciate his support and that of those of his associates who are with him.

I quote in part from his letter to me: "We of the John Graves Simcoe Foundation are delighted to support your bill. We think it is a fitting tribute to the man who founded Toronto and served as our first Lieutenant Governor. Simcoe was only in Upper Canada less than five years, but he accomplished an incredible amount of work. His record is familiar to you, but it is not to the general public, so we think Simcoe Day would make all citizens of this province more aware of his contribution.

"This is an appropriate year to introduce your bill because it is the 100th anniversary of the CNE. It is often overlooked that we owe to Simcoe's foresight the convenience and attractive location of the CNE. Governor Simcoe decreed that the land along the lake-shore should be public domain. He classified it as a garrison reserve so that no buildings would ever be erected on that site. So the famous CNE acquired one of its most prominent features from the man who founded this city and started our province. Most of his term of office was served in a tent. He didn't even have a house.

I also bring to your attention another Ontario attraction, the Queen's York Rangers Regiment stationed at historic Fort York. It too was one of Simcoe's accomplishments. Isn't it interesting that the Queen's Rangers was the regiment Simcoe commanded with such distinction in the Revolutionary War of the United States?

When he was appointed our first governor, he asked permission to rebuild his old regiment and in later years the Queen's Rangers were merged with the famous York regiment which fought so valiantly at Detroit, Queenston, the 1837 Rebellion, the Northwest Rebellion and other conflicts.

"Last September the Queen's York Rangers went to Philadelphia to commemorate the battle of the Brandywine and the occupation of Philadelphia by British forces in the Revolutionary War.

"Along with the American regiment, the great friendship between the United States and Canada was honoured by our ambassadors of goodwill, the Queen's York Rangers.

"The colours of this regiment have now been restored and are kept in the officers' mess at Fort York.

"Also at Fort York is the parole document setting Colonel Simcoe free. He had been taken prisoner of war and the certificate of parole is signed by Benjamin Franklin.

"In Toronto are many of Mrs. Simcoe's sketches and watercolours giving us a picture of those early days in the life of our province.

"Simcoe was more than a governor. He was an administrator, a legislator, a dreamer, a builder, a soldier and he built our first streets, houses and roads. Surely we should set aside one day of the year to salute our founder through this Simcoe Day Bill."

I also received a letter from the president of the Midland Historical Society just yesterday, and this is one that wasn't included previously, and I quote in part from that.

They are supporting it and the president, Mr. Norfolk says: "It was Colonel John Graves Simcoe who laid well the foundations of the great Province of Ontario as its first Lieutenant Governor and set an example which is still an inspiration to us even today".

I might also say, Mr. Speaker, last Monday I visited the Wabashen Public School as well as St. John's Catholic School, at Wabashen. I met with the students. I talked to them. I asked, "Can anyone identify John Graves Simcoe?"—and without fail, they were all able to identify him in some fashion in relation to our historic background.

Of course he did name the village of Fesserton, which is in that immediate area, but these students were certainly well aware and, naturally, they supported my concept of naming our Civic Holiday after John Graves Simcoe.

Maybe we as Canadians should be doing a little more flag waving. It might help us capture that sense of Canadian identity that has apparently alluded so many of us in the past.

As a result, I urge the members assembled here to enact Simcoe Day to make it become a reality. It will be a step towards realizing the identity of a statesman, a man who made a sincere contribution to this province and whose memory should be perpetuated.

I ask the honourable members to join in supporting me on second reading.

Mr. Breithaupt: This item has come before the Legislature on two earlier occasions while I have been a member.

On May 15, 1972, the member for Simcoe East moved a private bill to establish Simcoe Day.

On June 14, 1976, the member again brought forward this idea in the private members' hour.

Hansard records the contributions made on both occasions by various members in the House.

On both of those occasions I spoke in favour of this suggestion, and I do so again today. With the new rules for the private members' ballot business, there is now the opportunity for members to agree on this suggestion and for it, in fact, to be accepted.

On Bill 99, I was asked by the member for Simcoe East to be the seconder for his bill and I was certainly happy to oblige him.

I believe that we must, wherever possible, encourage our citizens to remember the history of our province. We have the easy opportunity today to replace the meaningless and rather dull title of the August holiday with a better and more meaningful title.

In 1972, I called upon the House to consider the wisdom in celebrating the virtues and principles of the pioneers of our society as we move through times in which the only constant appears to be change. In 1976, I suggested that by approving this idea we could help to pay tribute, not only to John Graves Simcoe, but also particularly to his many contemporaries, not necessarily of English, Irish or Scots background, but many of whom were immigrants from Europe and immigrants with a loyalist tradition from the United States.

I do suggest this approach again, even as I cite to the House a review by Dr. Georg K. Weissenborn of a book by John Andre entitled, William Berczy: Co-founder of Toronto. Let me read just a few paragraphs from that review as it was printed in the German-Canadian yearbook of 1973. "If Andre is right and, judging by the disdainful silence with which his books have been received, he may well be, then Toronto owes a greater debt of gratitude for its existence to a man named William von Moll Berczy and his ragged band of rugged European refugees than to the illustrious Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada, John Graves Simcoe and his Rangers.

"For the conquest of new territory, the soldier or a reasonable facsimile thereof is as indispensable as the farmer and the skilled craftsman are for colonization. On a new frontier, forts and military outposts may be erected one day, only to be removed or abandoned the next for strategic reasons. Camps spring up for the economic exploitation of a richly endowed geographic region which may just as quickly turn into ghost towns. It is the farmer who comes to cultivate the land in order to stay and raise crops, cattle and children. The farmer comes to colonize or to take possession of the land.

"In the case of York-Toronto, it was Simcoe who had the soldiers and von Moll Berczy who brought the artists and farmers. In 1792 they followed him from Hamburg, Germany across the sea to New York State where they'd been promised land in the Genesee valley. When it was discovered that the immigrants were to be tenant farmers in the promised land and not landowners, as expected, they sent their leader, Berczy, north to seek a better deal from the Canadian government. Governor Simcoe offered 64,000 acres, 1,000 to each family, in return for Berczy's assurance that they would build roads and houses and that he would bring more immigrants with badly needed skills to the unsettled and unsurveyed territory. Although," says Andre, "Dorchester's Toronto and Simcoe's York had existed on paper since 1788 and the fall of 1793 respectively, the site was still empty.

"Early in 1794, William von Moll Berczy brought to the uninhabited wilderness more than 180 people, a veritable army, and not a mere few dozen German settlers, as a prominent historian would have his readers believe. Not only did Berczy provide the manpower, but also from his resources he financed the first large scale cattle drive from Connecticut to Upper Canada of bulls, oxens and cows, whose total cost of purchase, transportation and upkeep even exceeded the maintenance cost for his settlers. They used over 100 of these precious beasts for bulldozing pioneer roads to and in Markham where the German mills were built, which supplied flour and lumber to the newly-founded settlement of York.

"Berczy estimated the cleared ground area of the 15-mile long and 18-foot wide Yonge Street and 30 miles of Markham Road to be about 98 acres in total. He saw the birth of primitive industry. Commerce, banking and transportation in Toronto and the surrounding area coincide with the arrival of Berczy's people and the Connecticut cattle. "It was Berczy who in 1794 erected 'by far the best house in Toronto, which was located at the southeast corner of the present King and Sherbourne Streets.'

"The co-founder of Toronto who, in addition to all these other accomplishments, struck the first bridge across the Don River, was also a sensitive, talented artist and Canada's first portrait and landscape painter of note. Being polyglot, he prepared manuscripts in several languages and wrote the first statistical account of Canada, which he apologetically pre-faced with his remark: "Though I am not an Englishman born, I have ventured to write in that language, emboldened to make the attempt under the conviction that a statistical work required but a correct and clear style, wherein logical accuracy is the essential requisite.'

[5:00]

"There can be little doubt that today a man of Berczy's calibre would easily earn the required number of points to qualify for entry into this country. Without doubt a man of his intellectual acumen and artistic capability would appeal to any immigration officer as the ideal immigrant. Nevertheless, for the first executive council of Upper Canada he remained a suspicious alien. When it came to the delivery of land titles, the government not only broke its word, but Berczy and his settlers had to learn that as aliens they could neither be trusted nor legally hold land before seven years' residence here as subjects of the crown.

An unsympathetic government, envy, slander and political intrigue ruined one of Canada's most colourful early pioneer personalities and gifted artists. He died a broken man under mysterious circumstances in New York in 1813.

He represents just another one of the immigrants that came to Ontario in those years. The member for Simcoe East has commented on the formation of the country structure that Governor Simcoe had, and it may be well to remind members of the House that before that structure there was a structure of districts. The districts were called Hesse, Nassau, Mecklenburg and Luneburg, named after some of the familiar areas to the court of Hanover, ruling, as it was at that point, under George III.

Mr. Conway: I thought it was Eric Winkler there for a minute.

Mr. Breithaupt: I have given to you an example of another pioneer of our Ontario of the early years in someone such as William Berczy. However, we can't honour everyone. We have a chance though to honour them all in the name of our first Lieutenant Governor. As a result I'm pleased to support this bill and I commend it to the House for approval.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, since this bill seeks to attach the name of John Graves Simcoe to the Civic Holiday and make it a distinctive provincial holiday, I think it might be useful for a moment just to go back and take a look at the man and his ideas.

The sponsor of the bill has already given us a bit of the picture. I always find myself compelled to get a bit of balance into that picture.

Mr. Conway: I don't believe that.

Mr. MacDonald: John Graves Simcoe was—

Mr. Conway: Balanced socialists don't exist.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order. You may continue.

Mr. MacDonald:—was an active officer in the British army during the American rebellion. He learned to detest everything American, in their way of life and their institutions. When he went back to England he went back with a well-developed set of ideas. When it became apparent that he was going to be appointed the first Lieutenant Governor of the colony of Upper Canada, he began to dream dreams of building in the wilds of North America a little Britain.

He took a look at the map and he noticed that the map has this peninsula that stretches from Windsor through to Niagara, and it jutted down into the United States. He thought that he would be able to build here a showcase that would prove to Americans that their institutions and their way of life were inferior to the British way of life.

So he came out with his preconceived notion, these dreams that he dreamed in front of the crackling fire in his manor back somewhere in Great Britain. He dreamed of York, our capital, yes; he dreamed of London, yes, another town out in the wilds on the River Thames. He dreamed of building military roads—Dundas—out to connect these two centres of habitation. He dreamed of building Yonge Street, another military road that would be built north to protect us from God knows what—maybe the Eskimos were going to make an attack.

Mr. Foulds: Atikokan.

Mr. MacDonald: He was going to build his concept of the British society here in the North American wilds.

For example, just to complete the picture—and I concede that even years ahead of Great Britain, the colony of Upper Canada took the first steps to abolishing slavery—what John Graves Simcoe conceived of as the political structure in Upper Canada was a hereditary council like the House of Lords and of a legislative assembly which, believe it or not, he was going to make the prerogative exclusively of the half-pay officers in the militia. Nobody else was going to be permitted to be elected to the legislative assembly.

Mr. J. Reed: Typical Tory strategy.

Mr. MacDonald: In short, he was going to build an aristocratic society out in the North American wilds.

Mr. G. Taylor: What would you have done?

Mr. MacDonald: There was one rather interesting quote from John Graves Simcoe to give you some idea of his approach. He was travelling from Montreal through to York along the St. Lawrence River, and he quotes in the records which are to be found back in those days: "In my passage from Montreal to Kingston, I understand that the general spirit of the country was against the election of half-pay officers into the assembly and that the prejudice ran in favour of men of lower order who kept but one table."

Mr. Germa: I didn't know that.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me translate that into the reality: the people who dared to eat their meals along with their workers, their slaves of that day or anybody else. He wanted a society in which the manor and those at the head of the manor would eat at one table and all the rest of the human rabble would eat at another table.

That was John Graves Simcoe's concept of a society that he wanted to build out in this North America.

Mr. McClellan: How enlightening.

Mr. MacDonald: The man who brought John Graves Simcoe out of dream world, in touch with the reality of the North America that we're living in, was Richard Cartwright—not Sir Richard Cartwright.

Mr. Conway: Here it comes.

Mr. Gregory: A well-known socialist.

Mr. MacDonald: As I have indicated in an earlier debate on this topic, I happened to have the pleasure—will you stop prattling?—many more years ago than I will admit to this House, of doing my master's thesis on Richard Cartwright, one of the founders of Upper Canada. One of the most interesting aspects of his life was his battle to get John Graves Simcoe to face reality.

I express once again my appreciation to the late Leslie Miscampbell Frost who appropriated some funds from the provincial treasury in Ontario to publish that thesis along with a couple of others. Those who are interested can find it in volume three Theses on Upper Canada in the library, and in all school libraries across the province of Ontario.

What Cartwright did was to say, let's deal with the reality. Let me give you two or three quotes from Cartwright which show the common sense of the man.

Mr. Worton: Are you giving examples now Don?

Mr. J. Reed: He must have been a Liberal.

Mr. MacDonald: He said, for example, on one occasion: "There is no maxim more incontestable in politics than that a government should be formed for a country and not a country strained and distorted for the accommodation of a preconceived or speculative form of government."

Let me give another quote from the early days in his conflict with John Graves Simcoe: "I hope this plan of Simcoe will not be persisted in. For it appears to me as a complete piece of political Quixotism as I recollect having met with and would be going out of the way of the inhabited parts of the country instead of coming to the government.

"If the grandiose scheme were persisted in," he warned, "the government will waste its sweetness on the desert airs, sir. The energy will be spent where there is nothing to operate upon and the money will be lavished away where it can be of little permanent advantage to the province, however useful it may be to some individuals." That was the approach of Cartwright.

He got into other battles with Simcoe and I use this one other example to illustrate it. Simcoe had the idea, of course, in this little Britain built in the wilds of North America, that he was establishing the Anglican church as the established church.

Mr. Worton: Great church.

Mr. MacDonald: Only five per cent of the population were Anglican but he was going to impose the Anglican church on others to this extent, that anybody who wasn't married by Anglican clergyman wasn't legally married and all their children were bastards.

Mr. Martel: Fine fellow.

Mr. MacDonald: This rather offended Richard Cartwright. Richard Cartwright was a Presbyterian. He wasn't married by an Anglican. He was married, as the law permitted back in those days, by the officer in charge of the closest military establishment. He fought to oppose the idea of the establishment of the Anglican church.

Let me say this to the honourable member for Simcoe East: When he says that John Graves Simcoe laid the economic and the social foundations of the province of Upper Canada that is true to some extent, but I will tell him something else he did—he established the Family Compact which distorted the life of the province of Upper Canada for 50 years and from which it had to struggle to escape. Men like Sir John A. Macdonald, who became the leader of the Conservative Party to disassociate himself from the Family Compact, called it the Liberal-Conservative Party.

Indeed, men like Cartwright, who was Progressive Conservative before they put those two contradictory terms together, back in those days fought against the imposition of the ideas of the Family Compact. That's what John Graves Simcoe did, to establish an approach that was totally foreign to the natural development in Upper Canada.

Mr. Lane: Shame.

Mr. MacDonald: Do we want to enshrine those ideas in the one provincial holiday of Ontario? When I debated this some four or five years ago when the honourable member introduced it, I said that I had some misgivings, and I repeat those misgivings. I would think that Cartwright Day—although Cartwright is less well known than John Graves Simcoe—would be more reflective of the real ideas that helped to build Upper Canada, because in his own way Cartwright was a more effective founder of Upper Canada than John Graves Simcoe. It was Cartwright who saved Simcoe from his greatest follies.

However, having said all of that, I will agree with the honourable member that there is wisdom in the proposition of moving away from a meaningless name like Civic Holiday. I have to acknowledge—I can't rewrite history as some people like to do—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh, you do that regularly.

Mr. MacDonald:—that John Graves Simcoe was the first Lieutenant Governor in the province of Ontario; with all of his mistaken ideas and with all of his élitism, he nevertheless was the first governor of Upper Canada. If we have to move to some other name, and the honourable member won't accept the name of Cartwright—or if he won't accept the name of my colleague from Windsor whose birthday is on that day and who therefore wants to make it Cooke's Day—if the honourable member won't accept that, then I think there is merit in moving, if for no other reason than to get people to be more conscious of their history.

Maybe, in becoming conscious of John Graves Simcoe, we won't listen to just the Pollyanna laudations that come from John Fisher or come from the member this afternoon, but we will get a real picture of John Graves Simcoe—the reality of what he attempted to do and the reality of his ideas. That isn't being offensive to our history. It is just living with the realities.

I support the bill, because I think it is wise to move away from the meaningless Civic Holiday to something that is more meaningful in terms of our history. But I do it with the reservations which I record once again.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Simcoe Centre.

Mr. Wildman: William Lyon Mackenzie Day.

Mr. J. Reed: Hear, hear.

Mr. G. Taylor: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the "Hear, hear" was for William Lyon Mackenzie Day, not for me.

Mr. Foulds: You're right.

Mr. G. Taylor: I would follow up on what my colleague from York South has said when he talks about names and their usefulness. We seem to be going through a state of providing names and euphemisms for everything we do today to put it by pleasantly. God knows, the creators of this country and our forefathers were not perfect individuals, as the member would want. Even in this House, I am sure we have some members who might have skeletons in the closet, a little bit of clay around their feet, or some other things—

Mr. J. Reed: How can you be so derogatory?

Mr. G. Taylor:—but surely 100 years from now they might not recognize them. We might go about recognizing them for some little bit they have done, but I would hate to think they would then draw out all the person's weaknesses and not his merit for naming some holiday or some event after him. Indeed, we might go down the corridors out there and scratch from the marble roster the names of members who didn't turn out as properly as we might have liked them to in today's more liberalized society where everything must have a euphemistic name attached to it.

Even in this very House we avoid using our own names, which most people respect. We go around labelling members as Simcoe Centre, Simcoe East and so on, but we remove them by their own name and only by their own name when they are to be punished and removed from this House. There again we have a reverse; we want to put a name on them only when they have been bad, as we shall say, or incorrect in their manner.

Mr. Conway: It's McCarthy, is it? Dalton McCarthy?

Mr. G. Taylor: Let's look at this man, and at what the member for Simcoe East has put forward, as a chance to recognize a man with all his good points and all his faults that may have been put forward in that time, and to give his name to this holiday, which now carries the misnomer of Civic Holiday, which again was put forward euphemistically to call it a holiday.

Many of our present holidays are losing their meaning. When I look at Remembrance Day, and see how much it has changed over the course of the years, it is now referred to as a holiday rather than possibly by its original meaning. Indeed, it is such a vital thing in our history that it is only recognized primarily by luxurious establishments such as civil servants, members of the Legislature and public bodies, and not by the general public at large. There again we have seen something happen.

[5:15]

This great man, as he was in those days, albeit he might be criticized for some of his views—look what he did for this province. He started it. We recognize that as a beginning. He looked forward to roads and railroads. He planned, and the vision that came forth today is the heart-blood of this province. We see it converted into Highway 400, that first visionary road north that is now Highway 400; and the water routes that have gone forth. Penetanguishene was the original settlement in the area. We see how he followed those forefathers, Champlain, Brulé, and the Indians, LaSalle, up north—the same routes that they originally took—and established a great community on those routes.

Again, I refer to two years ago when, following those same routes, the students who involved themselves in the Penetanguishene military and naval establishment, walked and recreated the same routes that he followed in the early days, providing some of the people along the routes with re-enactments of the original historical moments.

Two of those places in Simcoe county named after his father were put forward—Midland celebrating its 100th anniversary and Barrie celebrating its 125th anniversary; they are putting forth ideas. There is one member in Barrie who may again go over those canoe routes, recreating our history. When many people are trying to find and get back to their roots, it is very befitting that here is a chance to look forward to naming a neutered holiday to something, recognizing one of our great leaders in this country.

Mr. Foulds: Nonsense.

Mr. G. Taylor: I now read from a text, as we all can when we get to these historical moments; when we look forward to some of these moments.

“But at first the new government in Upper Canada worked wonders. Colonel John Graves Simcoe, the veteran commander of the Queen's Rangers, was appointed as the first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada. He arrived in Kingston July 1, 1792, and organized his Legislature at Newark, now Niagara,”—we've changed that name, to give you an example—“in the same month. For over four years, he governed the province and immensely influenced its future.

“Simcoe was a notable man. He had a vision that looked a hundred years ahead and that lingered also a hundred years behind. He could see in the sandbars and marshes of Toronto a mirage of a metropolis; his great military roads swept, in his fancy, east and west 500 miles; he held the north in his hand and Niagara was his footstool. For him, Upper Canada—so he told his parliament—went in its responsibilities ‘infinitely beyond whatever, till this period, have distinguished any other colony.’

“Yet to Simcoe, a democrat meant scoundrel; dissenter; snivelling hypocrite; and without the Church of England morality would go under. But he was all for what he considered progress; he must have schools and grammar schools; he looked forward to a college. He gathered in a printer to set up the Upper Canada Gazette and American Oracle; he collected three refugee clergymen of the establishment to make a church; and asked the crown for a bishop.

“For government, Simcoe wanted the British government and he wanted it all; its established church, its hereditary titles, its forms, its feathers”—

Mr. Wildman: Do you support that?

Mr. G. Taylor: —“its venerable humbugs, and nothing newer than Queen Anne. On these terms, Simcoe called his first Legislature together on September 17, 1792. It met in a frame building close by the village of Niagara with uncleared bush all around. It numbered 23 men in all, seven councillors and six elected assemblymen. The councillors, handpicked, were gentlemen, but more than half the others were a rougher lot, ‘fellows of one table,’ that is, fellows who ate with their servants and, hence, to Simcoe, disqualified for British government.”

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Liberals and the NDP.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Tut, tut.

Mr. J. Reed: Please don't lump us together.

Mr. G. Taylor: "But Simcoe's vision saw it in all its colours of the autumn woods. He read its future in the majesty of the lake and the broad sweep of the river. All that Ottawa now is, he saw it then and he must have pomp to match it. There he went into these great areas, to sow seeds for the harvest that is yet to come."

When we are searching for such an identity, I even go back to the same text written in 1941. I'll give you the author in the moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Foulds: Yes, please do.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Quite a reader, George.

Mr. Roy: That's very good, George.

Mr. G. Taylor: "It is exactly at that point that our literature in Canada still stands. There is not as yet a Canadian literature in the sense indicated, nor is there, similarly, a Canadian humour, nor any particular Canadian way of being funny, nor is there, apart from varying accents, any Canadian language. We use the English for writing, American for conversation and slang and profanity, and Scottish models for moral philosophy and solemnity."

Mr. Kerrio: What about fuddle-duddle?

Mr. G. Taylor: Or bunk? We look at what is written here by one of our leading Canadian persons.

Mr. Foulds: Where do you find that stuff? Who wrote that?

Mr. G. Taylor: It was written in 1941 by Stephen Leacock, one of our renowned Canadian historians and humorists. Even at that time they were hunting for this Canadian identity.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Good for Stephen.

Mr. G. Taylor: Here we just have one slim chance, a minor chance of putting some Canadian identity into our history books, and into our everyday style of living. I think we should support this bill. It's one of the few we can bring forth as a private member that won't cost a great deal of money, and it won't cost a great deal of inconvenience to anybody.

So all those practical things, at which we look at times are here to be celebrated in the future, with a label that will be recognized in the future, so when somebody says "Simcoe Day," they can also pull out history books. There are so many things in my county, in the riding that I represent, that have those names. There is the township of West Gwillimbury—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Gwillimbury?

Mr. G. Taylor:—which has the maiden name of the wife of John Graves Simcoe attached to it. The townships of Tay, Tiny and Flos have the names of the dogs of the Lieutenant Governor at that time.

Mr. Foulds: That's enough, surely.

Mr. G. Taylor: All of these things are historical.

Mr. Wildman: This is getting a bit too much.

Mr. G. Taylor: The areas he opened up are the historical heartland of this province. I think it would only be fitting that we should try to recognize this man with this one singular little bit of effort on our part in this Legislature. I hope it receives the recognition and support from all members of this Legislature. I'll be looking forward to listening to my friend Mr. Conway bring forth his historical items on this same subject.

Mr. Roy: Hey, George, you should have given us advance notice and we would have given you background music.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, the debate we are having this afternoon is one which some of us will remember having participated in on previous occasions.

Mr. Foulds: And too often.

Mr. Conway: Perhaps too often, but that's for the member for Port Arthur to say. I must say that I well recall the member for Simcoe East previously introducing this particular bill.

An hon. member: That takes a lot of nerve.

Mr. Conway: I must say that at that time I was perhaps more likely to support him than I am now since I've come under the very socialistic influence of my legislative intern, Mr. Christopher Waddell, who informed me in his very significant research on this matter that there may be less cause to support this than I had previously thought. Notice the socialist horde applaud when I say that.

I sit here and the member for York South—there isn't a more distinguished parliamentarian and historian in this assembly, as he himself, I'm sure, will allow from time to time—he complains of the degree to which the members opposite, and perhaps others on this side, pay little attention to the context of the time. Simcoe was many things, as the kindergarten history some of us are interested in and concerned with teaches us. I listened to what he had to say and how terrible Simcoe was in terms of for what he stood. A lot of that is true. There is a certain antiquarian disinterest in the sort of Tory aristocrat for which he stood.

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, we know your escape to the chair is one which has removed you from the clutches of the purity which we all know to be—

Mr. Wildman: Elevation.

Mr. Conway: —not nearly what the socialists would have us believe in this Legislature. I listen to them, time and time again, suggest that they and only they are consistent in a historic sort of way, and that the Tories today should not wish to force John Graves Simcoe on us because all that he stands for is repugnant to us. Perhaps that might be.

Mr. Wildman: You said you were going to support the bill.

Mr. Conway: That might be the debatable point. That certainly might be the case, but I just refer members of the assembly, in somewhat of an allied fashion, to this morning's Globe and Mail in which the Ottawa correspondent, Mr. Geoffrey Stevens, wrote an article entitled "The Official Secrets Act." He does, I think, great justice to the present debate by rolling back to the introduction of that particular legislation in 1939. There is some relevance in this, believe it or not, when the distinguished Ottawa columnist—

Mr. Foulds: You are certainly not using the research of your parliamentary intern.

Mr. Conway: —of the Globe and Mail quoted the even more distinguished former CCF member of the federal House, Mr. A. A. Heaps from Winnipeg North, about the Official Secrets Act, something about which modern-day socialists have not unheard-of opinions. The columnist this morning cites the former member for Winnipeg North as supporting entirely the Official Secrets Act. He says, and he quotes the member at the time as saying, "I think every honourable member . . . will approve of the principle [of the Official Secrets Act] embodied in this proposed legislation. In times such as the present . . . every nation has the right to protect itself . . . Honourable members cannot be anything but wholeheartedly in support of such a measure."

Now, the point of that instruction, of course, is that we should not take, all too seriously, the purist platitudes of the member for York South who fails, as he knows he fails, to give the proper context to the times and circumstance in which John Graves Simcoe found himself. There is a certain intellectual dishonesty in much of his argument, inasmuch as he knows, even the socialists in this House know, that in 200 years Ontario has changed to some degree.

The member for York South, notwithstanding my earlier comments, makes some very valid points about what it is John Graves Simcoe stood for. He was an arch Tory, not unlike the blue-vested member for Carleton (Mr. Handleman) just arriving in the Legislature. He understood Toryism as I suspect few of his contemporaries and many of his successors understand it.

Mr. Roy: He could not be as far right as the member for Carleton.

Mr. Conway: I understand it only inasmuch as I am appalled by its regressive inequalities. I understand it inasmuch as I know the majority of the people of this province today want little or nothing to do with it. I understand it, inasmuch as I can say with the member for York South, that John Graves Simcoe indeed wanted an assembly of half-pay officers. That might be better than an assembly characterized by half-wit ministers.

Mr. G. Taylor: Or fully-paid members of the opposition.

Mr. Conway: That might be better, but I don't want to suggest that it is something that I, as a liberal in the classic sense of the word, want to foist upon the people of this province. But let us understand, for the edification of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. F. S. Miller), that that is what we seek to honour when we talk of John Graves Simcoe; an arch Tory who wanted to make this a little England in the bushlands of North America; who wanted to establish and maintain an official relationship between church and state; who wanted, and perhaps this is something that might recommend him to the member for London South (Mr. Walker), to make London the capital of the land and thereby help the Legislature escape from the sometimes difficult clutches of Toronto. This is something that all members should perhaps consider. He wanted, as I said earlier, to make this a province characterized by an invented aristocracy, something which all members are completely, I am sure, at odds with in the modern context of 1978.

Mr. Nixon: Did Chris write this stuff?

Mr. Conway: He did indeed; a fine research assistant.

But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that many of those features which Simcoe stood for were relevant in the period of the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Mr. G. Taylor: Glad you understand history, Sean. The members to your left don't.

Mr. Conway: To that extent, those characteristics, which the first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada wanted to establish, were ones which met with widespread support within the provincial community at that time. But I would suggest to the honourable members that those may not be virtues we want to hold forward 200 years later.

I would suggest that inasmuch as honouring Lieutenant Governors is concerned, it is not a bad idea to pick John Graves Simcoe out of what is really a questionable list. I think of John Graves Simcoe as certainly better than Francis Bondhead, known as Francis Bonehead to those liberal reformers of the day. It certainly seems better than Peregrine Maitland.

[5:30]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: You are plagiarizing now.

Mr. Conway: It certainly seems better than George Arthur who brought police state repression to the rebellion-ridden province in the 1830s. To that extent, I would agree with the member for Simcoe East in his suggestion that John Graves Simcoe is a name better than others. But I must say it is a vision which I do not feel succeeded in this country, as all of us know.

This is not a land of aristocracy, despite the Minister of Energy. This is not a land of church-state dominance, despite the Minister of Energy. This is a province that has developed under the wise guidance of liberal reform political ethics.

Mr. Handleman: Do you mean Mitch Hepburn?

Mr. Conway: It seems to me that if we have to pick from the list of Lieutenant-Governors or Governors General, then John Graves Simcoe is certainly acceptable to me. I remember well last year the member for Port Arthur suggesting, as he will no doubt suggest later this afternoon, that others might be more representative.

Mr. Speaker: You've got 10 seconds left.

Mr. Conway: He suggested Agnes MacPhail. Not wishing to be sexist, I would suggest that if we must have a name, perhaps the genius of Ontario in both its past history and some of its present direction would be most typified by naming the Civic Holiday for the non-partisan George Brown.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Your researcher gets a C minus for that lousy speech.

Mr. Foulds: I am afraid that once again I must say to the member opposite and to you, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot bring myself to support this bill. Sir John Graves Simcoe, after all, embodies all of the worst characteristics of the early founding of our history in political terms. As the member who has just spoken pointed out, I can understand the commitment of the Tory party to Colonel Simcoe and to Simcoe Day. If the Conservative Party could turn back the hands of time, it certainly would restrict entrance to the Legislative Assembly and voting rights to half-pay officers. In the 20th century, that would be the OPP.

I readily admit the framework of time in which he lived and I readily admit the engineering skills and vision that he had and the second-rate Roman attitude that the building of roads and highways was the primary thing to do. However, the fact that a county is named after his father—most people think it is named after him—and that the Simcoe name is embodied in the name of one county, two provincial ridings, one lake and a downtown Toronto hotel is enough honour for one man. When the downtown Toronto hotel elevates him to the peerage, which never happened in history, surely that is honour enough.

I am not always sure of this, but I think that we have moved somewhat forward in terms of democracy from Colonel John Graves Simcoe's time. I almost elevated him to the peerage myself. Maybe that could be done posthumously. There are a number of other illustrious people in Ontario's history that could be honoured and I suggested a number of these back in 1976. My own favourite, or one of the suggestions I made, is that we should have a Macdonald Day to honour—

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Which Macdonald?

Mr. Foulds: —all of the Macdonalds who have contributed so much to the history of Ontario—

An hon. member: Let's go for a hamburger.

Mr. Foulds: —Sir John A., John Sanfield Macdonald, and our own Donald C. Macdonald. I think that, in fact, would be an honourable suggestion embodying a number of honourable traditions in political history.

Mr. MacDonald: We might even include Donald S. Macdonald.

Mr. Foulds: Why not? That way all three of the active political parties could be represented, and everyone in the province could feel that they were participating in a day that was honouring one of their particular heroes.

We could name it after Joseph Brant, if we wanted to honour one of the native builders of this province. We could name it after one of the northern native leaders, Shinguakouce who, in fact, spent a considerable period of time walking from his home between what is now Thunder Bay and Sault Ste. Marie to York. I think he walked that distance in 10 days, in order to make contact with the leaders of the Anglican Church to encourage them to bring schools and education to his people in the north.

I am sure the Minister of Natural Resources, the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller), would want to name it after the most illustrious son of his riding, the person who is probably the best-known Canadian around the world, and that is Dr. Norman Bethune, who contributed so much in humanitarian terms to the development of our recognition of the country and to medical science and humanitarian efforts.

I am sure many people would want to honour one of the other builders of Ontario, Sir Adam Beck, the founder of Ontario Hydro, or, if you want to look at the social field, the eminently prestigious educationist, Egerton Ryerson, who after all only has a polytechnic named after him so far. My own favourite person, in terms of Ontario's political history would be, as I indicated last time, Agnes MacPhail. She pioneered in a number of areas, both provincially and federally, in terms of representation on a political level.

I have switched my thinking a little bit since 1976 and I am not bound by those. I have a feeling that perhaps it might be more fun—and after all, a holiday should be fun—if we named it after one of the people who have contributed to this province in terms of the arts. I thought of Tom Thomson, and I thought of some of our writers. I actually thought of having a pitch for national unity and naming it Laurier Day as an expression of goodwill to our brethren across the Ottawa River, and I thought of naming it Group of Seven Day.

However, I think if you really want to capture the essence of Ontario, the essence of fun in a holiday in midsummer, what better person to honour than Stephen Leacock, who after all in many ways embodies all of the virtues of Ontario along with a sense of humour that is notably lacking in most of our politicians. I would think that if we had a day in the late summer in honour of Stephen Leacock the people across the floor should find that acceptable. He was a Tory, after all, a Tory economist.

Hon. W. Newman: You would like to name it Foulds Day, I know.

Mr. Foulds: He had a sense of satire and humour that would leaven the turgidity that passes for speechifying and speech-making in this House and often on the hustings. So my nominee this year for honour in terms of the Civil Holiday is Stephen Leacock. It is not that I disrespect the nominee from the member for Simcoe East, but I honour my nominee more.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I will support the bill this afternoon. I was somewhat amused by the member for York South, who has switched his allegiance, but I listened to his speech and discovered why he is suddenly a fan of John Graves Simcoe. He discovered in his research that John Graves Simcoe was anti-American.

Of course that is one of the pillars and foundations of NDP policy. Anyone who is anti-American is, of course, a friend of theirs.

An hon. member: What about John Diefenbaker?

Mr. MacDonald: Anti-Americanism was the basis of the Tory policy in the 19th century.

Mr. Samis: What about John A. Macdonald? You get dumber every day.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am a little surprised at those across the way—some who support this bill and some who oppose it—who are standing up here this afternoon and making fun of the British and the Anglo-Saxon traditions and making fun of John Graves Simcoe.

Mr. Samis: You weren't even here.

Mr. Martel: Take your halo off.

Mr. Samis: Bring back Havrot.

Mr. Foulds: He was even a Neanderthal 180 years ago.

Mr. Rotenberg: We have to judge John Graves Simcoe in light of 180 years ago, in light of the 18th century. We shouldn't be judging him by 20th century standards and, of course, if you put John Graves Simcoe into the 20th century, I know he wouldn't be acceptable in the NDP caucus. But in light of the standards—

Mr. Foulds: It is probably presentable in the back benches of your caucus.

Mr. Rotenberg: Could I have a little order, Mr. Speaker?

In light of the standards of the late 18th century, and if you look at John Graves Simcoe's record, in light of the standards of the time, he comes out as a very progressive conservative.

Mr. M. Davidson: That's what he looks at, his record.

Mr. Samis: How much of an ass can you be. Gordy, this is demeaning to your speech.

Mr. Rotenberg: We have had a number of debates in this Legislature, a number of debates, talking about preserving and perpetuating ethnic traditions and ethnic cultures. We debated heritage language, we debated culture, we debated grants to all of the ethnic organizations; and those opposite have always claimed to be in the forefront—

Mr. MacDonald: John Graves Simcoe would have done that. He would have made them all become Anglicans.

Mr. Rotenberg: —claimed to be in the forefront of those policies and trot out their politics.

But I wonder sometimes why those opposite who want to perpetuate all of the other ethnic minority cultures do not want to help perpetuate the culture of the largest minority group in Ontario which, of course, is the Anglo-Saxons.

Mr. Nixon: It is an endangered minority.

Mr. Martel: Who writes your lines?

Mr. Samis: You make Yakabuski sound sensible.

Mr. Eaton: Nobody interrupted when you guys were speaking.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are the complete Neanderthal.

Mr. Rotenberg: I wonder if you might enforce the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker? Would you ask the NDP to have only one member heckle at a time, please?

Mr. Samis: Okay, we will.

Mr. Grande: Don't be so provocative.

Mr. Martel: Maybe we can also get the speakers up one at a time.

Mr. Rotenberg: John Graves Simcoe, for all his faults, was really the founder of the establishing of the Anglo-Saxon culture and tradition in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: His brother-in-law was a minister of the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Every honourable member of this House has a right to be heard.

Mr. Martel: Let's make an exception.

Mr. Nixon: He started the famous Ontario pork barrel.

Mr. Rotenberg: I wonder what set them off? They have no respect at all for wisdom.

What I simply want to say is that I, who do not come from an Anglo-Saxon background, will support the honouring of John Graves Simcoe, who brought Anglo-Saxon tradition to Ontario. Why, suddenly do those across the way who do come from Anglo-Saxon backgrounds simply seem to want to negate their tradition?

Mr. Samis: Who are you talking about?

Mr. Foulds: We blindly honour a dunderhead.

Mr. Samis: Is the cabinet ready for you?

Mr. Rotenberg: We complain so often—I hear the complaining especially from those opposite—that we do not have a Canadian identity. They complain we lack a Canadian identity, and here we have a chance to take a silly little name like Civic Holiday, which is meaningless to everyone, call it Simcoe Day to establish an identity, a truly Canadian identity for one holiday, and those who brack and bray about wanting a Canadian identity, when the time comes are just not home; they are out to lunch.

Mr. T. P. Reid: All those in favour of Rotenberg Day?

Mr. Foulds: What about John A. Macdonald? I'll settle for Macdonald.

Mr. Rotenberg: I think we should honour John Graves Simcoe. About 16 years ago we established in this province the John Graves Simcoe Foundation and I am very pleased to have had some part in that establishment.

Sixteen years ago I was a member of the Toronto city council and not a member of this Legislature. Back at that time it was drawn to our attention that Wolford Chapel in Devon, the burial place and the home of John Graves Simcoe, was in some state of disrepair and ruin; it was actually owned by the publisher of the Exeter newspaper. It was surrounded by the land of a gentleman named Le Marchant whose ancestors had come over with William the Conqueror.

I had the privilege that summer, Mr. Speaker, of visiting Devon and the representative of Mr. Harmsworth of the Exeter newspaper took me to visit the chapel. I visited with Mr. Le Marchant and asked those people, would they grant this little piece of Ontario in England to the government of Ontario through a responsible non-profit organization if one could be set up. They said they would.

[5:45]

When I came back as a member of the Toronto city council I approached the city council at that time and they wanted no part of it. I came to the government of Ontario which respects all traditions. I would like to pay particular tribute to the present Chairman of Management Board, who was then Minister of Tourism. The Honourable James Auld was very receptive to the idea of setting up a foundation—to the idea of Ontario taking over John Graves Simcoe's home and burial place.

The government of Ontario stepped in, set up the foundation, and purchased the land for a dollar. Ever since then, we in Ontario are honouring John Graves Simcoe by perpetuating his home and his burial place in the chapel in a little bit of Devon. If we in Ontario can honour him in England, certainly we can honour him within our own province. I suggest, as a non-Anglo Saxon, that we pass this bill, and give some honour to the Anglo-Saxon tradition in Ontario and to its founder.

Mr. Makarchuk: You've said that about five times now.

Mr. G. E. Smith: I would just like to say a few words in summing up. I've appreciated the comments of the members supporting the bill and I've listened with a great deal of interest to the others' comments from those who were not quite so enthusiastic.

I was interested in the comments of the member for York South when he indicated—and I think one or two other honourable members indicated—that John Graves Simcoe apparently was a Conservative or a Tory. I can understand them assuming that now because the member for York South did indicate that John Graves Simcoe was attempting to appoint army personnel to form the government. He indicated that he was trying to bring the class society from England to Canada. But like any good Tory he sensed that wasn't what the people wanted and he abandoned that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Obviously, he was the last of the good ones.

Mr. G. E. Smith: As a result, I can understand now that he likely was a Tory.

Mr. MacDonald: He was clobbered into it by Cartwright.

Mr. G. E. Smith: I believe it was the member for Port Arthur who suggested that Chief Joseph Brant would be a more suitable name. It's interesting to note that Joseph Brant and John Graves Simcoe were personal friends. They had a great deal of mutual respect. Certainly Joseph Brant was a very fine gentleman, as were some of the other people mentioned by the honourable members taking part in this debate. But it comes back again to the point that John Graves Simcoe was the first Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. As a result I think he should receive greater preference than some of the other names that were mentioned.

While Simcoe may have had his faults, he had a grand design for Ontario and an impact upon its development which has lasted to this day. By honouring Simcoe we would be recognizing as well the contributions of all early settlers and administrators in this province.

In conclusion, I would like to say that the Barrie Examiner supported it editorially. I'll have to condense it because I see my time has elapsed. They headed the editorial, "Simcoe Day—A Good Name for the August Holiday." They sum it up by saying, "Besides, Civic Holiday is rather a blah name, is it not?"

I hope the honourable members will support this bill on second reading.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Bill 65.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

Mr. Kerrio: That is how private members' hour is supposed to function.

Mr. Martel: Now we will find out how it goes back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Actually, we are giving very serious thought to having a special committee meet all summer at Niagara-on-the-Lake to discuss this.

An hon. member: How about Lake Simcoe?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, usually at this point we indicate the order of business for next week. The House leaders have met today and with the permission of the House we would almost like to do it on a daily basis, because although it is alleged we are getting close to recess, it is going to be difficult really to predict too far into next week until we know what progress we have made.

Mr. Conway: That's what Winkler used to say. He is now driving buses.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You seem to have that name on your mind—not much more on your mind, but at least you have got that name on your mind.

Hon. B. Stephenson: He has dandruff on his mind.

Mr. Conway: Well, I don't have the stuff you have got there.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It has been indicated that tonight we will start at 8 o'clock with second reading of Bill 103, and then we will go into committee of the whole to complete Bill 83. It is my understanding there will be a bell because of divisions within committee on Bill 83 at 10:15 p.m. We will clean up those two items tonight.

On Friday, we will go to second readings of Bills 110, 111 and 121, then into committee on Bills 91, 85 and 96.

Perhaps we might go as far as Monday: On Monday, first thing, at motion time, we will establish the select committee on health costs. We will then do third reading of Bill 48. We will do Bill 86 in committee and then continue with anything left over from Friday's schedule. Following that we will consider Bills 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120—the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) package of children's legislation. That will be done on the understanding, of course, that the House would agree to dispense with provisional order 30, because we may have the social development committee in session outside the House.

So if, in fact, we might carry it that far, Monday we could give a report for the balance of the week. On Tuesday, the first order in the afternoon, as has been agreed, will be the second reading of Bill 112.

Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted one further comment, there will be an evening sitting on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Mr. Foulds: No. We need a motion.

Hon. Mr. Welch: We don't need a motion.

The House recessed at 6:03 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CONDOMINIUM ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved second reading of Bill 103, An Act to revise the Condominium Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: On June 1, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations introduced Bill 103. At that time, he gave to the House a statement which, I presume, he is not going to repeat at this time. Printed copies of the bill were available on June 5, and we are to debate the principle of this bill just 10 days later.

Since this bill is a complete revision of the earlier Condominium Act, it would ordinarily have been entirely unreasonable to expect quick approval on second reading and, in any event, the final steps of approval in committee or third reading with royal assent before the House would be expected to adjourn a week tomorrow on June 23.

There are, however, two reasons why we are able to proceed this evening. The first is that the bill is based on a 100-page report of the Ontario Residential Condominium Study Group which filed its report with the minister in late March. That group had lengthy public hearings and received briefs and submissions while they met in Thunder Bay, Windsor, London, Brampton, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, Kingston and the Kitchener-Waterloo area. Those submissions alone were from some 280 interested persons and groups. As a result, the group has very actively canvassed the interested parties in the condominium world.

The second reason we can proceed is that public opportunities have been arranged for, so that any additional comments on this bill may be heard in early October. I understand that tentative arrangements are being made for those hearings in the first and second weeks of October, so that all who have further comments to add may be accommodated at that time.

The process then for this bill will have followed five steps. First, we have had the public hearings and, secondly, the report to which I have referred. As the third step, we see legislation before us which will receive second reading. There will then be the opportunity over the summer months for review of the proposed bill by those persons who are particularly interested. We will then have the opportunity of that fifth stage to have further comments from the public, to which I have referred, during the committee stage of the bill. All those who will be interested can now know the exact legislative view of the government with respect to the comments and suggestions that have been made in the report.

The bill as proposed will make a large number of particular changes. There are some 15 cited generally as themes in the introduction of the bill, and I certainly shall not review them here. I will, however, refer to one of the important changes which is the establishment of a bureau, as it is cited, whose function will be to assist condominium corporations and owners by providing advice, information and a forum for settling disputes. The goals for which that corporation is to be organized are ones which we would all share. We want to turn the comprehensive report of the Ontario Residential Condominium Study Group into better protection for the purchasers.

It is only since 1967 that condominiums have existed in Canada. Now there are some 1,000 corporations with perhaps 100,000 units across Ontario. Originally, the concept was to provide larger units and more square footage of living space for the dollar available to be spent than one could normally otherwise obtain in that price range. Condominiums are a sound idea whose time may not as yet have fully come. This may be because the concept went into effect rather quickly in some areas and perhaps without necessary thought and balance.

However, this period of digesting has now been accomplished, and the result is seen particularly in the idea of the proposal for Condominium Ontario. That kind of a phrase reminds us of everything from GO Transit to many of the other terms which the government has coined over these last several years. I suppose that as long as the provincial flag and the trillium appear prominently on the green and white letterhead, approval for those styles will quickly come from the minister.

Mr. Nixon: He likes his name on it too.

Mr. Warner: The minister is embarrassed.

Mr. Breithaupt: No, he doesn't embarrass that easily.

Mr. Nixon: We've yet to see the day that he is embarrassed.

Mr. Breithaupt: The organization should hopefully, provide a forum to settle many of these disputes that have arisen from time to time in these projects. The organization is going to be providing public information and that, together with the involvement of the 10-day cooling-off idea, is a good addition in these proposals.

I am interested in the matter of the approval process, particularly because I read one comment which suggested that this bill is not particularly referring to some of the difficulties in the approval process for condominiums that at least those who build these projects might wish to have attend to. As a result, I would expect that the builders who are involved in the problems which may be occasioned by certain of these delays will come before the committee to which this bill will be referred so that if there are additional changes which should on balance be included, there will be the opportunity to do so.

I think it is probably unnecessary to recite the various items that are in the bill. Surely we should be able, in my view, to approve this bill quite readily on second reading with the knowledge that there will be substantial public opportunity to suggest the kinds of changes which may be required as the bill moves through its various legislative stages.

As I have said, we have a bill based substantially on a report which was lengthy and which, in turn, was based upon much public input. We have the opportunity then to use that basis upon which to go further and complete legislation that is going to come to a stage of approval and which is going to ensure that persons who have purchased condominiums will have the best balance of protection and involvement that we can provide.

We're certainly pleased to see that the bill is before us. With the opportunity for public involvement at the committee stage, we have no difficulty in approving the bill on second reading.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Since we've been informed that the bill will go to committee stage in late October, there is no need this evening for a lengthy and exhaustive debate on this very important piece of legislation. The real debate will, of course, take place in the committee stage at the justice committee in the first two weeks of October. There are, however, some general matters which I think are in need of clarification and there are a number of other matters that I think should be added to the record tonight so that we establish the proper background for our hearings in October.

It has now been more than a decade since condominium ownership was officially recognized as a distinctive form of tenure in the province of Ontario and condominiums, frankly, have not been the success that some hoped they might have been. That is why, I guess, we have before us a piece of legislation from this ministry which is not an act to amend a bill but rather to revise a bill.

The Legislature and its members have received recommendations for very major changes in this area of legislation, and that statement is not meant to legitimize the nature of the changes proposed by the minister but rather should be seen as a comment on their number, which is legion. I think it is important that we in this House understand just how badly the government has failed in the question of condominiums. Up until this point in time the government's record has been rather dismal, I am afraid.

It is also, I think, important for us in the Legislature to understand just how serious the problem is that is now before us. According to CMHC, as of December 31, 1977, there were 111,107 completed condominium units in the province of Ontario. At a press conference this past Tuesday, the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) stated that there were approximately 40,000 condominium units completed but unsold in this province. The figure suggests that, apparently, 36 per cent of the units completed to date remain unsold. That means that for every two units that have been sold, one is standing unsold in the province of Ontario.

It is because of that failure of near-crisis proportion in the province that the condominium legislation must be totally overhauled and, in fact, changed drastically and dramatically. Because the government is no longer able to ignore this very serious problem, it has come forward with these recommendations, with these proposals of change to the legislation.

The first step along the path that the government took was the establishment of the Ontario residential condominium study group last year, and the Kealey report, in my estimation at least, did a reasonably good job of outlining the problems condominium owners face in the condominium field.

However, in its recommendations, the Kealey report did not quite keep up with its own standard and the recommendations fell short of meeting the needs of the condominium owners.

This revised Condominium Act that we have before us falls even further short of reaching the Kealey report than that report did of meeting the original needs and as such I think we can quickly judge it to be at best inadequate. The minister, to be fair with him, has never purported or suggested that the changes he is bringing forward are anything more than an attempt to fully deal with the consumer protection aspect of the condominium problem. However, I suspect many people who own condominiums would agree with me when I say that it falls short, even in this limited endeavour.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Then vote against it.

[8:15]

Mr. Warner: Don't be provocative.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Fortunately, we are interested in solving a very real problem. We very well understand the nature of minority government. We have a real desire not only to make minority government work but to solve the problems of condominium owners. We are quite happy to work with you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So you will support it?

Mr. Wildman: We are trying to get you to listen.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —so that those owners can be provided with legislation that will properly meet their needs.

Mr. Warner: You put out the crumbs and we make cookies out of them.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's the purpose of the exercise from this side of the House. If you see some other purpose, that's your business.

Mr. Lawlor: You are starting to lead a kind of fantasy life. You see bogey men everywhere.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's why he sleeps with the light on at night.

Fortunately for us and fortunately for the condominium owners in the province, it's going to be possible to amend this legislation during committee stage so that we can put some teeth into it and animate this paper lion that the minister's constructed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Paper tiger.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Paper tiger? Okay.

Mr. Lawlor: A paper tiger that will bite.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I suspect the minister did as good a job as he could selling this to his cabinet colleagues—

Ms. Gigantes: We don't know, and we don't count on it now.

Mr. M. N. Davison: No? Oh well.

Mr. Warner: Don't bet on it. We know about beer in the ball park.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The government's failure to act in areas such as the reduction of costs through improved registration and approval processes, the overcharging for municipal services and the inadequate construction standards is really beyond the understanding of people who have seen this legislation.

The minister justified this rather typical lethargy on June 1 when he stated in the House, "The ministries of Housing and Treasury, Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, the municipalities and the building code branch of my ministry all have a role to play in the revision of the front-end processes. We have had submissions about the efficacy of the process from virtually every sector. Because of the great divergence of opinion, the planning and approval stages require careful thought. It is essential that we move cautiously in these areas and explore fully the ramifications on municipalities. Therefore, we will be reviewing the following," and he sets out those three areas.

Perhaps I could read the minister's words back to him once again: "1. Processes by which condominium projects are approved and registered in order to reduce the time and cost of developments; 2. municipal planning standards and provisions of services to improve the amenity of condominium living and lower operating costs; 3. Building codes as they apply to condominium construction as part of our continuing review of the building code."

I would assume from that, as I am sure most of us in the House would at this time, that the minister had some idea the legislation would be passed relatively quickly. I guess viewing it from the perspective of June 1, perhaps he had in mind the date June 23.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Ever the optimist.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Now that it is quite apparent that it will be almost four months, almost a third of a year, before we get to committee stage with this legislation, I am sure the minister would like to adjust that position.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We might as well take it now. Do you want to go to third reading?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Now there's plenty of time for those ministries involved to get their acts together so that in October the minister can provide the justice committee with a position paper or, better yet, draft legislation. Then when the committee sits down in October for two weeks to do its work, they could do what they should be doing—that is, studying the entire matter of condominiums in its entirety rather than this piecemeal approach. As of June 1, 1978, this was the minister's position and frankly, Mr. Minister, this is not adequate.

The minister has failed to fully resolve—as a matter of fact he's even failed to really talk about—the question of over-assessment of condominiums between 1971 and 1975. It is the position of my party today, as it has always been on this issue, that the government should ensure that rebates are paid by the province to all overassessed condominium owners.

One of the major problems facing owners in the field of condominiums is that of property management firms. This issue has, by the minister's legislation, in effect, been left to the industry to resolve for themselves. That, as we know in Ontario, is not always the best way to approach these matters although it is the favourite approach of the government to such matters.

Frankly, the establishment of—what do you call it?—Condominium Ontario: that's a body with very limited authority. Only 50 per cent of its membership is composed of condominium owners; and on behalf of the owners, let me say that that organization will not be able to provide any real incentive for the industry to impose standards on itself.

If the minister and the government weren't always so quick to reject regulation as if it was a disease—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It often is.

Mr. Wildman: Only when you're administering it. You are a cancer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But benign.

Mr. Makarchuk: I'm not too sure about that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Not terminal.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —he might have understood that the only way to proceed properly if we are going to solve the problem is through direct regulation of property management firms by a registrar of condominiums. That's rather simple to see.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: More regulation.

Mr. M. N. Davison: But the minister and the government seem to have a Pavlovian reaction to the word regulation. They always abandon it without even trying it, without even looking at it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Look who is talking.

Mr. M. N. Davison: While in some cases that may be a good idea—

Mr. Makarchuk: It would be better to get rid of the minister than the regulations.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Order, Mac.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The minister will have a chance to respond to these mild and gentle suggestions later on in the debate.

Mr. Lawlor: You are known as the minister of regulations, aren't you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: De-regulations.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm sure that during the next few months, and during the committee meetings, the minister is going to enter into the debate in the spirit of listening to everyone who comes before the committee, to everyone who approaches the minister; and that he will, to some extent, be able to leave behind him when he enters the committee room his prejudices and his biases—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is not a prejudiced bone in my body.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —and the Tory dogma that he surrounds himself with. I trust that when the minister properly understands the facts—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, that's my problem.

Mr. M. N. Davison: —he will be willing to change his mind and be willing to accept a position—support a position that will more properly meet the needs of condominium owners, who are the ones who are suffering right now.

Mr. Warner: You might as well try to melt cement.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If I might conclude, our party will on second reading support this legislation, not so much for what the legislation does, but rather because it is a revision of the act which therefore lends itself very nicely to very broad and very serious amendments; so that when we adopt legislation upon third reading and pass it into law, we will have in place an excellent piece of legislation which other jurisdictions will look to, and which will adequately and properly meet and protect condominium owners' interests.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Carleton East.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At least she knows what she is talking about; now we will learn something.

Mr. Swart: You just listen there, Larry.

Ms. Gigantes: It is a pleasure to be able to participate briefly in this debate—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now I will listen; she knows what she is talking about.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What are you so agitated about this evening?

Ms. Gigantes: If I could suggest, Mr. Speaker, the minister seems like the lady who doth protest too much. He is a little overly defensive these days.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What about the man who protests? Don't be chauvinistic—the man who protests.

Mr. Lawlor: That thick skin is getting very thick.

Ms. Gigantes: I think he is going to have to learn to change his mind just a little bit more than he has just over the last week or so. He has seen the light on rent review, and I think given a few more weeks of discussion of this legislation he can be brought to see the light on the review of condominium legislation in this province.

Mr. Lawlor: Never; never that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Never open minded; never malleable.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. My interest in condominium legislation arises from the fact that in the riding of Carleton East we have a very large number of condominiums. Further, I am one who has had the experience personally, so I have something of a personal interest in this bill. I have learned that the experiences in the riding of Carleton East have been very much like the experiences in other parts of the province. I have learned this from other condominium associations and groups, and also from colleagues in the Legislature reporting on what is happening in the areas they represent.

This bill was a long time coming. The original condominium legislation, when it came into effect in Ontario back in 1970, was far from perfect. It was wide open to abuse by developers and it was abused.

By 1974, when I had the privilege of being a candidate for the New Democratic Party in the by-election held in Carleton East, it was quite clear there was a crisis in condominiums in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: That was before anyone ever heard of Darwin Kealey.

Mr. Martel: Darwin who?

Ms. Gigantes: I didn't win that election so I didn't have a chance in the fall of 1974 to bring those concerns to this Legislature. But when I ran again in 1975, my Conservative opponent was a worthy gentleman named Darwin Kealey.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Conservative.

Ms. Gigantes: He still is a worthy gentleman. Darwin and I developed a—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Even the minister likes him, eh?

Mr. Warner: Protect him, Larry, he needs all the help he can get.

Ms. Gigantes: Darwin and I developed the kind of political relationship I like to have with my Conservative opponents, and that is the relationship where I win. It's a very satisfying one.

Mr. Makarchuk: An excellent relationship.

Ms. Gigantes: There is no doubt in my mind that poor Darwin would have had a much better chance in the riding of Carleton East if he had understood the problems of condominium corporations.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If she lost she would have got the job—the Gigantes study.

Mr. Martel: I doubt it.

Mr. Breithaupt: Both had a chance to learn.

Ms. Gigantes: I recall very well being at an all-candidates meeting where an enraged group of condominium owners had to listen to Mr. Kealey suggest that in order to be able to bring about some change in the situation they were in, where they were being double taxed at the local level, perhaps they should withhold their municipal taxes. They almost threw him out of the hall.

Mr. Makarchuk: Those Tories are anarchists.

Ms. Gigantes: That was the Conservative candidate's approach to one of the major problems facing condominium corporation owners then, and one which remains in spite of this bill.

The minister decided we were going to have to have a lengthy review of the situation, in spite of the fact the word came from Carleton East and from other ridings around this province that there was a crisis in condominium legislation. There was a crisis in the way that condominiums were being sold in the province of Ontario and the ways people were being ripped off, there is no nicer word available for it.

The figures on the number of unsold units speak for the dramatic public resistance to purchasing condominium units that arose because of those inadequacies in legislation and the ways in which the public was ripped off in condominium ownership. The minister decided we must have a long, lengthy study, which he initiated after Mr. Kealey lost for the second time in 1977.

Mr. Martel: Twice.

Ms. Gigantes: By this time Mr. Kealey had learned something of the problems of condominium ownership and he set about that study, I think with great conviction. As my colleague from Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) has pointed out, what the report of that study gave us was an excellent outline of the problems and not very much in terms of hard recommendations to deal with those problems.

[8:30]

This bill reflects the inadequacies of that report. There are three areas in which this bill simply does not meet very grave needs of condominium owners. The structural deficiencies that were built in and are being built into condominium developments are not responded to by this legislation whatsoever. There is no real protection for a condominium group, or for condominium owners as individuals when they buy a building and find it is falling apart or working badly. There has to be that kind of protection.

There has also to be some kind of proposal from the government whereby owners who have been ripped off in the past will get redress. It should be redress that comes in a form that does not involve expensive lawsuits against developers who may well have gone out of business by now, or at least changed corporate names and structures.

Let me give you one example of what I'm talking about on this subject. Across Elmsmere Road, which is the road I live on, there is a condominium named the Hillview Towers. There's a gentleman who lives in the Hillview Towers named Ed Tremblay. He's a fireman. He got burned in one condominium project, called Sutton Place, also in Carleton East. As a fireman, he decided he was going to take financial fire prevention measures about the purchase of his second condominium.

He watched as the building went up, noted the kind of construction going on and the way design specs were not being met. When he moved into the condominium and it became registered, he immediately worked on the maintenance committees of the condominium corporation of Hillview Towers.

Over a period of four years, two of which he was the president of the condominium corporation, he amassed a document this thick. It was a compilation of documents and his correspondence with every authority who moved that he could appeal to for help about the condition of that building.

He finally got a lucky break, and his condominium corporation too was very lucky, because among the owners in the Hillview Towers was one Senator Molgat, former president of the Liberal Party of Canada who arranged a meeting—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That's a lucky break.

Ms. Gigantes: —between Mr. Tremblay and the well-known Mr. Teron, who runs CHMC.

Mr. Wildman: He's a Liberal too.

Ms. Gigantes: Yes, he's a Liberal, too; he's a well-known Liberal.

Mr. Makarchuk: They've always been screwing the people.

Mr. Philip: Point of order. That's not parliamentary.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Teron, in turn, arranged for Mr. Tremblay to meet various officials of CMHC—

Mr. Warner: He hides behind bushes.

Ms. Gigantes: —who then went to the development company in question and said: "If we finance an independent engineering review of the complaints made by the condominium corporation will you undertake to repair whatever the independent review shows to be deficient?" The company, to its credit, said, yes. That company was Minto Development, and I think it deserves credit for that.

What this independent engineering review discovered was out of dozens—and as I recollect, the number was somewhere up in the 80s—of major complaints about the structure of that building, well over 80 per cent were upheld. Eighty per cent of those complaints were upheld by the independent engineering arbitration.

Minto, again to its credit, said: "Fine, we said we'd carry out the repairs, and we will." I estimate, and Mr. Tremblay, who has spent a good deal of time, over four years, estimates those repairs were probably worth, to the condominium owners, if they had had to undertake them themselves, somewhere up in the range of $1 million. That's on one building.

Furthermore, one of the points the independent engineering arbitration awarded was a problem with the plumbing. The problem was the hot water pipe was set right next to the cold water pipe. That meant everybody on the top floor was running their cold water for several minutes in order to get cold water. That cost the condominium corporation money.

Minto said: "We're not going to tear out every pipe in all the walls in this building.

We'll give you a flat annual payment for your costs on this one." Mr. Tremblay said: "Fine, that sounds good to me." Minto said: "How much do you think it would be?" Mr. Tremblay said: "I'm not an expert on this, but I reckon about $10,000 a year." Minto said: "You've got to be kidding." Mr. Tremblay said: "Well, if you don't agree with that figure, go and do your own tests on it and give me your estimate. Then we'll discuss it."

Minto did that and came back to him and gave him a contract that said that it would provide $10,000 a year every year to that condominium corporation. That's just one little point. It's worth $10,000 because the pipes were put in wrong. They never met the building specs as designed, it wasn't built as designed.

There is no protection in this legislation for consumers who have been ripped off in this way and haven't been as lucky as to have somebody with Mr. Tremblay's knowledge and perseverance, and also to have Senator Molgat living in the building. In fairness to the development company, it was willing to say: "Yes, if we have provided you with a building that's less than it should be and if that's proven to us by an independent arbitration, we will make good the repairs that need to go in." Most condominium corporations are not in that situation, and this legislation is not going to help them.

The second point that this legislation really doesn't deal with—nor did the Kealey report though he outlined the problem most clearly—is the problem of double taxation. That happens to every condominium owner who lives in a development which has less than standard municipal services or physical features installed in it, or roads that can't be ploughed by the municipality and for which a municipality will take no responsibility. The fire hydrants have to be maintained by the corporation. The lighting in the street has to be maintained by the corporation.

That goes on and on with services that should be municipal. Yet there is nothing in the way that condominium corporations are being assessed that at all compensates for the fact they are paying for these services which are provided through normal municipal taxation for other home owners. There is double taxation going on. This legislation does not say a word about it nor has the minister nor does the Kealey report.

When the minister told us he has delayed legislation for so long so as to be able to bring in a package, I don't think that's adequate. Either we get something in terms of a commitment from this minister to deal with double taxation or we can't accept that this is a package that deals with the real problems of condominium owners.

My colleague from Hamilton Centre mentioned also the outfit that's going to be known as Condominium Ontario, the bureau that is supposed to operate on behalf of condominium owners. I find that's an absolutely outrageous proposal, that after all they've had to suffer over the last eight years under existing legislation and the kind of ripoff we've seen in condominium sales and developments, condominium owners should now be asked to pay for what should be a government-administered bureau that provides them with some decent services so that they can have a minimum kind of guarantee of government involvement and control over condominium developments in Ontario.

That is absolutely ludicrous. I don't know how the minister has the gall to propose it. After they're down, he kicks them. It's just an incredible proposal. I'm sure the minister is going to change his mind on that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do you mean even if the committee suggests it?

Ms. Gigantes: I promised I would be brief.

Mr. Lane: Don't say anything.

Ms. Gigantes: I look forward very much to be able to participate in the process of changing the minister's mind about the efficacy of this legislation.

Mr. Makarchuk: He said he was open-minded. He is close-minded.

Mr. Martel: He is going to withdraw the bill.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am going to go to the people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Ms. Gigantes: —and helping my colleagues present amendments that will meet some of the very severe problems which—

Mr. Wildman: He is not open-minded, but empty-headed.

Ms. Gigantes: —are left untouched in this legislation and for which this minister really has failed to meet his promise that he would bring in an adequate kind of reform package in condominium legislation.

Mr. Philip: I rise in support of the bill, but I must admit I do so with considerable hesitancy. I guess my feeling about the bill can best be summarized in words—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Fantastic, deliriously pleased.

Mr. Philip:—that have already been used to the minister; words that were used by a representative of the Ontario Condominium Association, who after reading the bill and meeting with the minister on Monday said, and I quote—the minister will recall these words—“We expected a feast and we got a few crumbs.” That is what this bill is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They won't vote for your party next time.

Mr. Wildman: Fantastic crumbs though.

Mr. Philip: I think there's a few more than that. You will find that if you talk to some of the condominium owners in Ontario.

Ms. Gigante: Don't be silly; why are you so defensive?

Mr. Wildman: A crumb is better than half a loaf though.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Relax, relax.

Mr. Philip: I think that if the minister would listen to some of the condominium owners, he would realize there may be more opposition from the condominium owners than Mr. Handleman provides for them in the justice committee on certain bills.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That would be hard to do, that would be a lot of opposition.

Mr. Philip: That will be a lot of opposition, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Swart: Think what would happen if you were promoting French.

Mr. Philip: If I may continue, because I am sure the minister is deeply interested in my comments.

As a condominium owner myself, and a representative of my own condominium on the Etobicoke Condominium Association, I resent the fact that the government has ignored the major complaints of condominium owners that have been presented over and over and over again to the Kealey commission—faulty construction, poor maintenance, and double or excessive taxation.

This bill falls very short in meeting the problem of faulty construction. I challenge the minister to explain to the residents in my riding in the Martingrove area why they must wait one and half years to get repairs to their homes under the Home Warranty Plan. I challenge him to explain to the residents of York West, the riding south of me represented by a Conservative member, why they must suffer fungus or mould on the walls of their dream home apartments, which they have spent so much money for.

At least 12 units in that project, in one building and five units in the next-door building, both built by the same developer, are suffering from this problem. The builder insults the intelligence of myself as a member of the Legislature, of the new owners of those apartments, and of the press who have closely examined and taken pictures of that project when he tries to say it is a hygiene problem. An awful lot of people in the honourable member for York West's (Mr. Leluk) riding must have hygiene problems, then, if that is the case.

The maintenance problems haven't been answered by the bill. Indeed, the minister has the audacity to provide that the condominium owners must pay for the professional development of the managers, that's what this bill does. I don't know of any other professions that have their professional development paid for by some other person.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What section is that?

Mr. Philip: I'll give the minister the section in a second if you need to refer to it. It is the section that deals with Condominium Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Okay, we will wait.

Mr. Philip: No, the minister doesn't have to wait. I just told him where it is. If he were as familiar with the bill as I am—maybe he can get Darwin to explain it to him. He will be glad to show it to the minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you are so familiar, just read out the section to me. What section is it?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I don't think the minister has read the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Philip: We'll be debating it section by section. It's Condominium Ontario, and the minister clearly—now stop trying to mislead the House.

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister will get it on second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. I would just like to remind the members that this is not a question and answer period.

Mr. Philip: The problem of over taxation or double taxation which was discussed time and again by condominium owners who appeared before the Kealey commission was ignored by that commission, except for one paragraph that said words to the effect that there's very little that we can do about it.

Now the minister adds injury to insult. After years of doing nothing to protect condominium owners or to service them, he sets up Condominium Ontario, and to this he adds an extra tax—or fee or whatever you want to call it, but it is an extra tax on condominium owners of $5 to $10 a year.

Then he admits to me in the House when he first gives his statement regarding the bill that it is really a kind of open-ended thing and it might go a lot higher than that.

[8:45]

Those who have suffered from double taxation get one additional tax added to them. Not only that, but he doesn't even provide for the kind of seed money which most responsible governments provide for new projects.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Whoever said he was responsible.

Mr. Philip: One would even think at least, if he were trying to be responsible, he would provide for the cost of operation for the first two or three years of Condominium Ontario. He fails to do that. Not only has the minister not listened to condominium owners on major issues, but after all of the study, and after all of the expense of the Kealey commission, he still doesn't even understand some of the simplest problems of condominium owners.

In clause-by-clause debate in October, we will be pointing out many of these faults. Let me just provide one example of this kind of problem.

In section 37 of the bill, regarding the reserve fund, the minister talks about five per cent of the amount required for the contributions to the common expenses exclusive of the reserve fund—five per cent. Anyone who has been involved with condominiums knows five per cent is a paltry amount. While the principle of a reserve fund which is not refundable on the sale of a unit is a good principle, five per cent is simply a sop to the developer. The developer will see five per cent as a maximum and that is what he will pay.

In fact, those people who have been involved with condominiums will point out that as high as 15 per cent is a sensible amount in a deferred fund, and possibly another 15 per cent in a deferred maintenance fund. The minister's own staff person, I believe his name is Mr. Simpson, in a meeting with the Ontario Condominium Association, suggested eight per cent might be a reasonable amount; but five per cent is what is included in this bill.

If we go through it clause by clause, we see some of the tremendous impracticalities of the bill. I don't want to take up time on second reading to point out all of these, but we will be doing clause-by-clause examination and pointing them out. For example, the quorum the bill suggests and the quorum for bylaw changes is just unrealistic and unreasonable when you talk to condominium boards and directors. The minister knows that, because the members of the Ontario

Condominium Association in their meeting with him on Monday pointed these problems out to him. Yet we didn't see any change in his attitude. We will, of course, see considerable change in the clause-by-clause debate.

I think the best summary I could do on this bill would be to give a detailed summary of the initial comments of condominium owners. I would like to do that. I would like to read a letter which was written by Mrs. Monica Rouleau, the vice-president of the Etobicoke Condominium Association. She was not speaking only on her own behalf because I checked it out this evening on the telephone.

I read the letter to the president of the Etobicoke Condominium Association, Mr. Terry Littlefield. I said: "In fact, does this seem to represent the kinds of things you feel, and the Ontario Condominium Association felt when it had an opportunity to meet with the minister?" After I read that letter to him, Mr. Littlefield said: "Yes, that seems to express some of our gut reaction to some of the problems, although we pointed out many other problems to him as well."

I would just like to read into the record the views of one condominium owner. She is probably the one person who has done more than anyone else in building condominium associations in this province. Mrs. Rouleau writes in the Etobicoke Guardian, June 14,

"The new Condominium Act has finally reached the Ontario Legislature. It is more voluminous than the old act; 60 sections instead of 26 sections. But bigger is not necessarily better. Sure the new act is mainly directed towards future condominiums; the best new proposition probably being my very own recommendation which gained prolonged applause at the public hearings of the Kealey study group. From now on, developers have to hand over warranties as-built and as-built plans, to the elected owners' boards of directors on takeover from the developer. This hardly ever happened up until now and created endless hardships and problems to existing condominiums.

"Where I have trouble with the new act is that in spite of the public outcry at the public hearings, occupancy fees—that is, rent—until registration are still with us. This is one of the hottest issues, since the developers sometimes made an astonishing amount of money on top of purchase price by delaying registration through slow selling. Now developers have to take 'reasonable steps.'"

The words "reasonable steps" are in quotation marks. It's amazing how "reasonable" is used over and over and over again. I'm not a lawyer, but my legal friends tell me how hard it is to prove what is reasonable in a court of law. It's found over and over and over again in this bill, always in relation to what the developer must do. One wonders how those who are accusing the developer will ever collect under those kinds of circumstances in the legislation of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Lawlor: It's not confined to the lawyers. "Reasonable" is fairly pervasive. It's rather hard to find.

Mr. Ashe: I'm sure you fellows have more.

Mr. Philip: Getting back to the letter: "It's also hard to comprehend why the minister set the reserve fund at a minimum of five per cent, which is not sufficient, except to throw a bon-bon to the developer who now has to establish the fund before the owner takeover.

"What is really hard to take is that the block marketing of its units to investors is now possible by law. Nobody who has not lived in a condominium can appreciate the problems that absentee landlords cause. Blocks of rental units are totally detrimental to the condominium concept."

If I may digress from the letter for just a moment: As I listened to presentation after presentation before the Kealey commission, at least in the Toronto area, one condominium association after another brought up the whole problem of absentee landlords. Mr. Kealey at least tried to listen to that, but there's no reflection of that in the bill.

"The bill goes even farther. Developers have created a demand for rental units through overbuilding of condominiums. Let them rectify the market, but not at the cost of unmanageable condominiums.

"Existing condominiums had looked to the Kealey report and the new act for some relief from their manifold problems. Two issues are overshadowing everything else: the high property tax on condominiums for municipal services not rendered but paid double through maintenance fees, that is, snow removal, sewers, street maintenance and street lighting; and the request for low-interest government loans to rectify major structural deficiencies which we hope will now be taken care of by HUDAC, but which could drive condominiums built before 1977 into bankruptcy.

"A precedent to make this demand feasible was set by the Ontario Home Renewal Plan. The new Condominium Act is not relieving financial hardship; but it is adding to it. Instead of the government registrar we have pleaded for at the public hearings, Larry Grossman, Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, opted for a bureau, Condominium Ontario, which will be financed by condominium owners at $5 to $10 per unit annually, a small price to pay if it is efficient in what it has set out to do.

"But why add insult to injury and put the bureau in charge of setting up management courses? Property management firms realize good profit out of their condominium management; that's why they are popping up all over the place. Let them pay for their own courses. The government should have also complied with the condominium owners' request insisting that they are licensed."

That is the view of a condominium organizer, a person who has organized on behalf of condominium owners and somebody who was elected by the condominium owners' associations in the borough of Etobicoke, consisting roughly of four ridings in this city.

The minister has failed to deal with the basic problems of condominium owners. We accept that a good many sections of this bill are valuable. I was particularly pleased to see section 60, which will deal with the whole problem of the way in which certain people can get around condominium conversion bylaws in converting rental buildings to condominiums without going through the proper channels which the municipalities have decided are appropriate. There are other sections of this bill which also make a lot of sense.

We look forward to the clause-by-clause consideration. Members of this caucus will be meeting, as has been requested, with not only members of the Ontario Condominium Association, but also other condominium groups, throughout the summer, and I look forward to being part of the justice committee that will be debating this bill clause by clause in the first two weeks in October.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm going to be brief, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the bill. The reason I welcome it is the opportunity to fully debate all of the bill in conjunction with those who have been eagerly awaiting the amended legislation. I'm not going to go into it clause by clause as some appear to have done. I don't think it comes to grips with many of the problems of the condominium people as they are evidenced in my riding, but then I hope that in committee I will be able to deal with the aspects of the problems which are not very carefully considered in this legislation.

I suppose one of the major problems in my riding is people having to deal with latent defects in the building, and I don't see the warranty program covering those. As far as HUDAC are concerned, they don't go into the history of the person who has built shoddily; they simply take everybody in. I'm astounded that this could go on. So I have no such hope for the HUDAC kind of operation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There was a lot of support from the parties to that.

Mr. Makarchuk: They're not doing a good job, Larry.

Mrs. Campbell: I hope we will be able to bring forward into that committee the people with the stories to tell so that the minister may have an opportunity to hear at first hand, not just the people whom he regards as partisan, but also those people—who are probably partisan but not politically partisan—who wish to plead their cause before an all-party committee of this Legislature.

When we have these hearings, I hope we will make provision for the numbers that I expect will attend to express themselves, and that we will have adequate space for such hearings, because I expect that we will have many people, very expert as a result of their experience with the animal, who can help to bring enlightenment to this legislation.

I really believe that when the bill comes out of committee it may be a very vastly different bill. I hope it is. I think that all legislation can stand improvement, but this bill is a difficult one. I know the minister has sincerely tried to meet some of the problems which have surfaced, but I have to say with regret that in my view he hasn't addressed himself in depth to many of the issues which are burning throughout the ridings of this province.

[9:00]

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, I believe this is called the Condominium Act. I remember on a previous occasion seeing a similar bill. Down through the years, we have had numerous variations on the theme, and they are always a kind of degradation. This is quite an improvement on the whole, if I may say so from a purely quixotic legal point of view, of course.

I remember when the first act was brought into this House. The salient feature of it remains as certain remarks made by the erstwhile member of this assembly, Mr. Vernon Singer, Mr. Singer said then, and he said three years later, that as a practising lawyer he would not accept a real estate transaction having anything to do with condominiums in his office. He felt the possibilities of a lawsuit against him for some kind of remote failure were diverse and numerous. They still are.

The legislation is covering one or two in the process. I mean the pitfalls had to do with the entrance into the contract. There was no protection. I have one in my office at the moment; and it is not all that different, you know. That condominium is not registered, and those people are going to have to move in very shortly. I don't expect it will be registered before they do move in. How that is done, don't ask me. I am only the lawyer on the deal.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What are their names, Pat?

Mr. Lawlor: I am told, "There is no point in looking at the title to see whether the people who are pretending to sell it are the owners and have the right to sell it under the terms and conditions under which they might do so because it is not registered yet." So we sit and wait and twiddle our thumbs until this is done.

The minister does have some Planning Act provisions in this. Whether he will take as his area of responsibility to any degree speeding up that process, et cetera, and establishing title before people get into occupancy and possession, I am not sure. We will, no doubt, find out in committee the extent and ambit he deems to be his authority in this particular regard.

Then, of course, we have the whole plethora upon us. No wonder people didn't want to buy condominiums; as they became more and more acquainted with them they found the snares and the mare's nest of difficulties were labyrinthine and manifold, so that neither the legal profession nor the individuals who got caught in the snare—and the amazing thing is there were really on the whole so few people who were so pilloried and became disgruntled as a result; but there have been enough to bring about the legislation before us tonight, because the gaps and the traps were far too numerous and too many individuals were shying away.

I don't know what the situation is at the moment, but six months ago you could not sell a condominium. Somebody who owned a condominium could not resell it in Etobicoke. The prices of condominium units are falling all over the place for precisely that reason.

I don't know if what my colleague has said is part of your legislation or not, except you do make mention of the model building code which falls, of course, within your jurisdiction. In any event, it wasn't long ago when people came to see me on constituency business largely from Mississauga. I haven't too many condominiums in my own area.

I do half of what Kennedy is supposed to be doing anyway in this particular regard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Half as well.

Mr. Lawlor: They had moved in and were on, I think, the second or third floor. The condominium developer had seen fit to establish both showers and sauna bath on the first floor just below them, without making any provision for air conditioning or for cooling down the premises. So there wafted up, in warm weather and in cold, innumerable stinks, smells, odours of sanctity and otherwise, and an enormous temperature. They went all that winter with their windows wide open in the hope of receiving a breath of fresh air.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Look at their heating bill; it was practically nothing.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, this construction problem and the business of the frippery and corner-cutting with respect to developers in this area is commonplace, where on the seventh floor of a condominium, you can hear the fullest extent of the love whispers being consummated on the beds seven floors below. This is commonplace and you haven't made any adequate provision for that particular kind of thing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will add an amendment.

Mr. Breithaupt: No extra charge.

Mr. Kerrio: Save you money. You don't have to buy a TV.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The province of Ontario has no place in the bedrooms of condominiums.

Mr. Lawlor: And so Mr. Singer felt that he would shy clear of this and forfeit the little largesse he made from time to time on the side. I suppose living out there today in burgeoning circumstances—I haven't seen the beggar since he left—he still doesn't take condominium deals, and I suppose we can all commiserate with him and say, "Starve to death, you wretch, but keep your fingers clean."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He's probably acting for the developers now. He acts for the builders now. It's easier.

Mr. Lawlor: Now I quite blindly, despite the lack of legislation, have gone forward with those deals and I haven't yet been sued once. I just pray while I do them and close my eyes. After a few years everything washes away—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And the liability insurance is always there.

Mr. Lawlor: And the liability insurance remains if I can only remember the company I had it with.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But I have to pay for yours. I don't like paying for yours. We all paid it together.

Mr. Lawlor: You haven't had to pay a penny yet. Hold on to your hat. It may come any day, as you know. The only thing that counts, is what you do to this particular profession, and it comes up 10 years later invariably, after you have completely forgotten how sinful you were in the past.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our executors can worry about it.

Mr. Lawlor: Now you see written in the covenants here, covenants with a vendor to take all reasonable steps to register a declaration. You remember the old days when they wouldn't register the darn things. They would sit and sit for 18 months, 24 months. Why? They were pulling in the rental fee.

Let me tell the House, incidentally, that occupancy fee in the legislation ought to be included in the declaration; the declaratory statement that was set up that is given to a purchaser and which, on the occasion in question, he may withdraw from. He has 10 days after that statement is delivered to pull out of the deal. By the way, that statement is delivered quite far on. He may be in occupancy for a very long time before the time for that statement comes into fruition, and at that particular time he may pull out of the deal.

It seems to me that the statement should say precisely what that occupancy fee is, in advance of his moving in so he knows where he stands. The minister has provided for a number of other things but not that. I think it's an oversight. I think the minister should get it in there, switch it over I mean.

There was nothing more irritating, and still today, there is nothing more irritating for people who have, for the first time in their lives, been able to get out of an apartment which they didn't like—many people don't—and into their own dwelling, and that's what a condominium is deemed to be, and begin the long, hard, tortuous process of paying for the thing so at the end of the day they are fee simple owners with something garnered, some capitalization made, something that as they get older they could perhaps sell; in any event, not just giving it away in exorbitant rentals such as the minister is advocating by his present purblind policies of seeking to lift the rental restrictions as they are at present. The minister knows there would be a ripoff immediately if that were done. The whole society is one vast, greedy ripoff. He subsidizes it and bows his head. Well, bow it in shame, my friend.

I suppose we will learn the truth tomorrow morning. The brave bulls will be in the arena and we will find out where the minister stands on that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Have I ever let you down before?

Mr. Lawlor: In any event, they perpetuated the situation, and still do, where people do not get into the process of paying off the principal and becoming owners, with the pride of ownership in this particular regard, but are extended indefinitely on the basis of the way the system works at present.

Nothing could be more regressive and defeatist with respect to the condominium concept. Listen, it's a profoundly socialist concept. It is the one form of ownership that recognizes community, that people share, and that when they become owners of property they take an enormous responsibility along with them. People who want to live in blank houses and throw no stones, those who want to live in isolation from other human beings, which is the single-family concept—it's the way I live; so I won't play it down, although I do walk across the fence once in a while and say hello to the guy next door.

In condominiums there is the very concept of having to share accommodation in close proximity to other human beings and to take the responsibility of the running of it. I often say to people, "Are you mentally equipped to handle it? Has your consciousness been raised sufficiently to recognize that there is a dimension of sociability in human life and we don't all live as atomic units in dire isolation from one another?"

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's tough to handle socialism.

Mr. Lawlor: "If you are a child of this society, then don't move into a condominium. Stay home. Stay somewhere else."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Stay out of socialism.

Mr. Lawlor: "But if you are a vital, personable human being, desirous of and enjoying the presence of others, and having a certain maturity in terms of openness—which is precisely the definition of maturity—then by all means, it will be an invigorating experience. But you will have to play a role on the directorate; you will have to attend the meetings. It's all very demanding and, like most demanding things in life, it's very satisfying if you do it well."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Only you and I could make it, Pat.

Mr. Lawlor: As the concept declines, because there isn't the ethos, there isn't the spirit in this society to bind people together in his kind of union, they do it perforce; they do it without understanding the philosophy involved in the condominium concept. Again, despite the extent that we move to restructure it and make it more easy to accommodate, a long process of education is necessary in this particular field. The hard burdens involved in getting along inside that building, and with the common expenses and the common space to be enjoyed, offer a vision of possibly a new society.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If it's socialism, I am withdrawing the bill.

Mr. Lawlor: What was that?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I think the minister is making a joke.

Mr. Philip: Did Sid Handleman get to him?

Mr. Lawlor: I'm afraid the minister is going to have to withdraw the bill, Mr. Speaker. It makes me feel badly, but if he doesn't know the colour of the beast's eyes—I mean the beast he spends all his time talking about—and shows so little understanding.

Ms. Gigantes: Bring in a private member's bill.

Mr. Philip: Is the rent minister going to succumb to Mr. Handleman?

Mr. Lawlor: We've been destroying legislation like that for hours every day here. Practically every piece of legislation in the contemporary world is quasi-socialist, if not otherwise. How could it be otherwise?

Mr. Breithaupt: Why don't you pass this bill quickly and prove it?

Mr. Lawlor: If we happen to be in the van of mankind, with the most imaginative concepts as to human development, what could you expect? If you want to move an inch, we're already there; we have been there before—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You are lucky it is me tonight.

[9:15]

Mr. Lawlor: Our difficulty is we are always moving on too quickly. Maybe we should dynamically stand still for a moment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, really, I'm going to use that one.

Mr. Lawlor: Those are a couple of the faults which have been mentioned here. As for the covenant for the vendor to take all reasonable steps to sell the other residential units, that's a great thought. The situation continues and the legislation goes some degree to perpetuating it, although the bill modifies it by way of forcing the lease situation.

It became a scandal. There were a number of people who bought on the understanding their co-owners would be on a parity with themselves and that they would enjoy this particular form of co-determination and co-operation. Then they found that many of their neighbours, good fellows and good ladies as they may be, did not participate in the same concept of the living relationships that were assumed.

The condominium owner, as a pure, free-enterprising spirit, had bought up at depressed prices a number of condominium units, filled them up with whoever he could get in there, enjoyed the rental and thumbed his nose at the whole obligation concept that is behind it. In other words, he destroyed the concept root and branch.

One couldn't expect people who were in the position of the lessees to regard it any differently than any other apartment house, from which the sooner they could move out, the better. They took no interest and no responsibility. As a matter of fact, the whole attitude worked diametrically opposite to the basic concepts. We will see just how far the modification of that position goes when we get into committee in this particular regard.

We have mentioned the business of registrable deed and I think we can move on from there. The title disclosure provisions for purchasers and the possibility of the cancellation of the contract within a reasonable time and after second thoughts, I can't help but find valuable and commendable.

The business of setting up a trust fund of those purchase moneys and holding them, again on certain terms and conditions under the legislation, gives a protection to the purchaser which he hasn't previously enjoyed. That is very necessary. As to the business of giving some protection with respect to liens on the property, I think of two different kinds of liens. On the one hand, there is the condominium owner who has repairs done to his own personal premises and in the past has not paid his bills. Then along comes a repairman who has done this work and hasn't got paid, and slaps a lien on the whole building. The business of making provision for that kind of thing, it seems, is allocated to the particular owner.

In terms of wider liens, there is a provision giving the condominium corporation some kind of power and force whereby it can recoup from that owner his own personal and specific account for which the condominium corporation has become responsible in one way or another.

The business of being able, in effect, to atorn the lessee with respect to the rents which the absentee condominium owner is collecting without paying his part of the common expenses and saying, "No, you can't continue to do that; we will move in on that lease and take over the moneys forthcoming," is a perfectly sensible provision.

There are a number of these things in the legislation which win one's assent. Nevertheless, there are a wide number of these, some of which I have pointed out, which are not yet picked up into the legislation. Why the minister has failed in these areas to adopt the full provisions extended to him under that study that has been made by the condominium people themselves and of which we've been well aware for two or three years now, quite puzzles me. I would think that as we get into committee there might just be a few of your loopholes to be closed up, or at least more tightly bound than what you at present choose to do.

The only other thing I want to mention is under section 39, the modifications of the common elements. In the case of a fire or in the case of major repairs having to be done, 80 per cent of the individuals may agree upon going forward with the reparation of the premises et cetera. But if there's somebody who dissents from doing so, your legislation makes it obligatory upon the others to buy him out. Isn't that quite a burden to impose upon the other owners because you get one fellow or maybe a couple of people? Of course, the more there are, the more difficult it becomes. The fund that has to be collected from the other owners might be at that stage quite considerable and most of them might find themselves financially quite unable to do that. I wonder if that concept has been thought through as to what the full impact of it might be.

In some instances, this would be the very thing that a disgruntled condominium owner would be waiting for. What a glorious opportunity to unload and to force his particular unit off on to others who desire to retain the premises and to rebuild them as a living accommodation. Do you not build a position of advantage which is undeserved in that context?

This is complicated legislation. There's a wide diversity of notions involved here. Some of the sections are, in my opinion, quite intricate, particularly with respect to the exceptions written in. It will require, I think, rather detailed study and it won't be done overnight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will attempt to be brief, notwithstanding I'll probably fail in that attempt.

Mr. McClellan: The House leader wants you to be brief.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We wanted you to be brief too, but it didn't make any difference.

Mr. Makarchuk: He didn't speak.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First, we have to say that we did not adopt the posture recommended—

Mr. Lawlor: I wasn't elected to be brief, I was elected to be long. ,

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —by the member for Lakeshore of dynamically standing still. Rather, we chose to dynamically move forward, as is always the custom over here. That being the case, we did move—

Mr. Lawlor: What you do is statically move forward.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —very expeditiously from the tabling of the Kealey condominium study group report. Members of the third party predicted I would not table that last fall before the House rose, but I did, in accordance with my commitment given last fall. I might point out we did move expeditiously in spite of the fact that members of the third party specifically—

Mr. Warner: Are you kidding? A wounded turtle moves faster.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —complained that we were moving too quickly. We weren't allowing enough time, they said, for further study—

Mr. Philip: We predicted you would table it the last day and you did.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —for further input, further communication, before we moved to legislation. Instead, we opted to move rather quickly.

I'm happy to say that the people who went to work in my ministry did a very fine job—an enormous job, as a matter of fact, starting at the end of January. This was the period of time we allowed municipalities and others to respond to the study group report. Starting from January 31, they moved under the guidance and expertise of two of my most able staff members whom I do want to mention—Mr. Robert Simpson, Bob Simpson, who's been mentioned earlier here tonight—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Don't blame him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —executive director of our business practices branch and Irv Kumer, senior counsel in that division. Together they worked hard and long to get a bill in shape early enough to have it presented here at the end of May. It was indeed a monumental task, and it was made more so by the fact that rather than proceed in a vacuum, we mailed out copies of the report of the Ontario Residential Condominium Study Group to each and every condominium corporation in this province. We sent a copy to all the municipalities in this province.

We used all the input we got through that extraordinary communications process to move towards the legislation we have before us today. I might say that in furtherance of that process of dialogue in co-operation, we did as promised: make all the responses we got available to both opposition parties so they might be in a position to deal with this legislation both now and in October.

We have dealt with 80 of the 126 recommendations of the Kealey report. All but seven have been dealt with and adopted in this legislation, either directly or co-laterally. All but seven of them are dealt with here. Some of the seven others, we have made clear, we might be dealing with at a later time, whether it's an amendment to the Building Code Act or others. I made clear right from the start that, of course, this ministry could only deal with those things which came under our jurisdiction. We cannot, of course, deal with problems concerning alleged double taxation on condominium owners—

Ms. Gigantes: Alleged?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —with some of the other problems that have been pointed out with the planning process. But we have as we've moved towards this legislation, had Messrs. Kumer and Simpson working with representatives of the other ministries involved, TEIGA and Housing to name two, in order that they may be well under way along the road to bringing in their legislation as early a time as possible.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What does that mean? Does that mean before October?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have heard the reservations expressed by the member for Carleton East and the member for Etobicoke, with regard to our concept of Condominium Ontario. I might say that I'm very proud of that recommendation. We think that any board, or organization that operates at the grass roots level of the problems, with 50 per cent participation by the people who are directly affected, is a heck of a better mechanism, than one attempted to be run by a single person or organization based at Queen's Park in Toronto.

Mr. Philip: Why not 90 per cent then? That makes it 30 per cent better.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We just don't think that sort of structure can do it as effectively as the structure close to the people, by the people, and right out there—

Mr. McClellan: Like HUDAC. HUDAC for the people. HUDAC by the people.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in fact, with a direct contribution made by the persons involved.

Mr. Philip: What have you got against people running their own organization if they're paying for it?

Ms. Gigantes: Are the developers paying for the cost?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has been suggested by, I think, the member for Etobicoke, that we are asking condominium unit owners to pay for training the managers. Of course, that is just not so. We are not asking them to pay for the training. There is not a word in anything we've said—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Oh, come on. Read your own legislation.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —that calls for the training of property managers.

Mr. Philip: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. M. N. Davison: You haven't even read the bill.

Mr. Ruston: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Speaker: What's your point of privilege?

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, if the minister will read section 57, subsection 3(d), he'll find it says "assisting in the formulation and the conduct of educational courses for property management." I don't know how you assist without assistance in the form of money.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What privilege contained in standing orders is the honourable member hanging his hat on?

Mr. Breithaupt: He doesn't want the minister to mislead the House.

Mr. Philip: The minister alleged earlier, when you were not in the chair, that I could not point out the section in which condominium owners are paying for the professional development and upgrading of management corporations. He referred to that same item just now. I'm just pointing out to the minister that perhaps he should read his own bill and try to understand it.

Mr. Swart: Good point.

Ms. Gigantes: Read your bill.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister may be inaccurate in the eyes of the member for Etobicoke—

Mr. Martel: Deliberately.

Mr. Speaker: —but I see no privilege of any member that has been abrogated. The honourable minister may continue.

Mr. Philip: I made my point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to debate this clause by clause, although I do want to clear it up so that condominium unit owners throughout the province will not think they are being asked, or required, to pay for something that they are not being asked to pay for.

Ms. Gigantes: That's right there in your bill.

Mr. Warner: They know who their defenders are.

Mr. McClellan: Dispense.

Mr. Martel: I thought you weren't going to clause by clause. Speak to the principle.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It says specifically that the objectives of the corporation are extended to include, "(d) assisting in the formulation and conduct of educational courses for property management." Of course, we have to arrange, we think, to permit those people who own units to be able to provide assistance, resources, explain some of the problems they are having to the people who are participating in those property management courses. There is not a word in here that says those courses shall be run by, paid for or funded by Condominium Ontario or anyone else.

[9:30]

Mr. M. N. Davison: Will you cover the cost?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We want to make it clear that the objects of that corporation must be such as to permit the members of Condominium Ontario to participate in any programs in which they wish to participate in order that they may properly lend their expertise and experience to property managers.

Mr. Philip: And staff time costs nothing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I listened to the member for Etobicoke also trying to suggest that a minimal fee of $5 or so was ridiculous and unfair to unit owners. He then went on, two moments later, to suggest that a much larger payment, the five per cent payment to the reserve fund paid by those same condominium unit owners, was far too small. He wanted that reserve fund to have a much higher minimum than five per cent. He wanted 15 per cent.

Mr. Philip: For their own property.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are talking about much larger dollars there. In one fell swoop, he moves from five per cent to 15 per cent and yet two minutes earlier he was complaining about a concept which calls for condominium unit owners to pay not five or 15 per cent of the common elements expenses but $5.

Mr. Philip: One is a tax while the other is paying into your own pocket. Why don't you understand your own bill?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It's not $5 per month or per day that we're talking about, we are talking about, would you believe, $5 per unit per year.

Mr. Philip: We're talking about more than that. You said so in this House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He complains about that figure but he has no problem moving our five per cent payment into the reserve fund to 15 per cent.

Mr. Ashe: We know that they're big spenders over there.

Ms. Gigantes: The sands are shifting under your feet. You had better be careful.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I also want to make it clear that in that section at all times whatever fee is levied will require the approval of the ministry, so that there will be some direct control over the amount of money that the condominium unit owners themselves choose to charge themselves and others.

I do feel obliged to deal with one sensitive point at this particular time. The member for Etobicoke has purported to speak for all condominium unit owners when he read a letter by Monica Rouleau, purporting that that was very representative of a lot of people. I don't want to suggest that it is or isn't. I just want to make the record clear that the member for Etobicoke was not able to rise in his place and read a letter written by or signed by those other people as individuals or as a group with whom Monica Rouleau sits on the Federation of Ontario Condominium Association.

Specifically, the single letter written by a single member of the condominium federation is in simple terms representative of her own view on that board. She is quite entitled to that point of view. To get the record clear, I invite the member to speak to the condominium federation and to rise in his place at a later time and report as to whether the condominium federation supports the concept of Condominium Ontario.

Ms. Gigantes: You better be careful.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In reporting to this House my latest dialogue with them, as faithfully as the member has reported my latest dialogue with those same people through Monica, I can tell members that as of last Monday they remained as supportive of the concept of Condominium Ontario as they were when we began the process of dialogue with them last January.

Mr. Martel: You will never get the bill through.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To get the record clear, he has correctly reported the reaction of one member of that group, Monica Rouleau.

Mr. Philip: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order, and the honourable member knows that.

Mr. Philip: On a point of privilege: I didn't report one member. I reported two. There were only five who met with you. How many more do you want me to report?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Excuse me, I want to correct the record. The member for Etobicoke claims to be representing two members of that board, and that's quite all right.

Mr. Warner: Is this a filibuster?

Mr. Philip: How many met with you?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member asks how many met with us, I think it was 10 or 11.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you stick to the bill?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: More important than the 10 or 11, as opposed to your two, is that I don't want to engage in a dialogue which undermines the unanimity and the single point of view presented by that very effective, responsible and well run condominium federation.

Mr. Philip: I have a good report of what was said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a decently run, effective organization and we have had nothing but co-operation from them.

Mr. Warner: You sound jealous.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Etobicoke has come here this evening and reported parts of our dialogue last week. He reports, for example, no change in my attitude regarding the quorum as a result of a meeting we had last Monday.

Mr. McClellan: We are very sensitive tonight, aren't we?

Ms. Gigantes: He is like a prickly bear.

Mr. Warner: Did you eat in the members' dining room tonight?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not going to undermine the work of the condominium federation by telling the House what some of the other members of that group might have said, except to say quite honestly, yes, that group has some problems with the quorum. I think it is also fair to say that they came and listened quite reasonably, as they always have, to the point of view that we had. They will tell honourable members that I agreed to listen further to the presentations they had made and to consider what they said last Monday. Indeed, they well understood the point I was making.

The point I was making, I might say, reflects very much the remarks of the member for Lakeshore, because the point I made was that while our quorum requirement requires 50 per cent in person or by proxy—and I wanted to keep it relatively high—the reason for my wanting to keep it relatively high at 50 per cent was to encourage as many people as possible, with the instigation of their individual condominium corporations and Condo Ontario, to take an interest and get involved so they would have that understanding and knowledge which the member for Lakeshore quite properly pointed out is so fundamental to living in and running and being a part of a condominium project.

I would like to let Condo Ontario and the condominium corporations work with the new legislation, and I would encourage them to do what a lot of them have been doing very effectively; that is to knock on the doors and say, "Come out to the meeting; and if you won't come out to the meeting, will you sign a proxy? At least understand that there is something important happening at this meeting next Tuesday night here in our condominium project."

If we reduce it below 50 per cent, then obviously it becomes easier to get a quorum and less pressure is needed to get at those doors and force people to get involved who, quite frankly, are lazy and reluctant in many instances to get involved.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What a patronizing attitude!

Mr. Warner: Name names.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the honourable minister will address his remarks to the chair, he may find himself in less difficulty.

Mr. McClellan: He's in a lot of difficulty.

Ms. Gigantes: He should also address the bill.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With respect, I suspect you are mistaken, Mr. Speaker, but I will give it a try anyway.

Mr. Hall: You are not in Stratford.

Mr. Nixon: You really are arrogant.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, I think it is fundamental that everything we do should not simply be an attempt to pull everything in and say we can solve it all by legislation, but to draw legislation which encourages participation out in the condominium corporations.

Mr. Warner: You can't solve anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To draw the bottom line on that dialogue I had with the federation, I want to say that I have some reservations about it—of course I do—and I do want to think some more about it, as I hope the condominium federation is thinking more about its point of view, and see if we can't resolve this in the most satisfactory fashion.

Mr. Warner: You know they want beer in the ballpark.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, quite honestly, I do not want to get in a game of bidding off who said what at our meetings with the condo federation. They have been most constructive, most helpful and most supportive. We look forward to receiving any reservations they have now, or will have over the months between now and October, and exchanging our points of view.

I want to confirm that while I obviously disagree with the remarks made by the one or two members quoted by the member for Etobicoke, fundamentally I agree with a lot they are saying; and a lot of what they are saying is reflected in this legislation, which in turn reflects 73 of the 126 recommendations made by the Darwin Kealey condominium study group.

Mr. McClellan: Is that all?

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing administration of justice committee.

House in committee of the whole.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 83, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Warner moves that section 5(5) of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, as set out in section 1(1) of the bill, be amended by striking out the words "or any other person" in line five and inserting after the word "council" in line six the words "provided he continues to be a member of the council," so that the subsection shall read: "At the first meeting of the metropolitan council and each year after a regular election at which a quorum is present, the metropolitan council shall organize as a council and elect as chairman one of the members of the metropolitan council to hold office for the term of the council provided he continues to be a member of the council and until his successor is appointed or elected in accordance with this act."

Mr. Warner: I spoke earlier during the second reading of Bill 83 and made my remarks, I thought, quite clear as to my concerns about the democratic principle of having each politician elected by the people. Obviously, there is disagreement on that principle from the other two parties.

Mr. Hall: Call a press conference.

Mr. Warner: They're not in favour of that, so—

Interjections.

Mrs. Campbell: That's not true and you know it.

Mr. Hall: You know all about it.

Mr. Warner: —my motion this evening will fail.

Mr. Martel: I know how you like to have it both ways.

Mr. Hall: You know better than that, Elie.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: I know how you like to have it both ways.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martel: All things to everybody.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Warner: What makes it particularly sad in this case, of course—

Mr. Epp: It's a misrepresentation of the situation.

Mr. Warner: —is that the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) stood here in the House just a few days ago and told us that we will not have—

Mr. Hall: You don't know what went on.

Mr. McClellan: We all know what went on.

Mr. Warner: —the legislation in relation to the Robarts report until after this fall's election. That means that the election of 1978—I can address my remarks to the chair and ignore the remarks of those other members, Mr. Chairman. I'm quite prepared to do that.

Mr. Hall: Terrific.

Mrs. Campbell: Good.

Mr. Warner: So the election of 1978 will be fought on precisely the same basis as the preceding elections and we will not get an opportunity to make whatever amendments to the electoral process are deemed to be necessary or proper until following the 1978 municipal election.

Therefore, I think it's particularly important that when we do have one opportunity here, a golden opportunity in front of us, to bring a measure of democratic principle to the forefront we should take advantage of that opportunity, because we don't know when we're going to get the next opportunity at it.

Therefore, I would urge the members of the assembly to think carefully about supporting my amendment so that in the 1978 election we will ensure that the chairman of Metro Toronto, the second most powerful position in the province of Ontario, is someone who will be elected by the voters and not appointed.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for the support of all members of the House on this motion.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Chairman, it's obvious from the comments I and my colleagues made in response to Bill 81 that we will not be voting with the party to my left on this amendment. As you will recall, it was this party that suggested the change should be made and the New Democratic Party at that time thought it was a good idea.

Mr. Warner: But you changed your mind.

Mr. Epp: But we clearly indicated that we should not be making it at this time because this was essentially a housekeeping bill, because what was being recommended was a major amendment, and that we would be bringing in an amendment to have the chairman elected—

Mr. Warner: When?

Mr. Epp: —a principle we highly endorse, at the time that we deal with the government's response to the Robarts report.

Mr. Warner: When's that going to be?

Mr. Epp: The member for Scarborough—Ellesmere is asking me to be a soothsayer or some kind of accurate prophet and—

Mr. Warner: You've got a lot of faith in Darcy.

Mr. Epp: —I don't intend to play that game, Mr. Chairman. Although we agree with the principle we feel that this is not the time to do it.

You will recall, as I pointed out only a few days ago, how the critic for intergovernmental affairs for the New Democratic Party also clearly indicated that this was not the time to do it and that there is no appropriate way to do it here in the bill. So they have a spokesman who thoroughly agrees with us.

[9:45]

I just want to point out two things: I wonder who is speaking for Metro Toronto, because I have two amendments before me which are the same with respect to part 1 of Bill 83. One comes from the intergovernmental affairs critic, Mr. Swart, and the other comes from Mr. Warner. I'm just wondering if the real metropolitan critic would stand up and let himself be heard. Maybe he has, I'm not sure.

Mr. Ashe: Play musical chairs.

Mr. Epp: It's a little confusing when you get the same amendment from two people within the same party with different names.

Mr. Nixon: That's a very good point.

Mr. Epp: We will vote against this bill, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, we know that.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, let's do it now.

Mr. Epp: We do, however, agree with the principle that it should be changed and at the appropriate time we will produce our own amendment.

Mr. Martel: We'll support it.

Mr. Kerrio: That's enough reason, Elie. That's plenty of reason.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I would just inform the member for Waterloo North that we have more than one person from Metro Toronto so, therefore, we'll have more than one speaker on this bill.

Mr. Epp: Have you got some more amendments? What is your justification?

Mr. Nixon: Since you know you have only two colleagues left to listen to you.

Mr. Swart: We have one person who may be speaking on the principle but another from Toronto who may have real concern about this.

I'm not going to put forth the argument again in support of the principle of this amendment. They've been put forward clearly and persuasively and indisputably by my colleagues in this party. The reasons why regional chairmen should be elected, whether they're in Metro or whether they're in any of the other regions, all comes down to the whole question of democracy and accountability.

We won't go into that in detail. We'll just say that after having gone over that issue at least 10 times on the 10 bills that we've had before us, if the members opposite and the members to the right haven't changed their minds, they're not going to do it if we go over this once again. I know the Tories are not going to change their minds because they don't believe in the basic principle of electing a regional chairman.

I quote from the whip, the member for Mississauga (Mr. Gregory), when he was speaking on Tuesday night relative to this issue of election of the regional chairmen. He made these comments: "I would support pre-election for most elected offices. I do find, though, when you're talking about chairmen of regions, I think it more important that the proper man for the proper job be elected." To paraphrase that, I guess, you could correctly state that regional chairmen are just too important to leave to the electorate to decide who those chairmen shall be. I don't think that's an unfair paraphrasing of that.

In fact, I would think the party across doesn't even trust the councils as well. The member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), made the comment in this House when he was speaking to the election of the regional chairmen that the amendment which we had before us would make it possible for the mayor of a major municipality to be the chairman. He said this: "Yet if you look again at this particular amendment, what it says in theory—and I appreciate it may not happen in practice—but it can happen that the mayor of Oshawa, for example, could end up being the regional chairman of Durham, or the mayor of Pickering or the mayor of whatever."

Once again, he doesn't feel that the regional councillors should have the right to determine who might be their chairman. He doesn't feel they have good enough judgement to decide who should be picked as the chairman of the region. So there's not a great deal of point, I think, in arguing again with the members across the House on this issue.

The members to my right, if we can believe what they have said, don't need to be persuaded. They say they are ready for it. We know that back in 1973, I think it was, when Hamilton-Wentworth was formed, they moved a motion then that the regional chairman be selected from among the elected people in the region. In the program that they have just recently put out for the restructuring of Toronto, a main clause is that the Metro chairman shall be selected from among the elected people in Metro.

Mr. Epp: And that's where you got the idea.

Mr. Swart: If my friend thinks we got the idea from that, it just doesn't bother me a bit. All I say to the Liberals this evening is, support your own idea. If it was the Liberal Party's idea a month ago or two months ago that the chairman of Metro should be elected—

Mr. Martel: Try voting for it.

Mr. Swart: —then, when they have the opportunity, I suggest that perhaps they should vote for it.

Mr. Kerrio: When you support us, Mel, we begin to wonder.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I could quote at great length from Hansard in which the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) has stated that they support the election of regional chairmen; that's a very strong principle with his party.

Mr. Nixon: When he was speaking, you said he was out of order.

Mrs. Campbell: Exactly.

Mr. Swart: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk also said it is a very strong principle.

Mr. Epp: I notice you're not quoting yourself in that speech.

Mr. Swart: But they are not going to vote for it, even though they have moved amendments for it in the past and even though they have consistently stated that as a principle. When they get the opportunity to vote for the election of the chairman, they are not going to vote for it.

There are just two points I want to make about the election of the Metro chairman which should be made in addition to the points which were made about the others.

First of all, of course, it is the largest of all the regional governments. Metro Toronto spent something like $361 million in 1974 and the expenditures of Metro are now up to close to $500 million. They spent far more than all of the boroughs within Metro and yet the regional chairman is not a person who is elected by the public.

The second point I want to make, and I want to make this point very strongly, I say to the member for Waterloo North, is that there is no assurance whatsoever that we are going to have any bill before us with regard to Metro Toronto or any other regional government. It is nonsense to say that we are going to move an amendment or support an amendment when the bill comes before us for the changes in Metro Toronto, because the bill may never come.

The Liberals have the opportunity right at this point, if they mean it, to vote for the election and, because we have more members on this side, to bring about the election of the chairman in Metro Toronto.

We know the Tories, those people across from us, are not going to come with us on this issue.

An hon. member: They don't believe in democracy.

Mr. Swart: They think the position of Metro chairman is too important to leave to the people to decide who shall be the chairman of Metro. But to those on my right I say, if they believe in it—they don't have any Liberal colleague now as chairman of Metro Toronto that they have to protect, as they do across the way—

Mr. Rotenberg: What would you do if he were an NDP chairman.

Mrs. Campbell: You wouldn't appoint one.

Mr. Swart: My friends over there don't have any say on whether there is ever going to be a bill before them again to give the opportunity; they know they can't do it. Finally, I say to them that they have only one seat in Toronto at the present time—

Mr. Nixon: I am glad you said "at the present time."

Mr. Swart: It might not be a bad idea for their own purposes, even if they are not interested in the principle, to let the people of Metro believe that they support democracy so much that they would like to see the regional chairman in Metro Toronto elected rather than be accountable in no way to the electorate.

This is the final bill, the 11th amendment we are going to have before us. It means that they would have to vote only on about nine per cent of all the bills. Perhaps they can summon up the courage or whatever it takes on this bill to support it and show the people of this province that the most important municipal person in the whole province should be accountable back to the electorate.

Mrs. Campbell: I sit in this House and I listen to what people say but I have never heard so much self-righteousness and so much sheer guff in my life than I have in this speaker.

Mr. Rotenberg: Go get him, Margaret.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He makes Billy Graham look like an amateur.

Mr. McClellan: You are making Rotenberg very happy.

Mrs. Campbell: There is no question and there has never been any question that this party does support, has supported and will support the election of the chairman of Metro as of other regional chairmen.

Ms. Gigantes: But—

Mr. Swart: But not when it is before you.

Mrs. Campbell: Come on! The member really is tiresome because so often he sits there in his magnificent self-righteousness and doesn't pay any attention to what the people in this city believe.

Mr. Ashe: They are good spenders though.

Mrs. Campbell: The people, including the local municipalities, have asked that the matter of the major Metro bill be postponed because they can't be ready for it in this election. It seems to me that if the member was a responsible person and not just using these chambers for politicking—

Mr. Swart: Vote for what you believe.

Mrs. Campbell: —then he would certainly wait to permit the local municipalities to complete their submissions and their deliberations as a result of the very horrifying paper presented by the Treasurer of this province in his reference to the reform of the area of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and its component municipalities.

I wonder if we could possibly just take a look at the situation where municipalities I am certain will be making their submissions and will be proceeding to adjust in one form or another to the election process at Metro, whether we have direct election or whatever we end up with. It seems to me that while the principle is paramount in the minds of the Liberals and always has been, one should not make this change until such time as we are dealing with a substantive piece of legislation. Things have to fit together. I believe that local municipalities are very much a part of the democratic process, I really do. If they want time to complete their submissions, really it's not a denial of democracy if we say, "Fine, but get your submissions in soon." [10:00]

As far as I am concerned, I could very easily vote with the NDP tonight, but I would feel that I was posturing at this point. Surely we should get on with a housekeeping bill, clean up the odds and sods in this bill and then deal in a comprehensive manner with the Metropolitan Toronto Act which will be before us sometime in the fall or subsequently at least—yes, to the next election. It seems to me that's the time to make all of your changes and to ensure that you really know a member when you see one, as to who is going to be the new chairman of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

All I want to do is to try to bring some kind of reason into this debate as it pertains to our position. It may be that we have some other matters to contend with in reference to the election of the council itself before we come to the deliberation as to how the chairman will be elected.

Mr. McClellan: I'm sorry to see the member for St. George is leaving.

Mr. Ruston: That's understandable.

Mr. Nixon: There's nothing more to be said.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Lucky any of us are staying.

Mr. McClellan: The Liberal Party flips, the Liberal Party flops, the Liberal Party crawls on its belly like a reptile. One of these days the Liberal Party will summon up—

Mr. G. Taylor: What a mean comment. Unbecoming.

Mr. Rotenberg: That's unparliamentary.

Mr. McClellan: What would you know about being unparliamentary, Mr. Deputy Chairman?

Mr. Rotenberg: You dish it out but you can't take it.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Order. Would the honourable member make his remarks to the chair and in reference to the amendment before us?

Mr. Lane: Go out behind the barn and settle your differences.

Mr. Ruston: He wouldn't know how to behave.

Mr. McClellan: Absolutely, Mr. Chairman. I have in front of me a document entitled, Local Government in Metro Toronto—the Liberal Proposal, dated May 1978. On page six of the document it says, under V, "The Metro chairman would be elected by and from the members of Metro council." That is under the general rubric "under our system," and this is part of the Liberal Party's program for Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Epp: In response to the Robarts report.

Mr. Ruston: That's right, take it out of context.

Mr. McClellan: If the Liberal Party wishes to disclaim its policy it will be—

Mr. Ruston: Just be honest, that's all. You're misleading the House, you're reading it out of context.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Ms. Gigantes: Did you hear that?

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Chairman, would you ask that gentleman to withdraw that remark, please?

Mr. Chairman: I say to the member for Essex South that it's not within the orders of the House and I would ask the member to withdraw it.

Mr. Ruston: I'd like to correct one thing, Mr. Chairman. I'm the member for Essex North, if you don't mind.

Mr. Chairman: I'm sorry.

Mr. Ruston: I think it's misleading within the context. What I said was he is misleading the House by reading it out of context. I think that would not be misleading the House in that way, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I ask the honourable member to withdraw the term "misleading."

Mr. Ruston: Very good, Mr. Chairman. I will withdraw the word "misleading"; but I am sure he is trying in some way to dislocate members by reading the thing out of context.

Mr. McClellan: I wouldn't want to dislocate the members to the right of me any more than they already are. They seem to suffer from terminal schizophrenia. They talk in terms of principles and policies, but most consistently they refuse—

Mr. Kerrio: Is this a bill we're debating? Is there a bill on the floor?

Mr. Rotenberg: You suffer from terminal verbosity.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The truth hurts.

Interjections.

Mr. McClellan: How sensitive they are, Mr. Chairman.

Again to quote from the Liberal Party proposal, I gather that the issue of whether or not the Metro chairman should be elected by and from the members of Metro council is the central component—

Mr. Kerrio: Tell us what you think about it. Have you got a position? Are you going to share it with me?

Mr. McClellan: —of the Liberal Party's new strategy for making grand inroads into the Metropolitan electorate. My advice, Mr. Chairman, respectfully, is that—

Mr. Kerrio: God, we've really got you frightened, haven't we? We have really got you boys on the run. You're not even talking about the government anymore.

Mr. Epp: Tell us what you are going to do when you are in fourth position?

Mr. Kerrio: When are you going to get around to that? Having problems?

Mr. McClellan: I can wait all night.

Mr. Kerrio: So can I.

Mr. Rotenberg: You can't take it, can you?

Mr. McClellan: I can take it fine.

Mr. MacBeth: You can dish it out but you can't take it.

Interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: You haven't said anything yet.

Mr. Chairman: I'd remind the committee that we are debating the amendment before the House. If the honourable members don't wish to debate it we will take a recess.

The honourable member may continue on the amendment.

Mr. McClellan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am debating the amendment, which is in line with what I understand to be Liberal Party policy. I am trying to encourage my colleagues in the Liberal Party to support our amendment which would—as I say—cause the Metro chairman to be elected by and from the members of the Metro council.

I have a great deal of respect for my colleague from St. George, quite sincerely, and I say to her—I suspect she may be listening outside—

Mr. MacBeth: Don't count on it.

Mr. McClellan: —the issue of the election of the Metro chairman is independent of the package of reforms that are required with respect to Metropolitan government in the Toronto region. The issue of the election of the Metro chairman is an issue in itself and has validity as an issue in itself, apart from the broader issue of additional legislation which may be forthcoming at some time in the future.

There is a clear consensus within the Metropolitan community that the regional chairman in Metropolitan Toronto ought to be elected, ought to be accountable to the electorate, ought to face the electorate at regular intervals, the same as every other political leader in this province and in this country.

It is not simply a question of the principle of democracy although the principle of democracy is again sufficiently compelling to persuade any sensible person to vote for our amendment. The issue is also the quality of government in the Metropolitan area. Anyone who is representative from the Metropolitan Toronto area will know, without any equivocation or uncertainty, that there is a qualitative difference between the administration of the governments of the area municipalities and the administration of the government of the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto. The bureaucracies of the area municipalities are infinitely more sensitive both to the needs and to the demands of the citizenry for service, for courteous and prompt and efficient service, than is the government and administration of the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto.

I won't repeat the example I used in the second reading debate of the planning process involving all levels of government with respect to the Frankel-Lambert housing development, but I note again that the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto seemed incapable of adjusting itself, of accommodating itself, of making the kinds of give and take arrangements that every other level of government was able to do from the federal level right down to the area municipalities and the school boards. It was only the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto that seemed incapable of engaging in that kind of co-operative planning process.

Those of us who represent ridings in Toronto city will know that some of our roads are unfortunately under the jurisdiction of the corporation of Metropolitan Toronto. Dundas Street, for example, in my riding, one of the four major commercial streets in the riding of Bellwoods—

Mr. Epp: What's that got to do with the amendment?

Mr. Ashe: That has nothing to do with the amendment at all.

Mr. McClellan: If you would listen, I'll explain to you.

Mr. Nixon: We're going to vote in four minutes.

Mr. McClellan: I'll be finished in four minutes.

Dundas Street, in my riding, is a Metro road, and it is the only Metro road in my riding. I say to you it is virtually impossible to get service on the road. Unlike the other commercial streets in the riding, which are under the jurisdiction of the city—

Mr. Epp: Point of order: Could we have the member please speak to the amendment as it is before us rather than about roads in Metropolitan Toronto?

Mr. McClellan: The argument I'm making is that there is a qualitative difference between the administration of Metropolitan government, on the one hand, and the area government on the other.

The qualitative difference is directly related to the fact that the head of government of the Metropolitan corporation is not accountable. He's not accountable to anybody. He never has to face the electorate, unlike the House leader who faces the electorate at regular intervals—

Hon. Mr. Welch: Every year.

Mr. McClellan: —every year—the Metropolitan chairman does not, and it's reflected in the administration. It's reflected in the attitude of commissioners within the Metropolitan corporation; they are as different as night and day. I say to you that the Metro roads commissioner is as different in his attitudes towards even—

Mr. Ruston: The elected chairmen?

Mr. McClellan: Even aldermen — alderpeople—

Mr. Ruston: You should be talking about elected chairmen.

Mr. McClellan: —than are the commissioners for the area municipalities. That is simply a reflection of the fact that we don't have a democratic system of government. That flaw, that disease, infects the spirit of the administration. That is a palpable sense that one can get if one is trying to deal with governments within the Toronto region.

The issue is very clear and the remedy is very clear. The remedy is before us in the form of an amendment. The amendment is supposed to be consistent and identical with Liberal Party policy. The issue is an issue which is not integrally related to the overall package of municipal forms for the Metropolitan area. It is an issue that is compelling on its own merit. I ask, once again, for the Liberal Party to screw up its courage and vote for the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Are members ready for the question?

All those in favour of Mr. Warner's amendment to section 1(1) of the bill will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 2 to 7, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 149(4) of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, as set out in section 8 of the bill, be amended by striking out the word "the 10th day" in the third line and substituting therefor the words "30 days," so that the subsection shall read:

"A bylaw under this section, and a bylaw amending or repealing any such bylaw, shall be passed no later than 30 days prior to the last day for posting notice of the offices for which persons may be nominated in accordance with the Municipal Elections Act, 1977 and shall not be passed unless it has received the approval of the Ontario Municipal Board."

[10:15]

Mr. Swart: I would expect that perhaps this would be acceptable to all sides of the House. It does exactly what was done in the other bills. At the present time, the proposals in Bill 83—

Mr. Nixon: Let's buy this one. Next.

Mr. Ashe: We agree.

Motion agreed to.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Roy: If you put something reasonable, we'll agree.

Mr. Nixon: Convince us of something else.

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Epp: The party to my left has put an amendment to section 10. However, we do not believe that we should concur with the amendment.

Ms. Gigantes: Let us put it first.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The chair has not received an amendment.

Mr. Epp: Let me then speak to section 10 of the bill which suggests that the members who sit on the Metropolitan police board and are representatives from the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto should be paid. We do not concur with the principle that they should be paid, but rather that they should be treated the same as they are in other regional municipalities. Similarly, they should be treated the same as other members of Metropolitan Toronto who serve on other committee and are not paid. Therefore, we would suggest that section 10 remain as it originally is in section 178 of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Swart: I'll move my motion which covers the issue that the member spoke to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Swart moves that section 178 of the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act, as set out in section 10 of the bill, be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"The Metropolitan Toronto corporation shall provide for the payment of a reasonable remuneration, not being less than the minimum prescribed by the regulations under the Police Act, to the members of the Metropolitan board appointed or designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, except the member designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under section 177(1)(c)."

Mr. Swart: I want to make it clear that my amendment does exactly what the member for Waterloo North stated he wanted to be done but I don't see any other way of doing it except by moving the amendment. As it presently stands, the act provides that those members from Metro council cannot be paid. Perhaps I should read the amendment which you have before you in Bill 83. It states:

"The Metropolitan corporation shall provide for the payment of a reasonable remuneration, not being less than the minimum prescribed by the regulations under the Police Act to the members of the Metropolitan board, except the member designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under clause (c) of subsection 1 of section 177(1)(c)."

Under this act it makes it mandatory that the members appointed from regional council must be paid. The intent of my amendment, and what it actually does, is to provide that the regional council may pay them if they so wish, but they're not compelled to pay them. They don't have to be paid. If those members who sit on the board—

Mr. Chairman: Order. There seems to be a number of private conversations.

Mr. Swart: You're so right, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacBeth: We want to hear something intelligent.

Mr. Swart: It should be left to the Metropolitan Toronto council to decide whether they wish those persons who are serving on the police commission to get any extra remuneration. That's exactly what I thought the member for Waterloo North said. But that is not provided either in the present act or in the amending bill that is before us. My amendment does that, therefore, I think it is a reasonable amendment. I suspect perhaps the parliamentary assistant to the Treasurer might be willing to accept it.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Chairman, we support the amendment. As the member for Welland Thorold indicates, it does give the flexibility to the Metropolitan council to decide whether they wish to provide further remuneration or no further remuneration to their representatives on the police commission. So we have no problem with the amendment as proposed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Hear, hear.

Mr. Warner: Even the Treasurer agrees.

Motion agreed to.

Section 10, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 11 to 15, inclusive, agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That puts the Grits on the spot. They haven't figured out which way they are going yet.

Mr. Haggerty: You should know, Darcy.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You have to be protected. You better have a caucus in a hurry and figure it out.

Mr. Roy: We know which way you are going, and that's backwards.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The greatest lack of principle of any party—

Mr. Makarchuk: Right on, Darcy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Flip-flop, that whole party.

Mr. Swart: They're going to do it again in five minutes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You'd better get Smith in here and whip you in line.

Mr. Haggerty: He'll whip you in line.

Mr. Chairman: Order. Are there any other comments on any further section?

Mr. Haggerty: You know what OHIP means, Darcy?

Mr. Roy: Never mind OHIP; he's been going backwards ever since—

Mr. Chairman: I would like to remind the members that this will be a 10-minute bell with one stacked amendment.

[10:30]

The committee divided on Mr. Warner's amendment to section 1(1), which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 19; nays 48.

Section 1 agreed to.

Bill 83, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 83, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Roy: Darcy, that's the only bill you've passed all week.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) looks great in the Premier's chair.

Mr. Martel: Is that the real Bill Davis?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House I will say we will be back tomorrow, sharp at 10, and we will do Bills 121, 110, 111, 85, 91 and 96.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:35 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JUNE 16, 1978

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all honourable members will wish to join me in welcoming to our gallery the secretary general of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Sir Robin Vanderfelt. Sir Robin is in Canada for consultations with officials of various parliaments and to attend the first conference of Atlantic parliamentarians being held in St. John's, Newfoundland, next week.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

RENT REVIEW

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Today I wish to indicate the government's general intentions with regard to providing an acceptable form of protection to the tenants of Ontario. This is to ensure that there may be some predictability for landlords and tenants and to erase any fears that tenants may have as the expiry of the rent review program approaches.

We promised continued tenant protection in the throne speech in March last year. We then laid out the fundamentals of continuing tenant protection in the February green paper. We distributed that green paper free of charge to the public, and widely; and provided a forum to allow full participation and discussion for both tenants and landlords by establishing an all-party committee of this House.

I wish to announce today that the government will introduce legislation in the fall to incorporate the following fundamental principles: continuation of an improved rent review program until December 31, 1980; the guideline for rent increases to remain at six per cent until December 31, 1979; a tribunal to be established with jurisdiction to handle all residential landlord and tenant matters; the new scheme to permit calculations other than simple cost passthrough when computing rent, including reference to comparative rents and the special conditions of landlords who are suffering real losses.

Members will remember our commitment to continue tenant protection. It was this government which last fall lowered the rent increase guideline to six per cent.

Mr. S. Smith: I remember what the Premier (Mr. Davis) said to me.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I also singled out the tribunal concept as being a basic factor of the entire program. Therefore, the government is pleased to see the committee's support of these fundamentals.

The government wants to substantially improve landlord and tenant relations in this province. The tribunal, we feel will accomplish this by providing quick and easy mediation, arbitration and adjudication of all landlord and tenant matters.

Mr. Makarchuk: Larry, the Speaker is at the other side of the room.

Mr. Nixon: Raise your chin a bit; the cameras aren't getting it at a good angle.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One act, one tribunal, one ministry.

Mr. Nixon: That's better.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The keystone of our new tenant protection legislation will be simplicity, speed and equity for landlords and tenants. Landlords should not have to wait three months to evict a tenant who is not paying rent—

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier should read his own interjections on Monday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your caucus is embarrassed. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall) is embarrassed. I have no problems.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There will be ample time for an exchange during question period.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—nor should a tenant have to wait three months to have the heat restored in an apartment. Also, there should be only one rent review hearing per building per year, instead of a series of hearings every few months.

These are some of our starting points, and we will move immediately to legislate these principles. The legislation will be ready in September for introduction in October.

On May 25 I addressed the problem of the 90-day notice landlords are required to give tenants for any proposed rent increase. I indicated at that time that we would await the committee's report. Therefore, today I am also announcing that I will be introducing an amendment to extend the current legislation to February 28, 1979.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to compliment the members of the all-party committee, all of whom signed the report, I am happy to note, difficult as it was for some of them.

Mr. Kerrio: It makes you responsible whether you want to be or not.

Mr. Nixon: A very hard-working, conscientious group.

Mr. MacDonald: There was certainly difficulty for your side of the House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The report is a good one, the product of several weeks of intense work and pressure. They have played, individually and collectively, an important part in this process. I regret, as I know they do, that they have not yet been able to develop a gradual, long-term decontrol program. I urge them and other members of the assembly to continue to address this problem over the next few months, as an adequate supply of housing in an open-market system is the best tenant protection.

I hope this statement will assure tenants that they will be protected, and assure landlords that the continuing program will be an improved one.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed with oral questions, I want to remind honourable members that we have two other very distinguished guests in our gallery in the person of His Excellency General Edmundo Ibanez, the Ambassador of Bolivia to Canada, accompanied by Mr. Roland Arellano, Consul General of Bolivia in Toronto. Would you welcome them to our assembly.

ORAL QUESTIONS

CHAIN STORE DISCOUNTS

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Has the minister given to the Milk Commission of Ontario the obligation and the authority to monitor on a continuing basis the types and amounts of discounts given by fluid milk processors and distributors to their various customers in order to assess the effect of that practice on the structure and competitiveness of the industry; and if he has, in fact, given that authority to the milk commission, why has he not tabled with our committee the results of their ongoing monitoring?

Mr. Turner: Have a select committee.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the milk commission does not, on an ongoing basis, monitor the price of milk.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Given that the minister himself has read or should have read the report of the Inquiry on Wholesale and Retail Pricing Practices for Fluid Milk in Ontario 1971-75, from the Milk Commission of Ontario inquiry, addressed to the Honourable William G. Newman, February 8, 1977, and given that their recommendation 2(b) was as follows; "The Milk Commission of Ontario should monitor on a continuing basis the types and amounts of discounts given by fluid milk processors and distributors to their various customers and assess the effect of this practice on the structure and competitiveness of the industry," which was a recommendation which followed a report indicating some very questionable practices indeed at the processor-to-retail level, why has the minister ignored the report of the milk commission? Why is there not this ongoing monitoring that would have clarified the situation?

Hon. W. Newman: With reference to the report that was done by the Ontario Milk Commission following the inquiry that was held, I think if the Leader of the Opposition will read all that report, which I don't have in front of me—and it's quite a lengthy report—he will find that in effect they have said that the markups in the price of milk are not undue or unfair as far as the consumer in this province is concerned.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: Since the milk commission does not normally monitor prices beyond the milk board, because that is free and open in the market the minister espouses, but since the food council does monitor prices or has a statutory obligation to do so, would the minister please explain to this House how the chairman of the food council could tell the committee the other night that he didn't even know about the discount processes, when it is contained in a report of that nature and is his responsibility to monitor food prices to some degree?

Hon. W. Newman: I think that is a little bit inaccurate. If I recall the comments of the chairman of the Ontario Food Council the other night, he said that on anything that was brought to his attention, and in some cases on matters that were not brought to his attention specifically, he took the appropriate action. He documented that back to 1972, if I remember correctly, and again in 1974 and in 1977.

He may have documented some other cases where they did see an undesirable practice, where they did move in and where they were able to resolve that particular situation.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the minister talking about milk discounts?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm talking about the situation that was brought to his attention.

Mr. MacDonald: The milk discounts?

Hon. W. Newman: Not milk discounts, no.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order: My question was dealing specifically with milk discounts. The minister has gone off and talked about a lot of other irrelevant things.

Hon. W. Newman: As far as milk discounts are concerned, no, but the member asked about the Ontario Food Council monitoring food prices. Hansard will show that.

Mr. Warner: The minister is irrelevant.

Mr. Makarchuk: We are talking about milk.

Mr. MacDonald: The question was about milk discounts.

Mr. Makarchuk: The stuff you get out of a cow.

Hon. W. Newman: Any individual or any group that doesn't like the things that are done by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board which has control over milk supplies from the producer—

Mr. MacDonald: Answer the question.

Hon. W. Newman: Will you just be quiet for once in your life? Just try it. You've never stopped since joining the committee.

Mr. MacDonald: Answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Don't be disturbed by that asphalt farmer.

Mr. McClellan: You are confused.

Mr. Martel: What asphalt?

Hon. B. Stephenson: That asphalt farmer.

Hon. W. Newman: There is an appeal process that people can take to the Ontario Milk Commission if they are not satisfied with what happens. There is an appeal process available and open to them.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister hasn't answered the question.

Hon. W. Newman: And, by the way, those appeal processes are open to the public as well.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister hasn't answered the question. He has deliberately evaded the question.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister saying to this House that the reason he has ignored the recommendations of the inquiry which were addressed to him—

An hon. member: He never even read them.

Mr. Pope: You are a grandstander.

Mr. S. Smith: —in 1977 and the reason he has ignored their requests for ongoing monitoring facilities is that in his view the report disclosed nothing unusual? If that is what he is saying, how does he account for the fact that in this report they report on 18 per cent discounts in the dairy industry, situations where processors whose chain discounts are almost three times the discounts given to independents, certain situations where favoured customers were offered discounts where others were not and a number of other practices so questionable that the milk commission asked the minister for power to monitor all the pricing arrangements? Why did he refuse them that power and why has he neglected to comply with what this inquiry asked of him?

Hon. W. Newman: I think there were 14 recommendations in that report. The member has it in front of him, I have forgotten the exact number of recommendations.

I think we acted on most of the recommendations in that report. I think, to summarize the total report, the inquiry indicated at that time that things were not excessive and were not out of line.

[10:15]

Mr. MacDonald: Since milk is normally deemed to be a food, and the food council has responsibility for monitoring prices throughout the whole chain of the food industry will the minister indicate to me specifically how the chairman of the food council could indicate the other night that he wasn't even aware of the discount in milk after that report?

Mr. S. Smith: That's exactly what he said.

Hon. W. Newman: As far as discounts are concerned, I think he went on at some length the other night to explain, under questioning by the member and by the Leader of the Opposition, about the discounts that had been dealt with—milk or otherwise. Whenever he thought there was a problem or an undesirable fact he moved in on the situation.

He basically acts on complaints. That is exactly what life is all about. We are not on a witch-hunt for anyone—no. If there is certain information that is coming forward on a confidential basis, and there is a problem, we will look at it.

Mr. MacDonald: There are none so blind as those who will not see.

Mr. Eaton: You should know.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of order: To set the record straight, the minister mentioned 14 recommendations. There are precisely four recommendations. The one I read to the minister starts: "We believe it is imperative that there be a continuing assessment of recommendation number two." Why did the minister ignore that recommendation? He obviously has no answer. I doubt if he has even read the report.

Mr. MacDonald: It's a copout.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, he is talking on a point of order. I would point out to this House that there are other recommendations in there too. The member should read the rest of the darn report—"darn" I said, sir.

We have been on an inquiry for some time now, where all these questions were able to be asked; we have dealt with them. We will be continuing next Tuesday night. I am just a little bit appalled that the Leader of the Opposition is taking the time of the House when the committee will have had a total of about 35 to 40 hours to deal with this matter. Yet some members are coming here and pulling out the milk commission report—

Mr. MacDonald: It is time to appoint a minister of food. We will continue forever.

Hon. W. Newman: Sure I know about the report, but read the summary and the finalization of the report. Does the member want us to go out and hold everybody's hand in this province in the private-sector free-enterprise system? If these members believe in controlled retail prices, they should get up and say so.

Mr. S. Smith: I did.

RENTAL HOUSING

Mr. S. Smith: I will direct this question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Since we all know how unhappily he finds himself now, having to espouse continuing rent review, and since we know too that he wishes to have—

Mr. Yakabuski: Flip, flop.

Mr. S. Smith: Was the member not in the House the other day when he made his comments about that? He should have listened to him. He is the Premier.

Mr. Speaker: I must remind all honourable members that this is a question period.

Mr. S. Smith: Little as the member may think of him, he is his leader. The member should listen to him sometime.

Since we realize that rental housing will have to be built if we are to get out of rent control at any point, is it the government's intention to announce target levels of new rental starts for major metropolitan centres? Is the government prepared to make a specific commitment to increase the supply of portable rental housing?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I listened very carefully to what I said the other day and I have paid great attention to the rather contradictory and strange emanations from the official opposition on this very difficult subject.

Mr. Nixon: I see you have adopted our plan holus bolus.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk—

Mr. Speaker: He didn't ask the question. Just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have difficulty ignoring him.

To say that the government, as everybody's big brother, is going to establish goals which the private sector must, I assume under his plan, by legislation, meet—I don't think that's the proper route or procedure for the government of this province to go. To suggest that we can say X thousand units will be the objective, say, in Metropolitan Toronto, and that in some way we are going to legislate the private sector into building that number of units, I would have to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I think that really is beyond the capacity of even this government; and our capacities are not limited—but I don't think I can give him that kind of undertaking.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, pointing out what the Premier said on June 12: "... even the program being advocated by that great free-enterprise Liberal Party of Ontario which is advocating"—

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm quoting the Premier.

Mr. Nixon: These are the Premier's words. You were applauding them last week.

Mr. S. Smith: I admit the Premier's words are laughable, but they are his words, nonetheless—"which is advocating its continuation for another two years, even knowing it will prejudice the tenants and the development of new accommodation in the province of Ontario, I think."

Mr. Nixon: Now precisely your program.

Mr. S. Smith: So on June 12, such a two-year extension would prejudice the tenants in the development of new accommodation. Today, the government is proud to make it its program. I'm delighted to hear that.

But what I do want to know, since we all want to have some more rental housing built, is basically whether the Premier is aware of proposed changes in the ARP program, changes which have disturbed the city of Toronto because it would make mortgage money a little more expensive than it is at the moment. Has the government, through the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), opposed these suggested changes in ARP and will it set targets? Will it also demand that ARP remain unchanged, if not improved?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course, governments can always set targets. As I understood the Leader of the Opposition's question, I assumed he meant—and I think he did—that we would set certain targets which we would then commit ourselves as a government to meet. What the Leader of the Opposition does not understand on this issue is that we are totally committed to the reasonable protection of tenants.

We also know that if the development industry, and while the Liberal Party, like the NDP, would probably take over the development industry—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure they would, sure they would. It's the only way they can meet some of the things they've said.

—the development industry has to have some understanding that at some point in time we will be out of a total control mechanism. The members opposite know it. The member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) knows it because he's said as much to some of the people in the development industry.

Mr. Breithaupt: Don't adopt our policy if you don't like it.

Mrs. Campbell: It is not a controlled mechanism and the Premier knows it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You people have tried to have it both ways for the last four months. And you've got caught. You've been caught. The people in the industry know you've been caught.

This government is committed to doing everything it can to encourage the development of rental accommodation.

Mr. S. Smith: "Prejudice the tenants and the development"—I quote.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can only suggest to the members opposite that some of their activities have not made that task any easier.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier's words are in Hansard. Read Hansard, June 12.

Mr. Nixon: Four days ago.

Mr. Speaker: Only one person has the floor and that's the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Warner: In an attempt to clarify the difference in the answer which we had the first time from the Premier and the second time, perhaps he could explain whether or not he is rejecting two of the most important recommendations from the committee report—namely, that a committee of this Legislature, either a standing committee or any other committee, be formed to look as quickly as possible at the need for adequate quality and quantity of rental housing and to include looking at the financing and mortgage aspect of the housing market, land banking and corporate land holdings, housing and maintenance standards, the capacity of—

Mr. Havrot: Did you ever own one? Did you ever own an apartment building?

Mr. Warner:—the private and non-profit and public sectors to provide affordable housing and so on and other details that are included? Is the Premier rejecting that as a reasonable approach to try to solve the problem of housing in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not rejecting anything. I can make one or two observations. I don't in any way minimize the capacity of a standing committee or a select committee to deal with some issues. However, I would suggest that this particular issue has been discussed at some length. There are certain aspects in the report that have been debated in this House. The New Democrats can talk about land banking and all of these things, and it's intriguing.

I would only say to the member that there is sufficient land and there are sufficient registered lots in terms of rental accommodation. What is necessary is to see that there is some expectation of a reasonable rate of return.

Mr. Martel: That is what happened in 1971.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That was the philosophy that gave us until recently one of the highest qualities of residential accommodation in any jurisdiction on this continent. The people across the House, if they're not careful, are only going to make the situation more difficult. That's the problem we face in attempting to come to solutions.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is a lot of baloney.

Mr. Martel: That is why you introduced rent control.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since the question of return on investment is really what is behind the assisted rental program, I'm asking the Premier again, is he familiar with the changes suggested by the federal government in the assisted rental program? That is a very important program. Compared to the previous ARP, the new program would build in increases about one per cent higher, or seven per cent higher in additional operating cost increases. Toronto is very worried about that. What I am asking the Premier is, has the Minister of Housing discussed this at the recent conference and has Ontario taken a stand on the proposed change in the assisted rental program, which I think would be very harmful?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This was discussed by the ministers. The Minister of Housing of this province will be making a statement, probably on Monday, dealing with a number of issues that emerged from the conference. I could only say to the Leader of the Opposition, with some slight knowledge of what went on, and some slight knowledge of the federal programs, that the people of this province can be very grateful that we have a Minister of Housing who knows something about housing.

Mr. Warner: The minister without housing.

Mr. Breithaupt: He lives in one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The federal programs, I would hope, will be adjusted to reflect the realities that do exist in this province.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary: Is the Premier aware of the fact that the tenants' presentations dwelt, on many occasions, on the availability of affordable housing and not the availability of housing? Is the Premier aware, taking into account current land costs, financing costs, et cetera, that it is impossible for the private developer or any developer to build rental accommodation today at prices people can afford?

In view of that fact, what initiatives is the government prepared to undertake in order to ensure that there is affordable housing available and not just housing available?

Mr. Havrot: Make them out of cardboard.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the honourable member is referring specifically, as the committee was in dealing with it, to the question of rental accommodation, I think the answer to that is partially within the assisted rental program and partially within one's definition of what one means by affordable, location, et cetera. All I'm saying to the members opposite is that the present situation does not really give the expectation of resolving this problem the way people opposite are approaching it.

Mr. Makarchuk: They can't build affordable housing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not going to argue for a moment the degree of affordability. We all know, whether it's rental accommodation or single-family units or even townhouses, that the question of affordability is difficult. I would only say to the honourable member that there are some basic reasons for this and some for which people of his philosophy have to take some responsibility.

Mr. Martel: We didn't create the problem.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Part of the reason for the housing costs in this province today—

Mr. Makarchuk: You are the government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure, we'll take some of our responsibility.

Mr. Nixon: It is your legislation.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I happen to know that part of the reason is the question of delay. The questions that people in the member's party raise are those of their philosophical instincts that lead to delays in the registration of plans—and subdivisions.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Premier just said there was availability and that all sorts of lots were available. He is not even consistent.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They would have environmental hearings and delays for every project in this province if they had their way. They certainly would.

Mr. Warner: That's your fault.

[10:30]

Hon. Mr. Davis: People of their philosophy are partially the authors of our present difficulties; that's the simple point I am trying to make.

Mr. Makarchuk: You just said there are lots available.

Mr. Nixon: Slippery Bill.

Mr. S. Smith: You've been the government for 35 years.

Mr. Martel: When the Premier is throwing around responsibility for the housing crisis—

Some hon. members: Question.

Mr. Martel: —he should remember that the Tories have been in power for some 30 years and they are the people responsible for that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In answer to that question—

Some hon. members: Down, down.

Mr. Breithaupt: One at a time, please.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought it was a question to me.

Mr. Martel: No, it was just an aside, a reminder. The Tories were the ones in power; not us. They shouldn't try to put the blame here.

Mr. Turner: Do you want to make a speech, Elie?

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH CENTRES

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Labour: In a release from her ministry dated June 12, the following was stated:

"Four occupational health and safety resource centres have been established throughout the province to assist in the identification, monitoring and control of work-related hazards. The centres are established at the University of Waterloo, serving Waterloo-Kitchener-Cambridge . . . ; Queen's University, serving eastern Ontario and the Sudbury basin (with emphasis on mining); the University of Western Ontario . . . ; and Lakehead . . ."

Was the Ministry of Labour or other ministries responsible or involved in the initiatives that led to the establishment of the four occupational health centres in Waterloo, Kingston, Western and Lakehead?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether that's an aside or a question?

Mr. Martel: It's anything you want. I am not at liberty to answer.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Thank you. Obviously it's a question.

Mr. Speaker, the honourable members must understand that the funding for this program comes through the Provincial lottery—

Mr. Wildman: So you decide on the universities by lottery too. Is that it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: —the grant that is allotted to the Ministry of Labour for the purposes of research and education or projects in occupational health and safety.

I think the honourable members should understand as well that the recommendations for the allotment of these funds is established by a totally independent, non-governmental committee which gives the granting committee advice about this. The recommendations are based upon the presentations and applications of the various universities involved and the degree of commitment to the principles of teaching occupational health and safety at the paraprofessional level in order to help us to improve our capability in this area.

The decisions were made by the granting committee, the awards committee, of the Ministry of Labour portion of the lottery fund. They were certainly made with a great deal of thought and a great deal of consideration.

I could tell the honourable member that we looked at a number of applications. Some universities did not submit applications in this area, and some community colleges did not apply as well, but we have looked at various places. If the honourable member is disturbed about having the Queen's program tied to Sudbury, I would remind him that there has been a traditional relationship between the faculty of medicine and the faculty of engineering at Queen's and the Sudbury area in terms of teaching and educational programs.

I would also remind him that there is a centre at Thunder Bay, which is most certainly in northern Ontario. We might consider some other area such as Timmins or North Bay or some others, in the future, but the amount of money that we had allotted to us provided us with four centres and these appeared to be the most appropriate for the purposes.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: With laryngeal cancer now established as coming out of Inco; with cancer of the lungs a problem from the sintering plant at Sudbury; with bronchial problems three times higher in the smelter in Sudbury than anywhere else in the province; with more than 800 cases of industrial deafness in north-eastern Ontario; with numerous cases of cancer of the lung coming out of Elliot Lake; with silicosis rampant in Elliot Lake and other mining areas—and the minister is going to jump on the word "rampant," but it's much more rampant than anywhere else—can she tell me why she would not locate this type of facility in the area predominant in mining rather than go to Queen's University, which doesn't have a mine within 100 miles of it, to check out, as the ministry's release says, "identification, monitoring and control of work-related hazards"? Why wouldn't the ministry go to Sudbury and establish there, where the real source of the problem is, and not at Queen's?

Mr. Hodgson: Quit showing off, Elie.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is obviously labouring under a misapprehension.

Mr. Martel: I am not labouring under any misapprehension.

Hon. B. Stephenson: These centres are centres for the education of individuals who will be involved in monitoring, who will be involved in training, who will be involved in investigating the problems.

I would remind the honourable member that, indeed, there has been very close co-operation between the medical school at Queen's University—which is a very good medical school and which is, indeed, concerned about these problems—and Laurentian University, and that co-operation is part of the reason for the award of that amount of funding to Queen's University, because of their close relationship.

It seemed to me that the kind of programs which they had established in the past, which have served that area very well, will be an excellent basis for training—

Mr. Martel: In whose opinion?

Hon. B. Stephenson:—and for education of those people who need to be trained for the Sudbury region to do the monitoring. That is the reason for it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am always supportive of Sudbury and there you go attacking Kingston.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary: Could I ask if the minister might go back and review this particular decision a little more carefully? Might it perhaps not be the peculiar insensitivity which some of the major southern university communities can have occasionally about the desperate need to locate in and serve at source in the north, rather than forever training at Queen's people who then have to come back to Sudbury but who are indigenous to Sudbury at the outset? Does she not understand and do they not understand that Sudbury has been the focus for the entire occupational health controversy in this province, so why can she not set a resource centre in Sudbury? Doesn't that make sense?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the decision was made, recommended strongly, by a group of knowledgeable people who are not just from southern Ontario. They are from all over the province but they are extremely knowledgeable people.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, they served at southern universities.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Secondly, it may be the view that all of the occupational health and safety problems are lodged in Sudbury or that it has provided a major need for impetus in this area—and that is probably so traditionally—but I would remind the member that this is a program for education and the education is going to take place in Sudbury. It is not going to take place in Kingston.

Mr. Lewis: Where is it going to take place?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is going to take place in the related division, the co-operative division in Sudbury, in Laurentian University, because of this co-operative program. It is not a treatment facility, it is not an investigation facility, it is a training facility, and most of the people who will be taking that training will, indeed, probably come from the Sudbury basin.

Mr. Lewis: And they will take it at Queen's.

Hon. B. Stephenson: They won't take it at Queen's, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Of course they will. That is where the resource centre is.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you listen? Why don't you listen once in a while? You know it all.

Hon. B. Stephenson: The resource centre is the co-ordinator of the program, providing the staff for the program and the expertise for the program. Except for certain areas of that program, most of the training will take place in the Sudbury area.

Mr. Martel: In view of the fact that, having spoken to the president of the university, Dr. Henry Best, yesterday afternoon, and he feels that Laurentian is merely a periphery to the whole program—

Mr. Lewis: Of course. How can they do otherwise?

Mr. Martel:—and in view of the fact that the minister does not allow for any area of northeastern Ontario to be covered off, as she has outlined in her statement, that the other localities will serve northwestern Ontario, southwestern Ontario, eastern Ontario, and the Metro Toronto area, who is going to be responsible for the rest of northeastern Ontario, in view of the fact that there is no one there?

Ms. Gigantes: Sudbury always is.

Mr. Wildman: Timmins, Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Martel: Would the minister, therefore, alter her decision and put in the Sudbury area the type of facility that is necessary?

Mr. Havrot: That's a good way to make good headlines—

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, this is a training resource centre, it is not a treatment resource centre.

Mr. Lewis: That's where the problem is.

Mr. Turner: Don't you understand?

Hon. B. Stephenson: If there is more money forthcoming from the Provincial funds we may, indeed, have applications from other community colleges or universities, and we would be most encouraged if that were to happen.

Mr. Lewis: You are going to do all your training in Sudbury; why don't you put your resource centre there?

Hon. B. Stephenson: We would also look very favourably upon those applications. At the moment, with the allotment which is available to us, it has been distributed to the greatest advantage of those areas where, indeed, major problems exist and where the facilities—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, where the clout is. Queen's has the clout versus Laurentian.

Hon. B. Stephenson: No, indeed, where the expertise and the commitment of individuals to helping to training people to solve occupational health and safety problems rather than simply blow them up, is situated.

Ms. Gigantes: Why don't you find some professionals to go to Sudbury and set up a program?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think the program which is being established at Queen's is an excellent program which will incorporate, in an integral fashion, Laurentian University. I do not in any way denigrate the programs which have been funded by the awards committee of the Provincial lottery. If there is more money available, then certainly we'll look favourably on others.

ELLIOT LAKE HOUSING

Mr. Martel: A question of the Minister of Housing: In view of the extremely rapid growth in Elliot Lake, which has created many serious problems in housing and in the variety of services which are available, can the minister indicate what planning took place by the municipal government, the provincial government and the industry before that boom which has exacerbated the problems started recently?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that there had been some discussions with the municipal council and with the provincial member and, indeed, with the industry. The industry, as the honourable member knows, is in the process of developing a number of housing units to satisfy, I trust, to the greatest extent possible the needs for housing of its own employees.

Mr. Wildman: Build the Granary Lake road.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: At the same time, as the member will recall, the government entered into a contract to establish a senior citizens' residence in that particular community. As a result of some findings more than a year ago, the project was brought to a standstill until it had been reviewed and investigated. I can report to the House that just about a week ago, as a result of some redrafting of the design characteristics of the building, we have entered into a construction contract to commence the senior citizens' development.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the shortage is so critical that workers cannot find places to stay, even to rent—

Mr. Wildman: They are living in basements.

Mr. Martel: —can the minister indicate if there are any plans in order to speed up the construction so that workers can bring their wives to Elliot Lake and stay there? The case is that the changeover is so rapid now that there is no steady work force.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: There are several people proposing development and subdivision work, not only in Elliot Lake but also in communities adjacent to Elliot Lake. My understanding is that those proposals are being advanced as quickly as possible. I am also of the understanding that the councils of the communities in which they are located have been co-operating with the developers and the province of Ontario in trying to finalize the subdivision plans as far as servicing is required. I cannot give a specific date for commencement of construction.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Since the minister is interested in the subdivision developments being proposed for adjoining communities, would he urge upon the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) the necessity of completing the Granary Lake road in order to enable workers to commute easily from the North Shore to Elliot Lake?

LOCAL GOVERNMENT REVIEWS

Mr. Sterling: I have a question of the Premier.

Mr. Martel: Oh, you are in trouble, Bill.

Mr. Sterling: In view of the statement made yesterday, relating to the Mayo report, wherein the Treasurer stated that many issues in the white paper issued by the Treasurer in May remained contentious, and in view of the fact that the townships of Goulbourn, March and Nepean have agreed to the creation of a new western city, would the Premier and his cabinet consider bringing forth a bill dealing only with that particular matter, as it is a cloud in the air at this time for the residents of those municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the member's very real interest in this. I will discuss with the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) the possibility of dealing with only a portion of the report. I would say to the honourable member that the difficulty the government has is to take a particular recommendation out of one of these reviews and implement it, at the same time leaving other matters for further study and discussion. However, I understand there is some real support for this in the area affected.

Mr. Cunningham: That's never stopped you before.

Hon. Mr. Davis: While it does create problems, and while I certainly can't give the honourable member any commitment or any decision today, I will explore this with the Treasurer during the early part of the week.

[10:45]

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: When the Premier is taking that course of action into consideration, would he be prepared to do the same in the regional municipality of Niagara? Perhaps he would consider bringing in a bill which would include those non-controversial items which have been generally agreed upon in the region? Then St. Catharines, for instance, could move towards a more just number of seats in the regional council—namely seven. There are a couple of other housekeeping items on the bill as well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The very able House leader—

Mr. Conway: And Deputy Premier—the Premier forgot that.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and one who is still very interested in the great city of St. Catharines, has already been discussing this with his colleagues in cabinet.

Mr. Conway: The last Tory in the peninsula.

Hon. Mr. Davis: So the point the honourable member has raised, with respect, has been very reasonably and adequately dealt with by the House leader—

Mr. di Santo: Dispense, dispense.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—and the member's next-door neighbour and one still genuinely interested in the welfare of the citizens of St. Catharines.

An hon. member: And the Premier has agreed with him, has he?

Hon. Mr. Davis: When is the honourable member going to ask about Hamilton?

Mr. S. Smith: I am going to ask those questions publicly from now on.

Ms. Gigantes: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I'd like to ask the Premier, while he is requesting of the Treasurer that consideration be given to moving ahead with those agreed-upon items in March and Goulbourn townships, whether he would also take a look at the request that was made by Gloucester township in January for an addition of two members to the five-person council? The Treasurer had asked the OMB to delay proceeding with the consideration of that request pending the bringing in of a package of legislation under the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Act. Would the Premier ask the Treasurer to take a look at that motion and see if he could unblock it and get it moving before the time for setting up of municipal elections in Gloucester?

Mr. Conway: The Premier knew Evelyn lived in Rockcliffe Park.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think we're always prepared to look at anything. It's just a question of what real expectation of some of these changes being made one should generate. However, I will bring that to the Treasurer's attention. I think it's always helpful if we can deal with these in a total sense but—

Mr. di Santo: How would you handle this in the cabinet now?

Hon. Mr. Davis:—on two or three of them, consensus has not been achieved. I think the honourable member understands this, particularly as it relates to one or two issues that she doesn't ask us to move upon, as I understand it. I understand that she canvassed pretty well the whole community of Rockcliffe, committing herself to seeing that they are preserved. I understand that.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: She doesn't say as much here in the House but we do get this sort of information.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We're sneaky.

Mr. Martel: She did better than the government's candidate did there.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We knew what the honourable member was doing.

Mr. Conway: Is the Treasurer still going to cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Such crass support of a class-structure community. I'm surprised at the honourable member. She has been fooling around with the rich people of Rockcliffe.

Ms. Gigantes: There are fine people in that community. Don't you—

GARDEN CITY SKYWAY

Mr. Bradley: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Taking into consideration the tragic fatal accident that occurred on the Garden City Skyway on June 7, and several accidents that have taken place—the most recent accident being where a truck broke through the guard rail and fell several feet below, where the driver was killed—is the minister prepared to adopt some or all of the recommendations of St. Catharines coroner, Dr. David Lorenzen? Those recommendations included lowering the speed limit on the skyway, posting new signs saying: "Pavement slippery when wet," investigating the flow of water on the bridge during rainstorms and possibly altering it, and installing horizontal steel rails along the fence-like guardrail on the edge of this bridge?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I have not received those recommendations yet from the coroner. They may be in the ministry, but they certainly have not come to my attention. I'll be pleased to look at them when I do get them.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: Does the minister have within his ministry any other studies that have taken place previous to this most recent accident which would indicate that the Garden City Skyway has some special circumstances on it which make it particularly dangerous when weather conditions are bad?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Not to my knowledge. I have not had anything in the past three years brought to my attention that would indicate any specific problem on the Garden City Skyway. I know we do have a problem on the Burlington Skyway during conditions of high wind when the bridge has to be closed. Other than that, I haven't had any specific concerns brought to my attention regarding the Garden City Skyway, but I'll be very pleased to look at the recommendations of the coroner.

SALE OF BUTYL NITRATE

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Warner: Who's now hiding under his desk.

Mr. Swart: Is the minister aware that the Journal, which of course is the publication of the Addiction Research Foundation, carried an article as long ago as last February of this year in which its researchers reported a craze in the use by inhalation of the drug butyl nitrate, about which little is known in terms of long-term effects, although the immediate effects are dizziness, headache and a general high?

Does the minister know that this drug is freely sold under the names of Rush and Locker Room at "head" shops and psyc-delic shops, and even in book stores, in Toronto and certain other places, to people of any age, including children? May I send a bottle to the minister and will he note that it says on it, "Not to be sold to minors"?

May I ask the minister why his ministry has not listed it as a harmful product, when amyl nitrate, a less used and less serious drug, is controlled under the Health Disciplines Act?

Hon. B. Stephenson: How much experience have you had with it, Mel?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have no power, authority or jurisdiction to do so.

Mr. Wildman: Will you recommend it to the federal people then?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That wasn't the question.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Write to Rodriguez.

Mr. Swart: Perhaps I will phrase it as a question. Is it not true that some of the minister's officials have had contact from the Addiction Research Foundation and have been doing some studying on this but nothing has been done as yet and no report has been made to the federal food and drugs people? Does the minister not think that his government should take some initiative in investigating these matters when it's so publicized by an agency of this government?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I presume that the agency is perhaps more aware of the limits of our jurisdiction than is the member for Welland-Thorold. I am sure the organization has forwarded the information to Ottawa. In any event, I will be happy to check back and see if in fact they have in the ordinary course forwarded it to those who do have some authority to act, because I think the authorities who do have power to look after this ought to be active.

Mr. Swart: Can I have a further supplementary about a 13-year-old child?

Mr. Speaker: A new question; the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk.

LOTTERIES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Culture and Recreation when he has a moment.

Hon. W. Newman: He doesn't have a moment.

Mr. Nixon: Elie, go and lie down somewhere for a moment.

This has to do with the minister's responsibility as the minister in charge of the lotteries. Would he care to explain to the House the situation which has led him as one of the participants in the Provincial lottery to decide that we too are going to have one of those instant-win machines in the Provincial lottery outlets in the province? How is this going to affect the situation vis-à-vis Loto Canada, and does he not think that maybe the aggressive competition between those two revenue sources is becoming a bit ridiculous?

Mr. Conway: If not obscene.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the very last question is yes. Indeed, my colleagues, other provincial ministers with responsibility in the lottery field, joined together with the federal minister in Regina about a week ago and said just that and suggested a solution for the problem, in that we understood that it was the intention of the government of Canada, following the expiration of the Olympic lottery, to move into a lottery with specific purposes, known as Loto Canada, to expire at the end of December 1979, to assist in the reduction of the debt incurred in the province of Quebec as a result of the Olympics. There was a sharing formula developed there; I think 87.5 per cent of the proceeds of Loto Canada go for that purpose, while the provinces share 12.5 per cent on the basis of their ticket sales and five per cent is for national sport governing bodies, and included in that is some contribution from Loto Canada for the Commonwealth Games.

If one reads Hansard and the reports of the committee hearings at the time of the establishment of Loto Canada, it seems quite clear that, once that was over, the federal government left open the fact that they would remove themselves from the lottery field and leave that revenue source to the provinces, since the provinces had already developed lotteries. All the provinces are now involved in that field, either through lottery corporations or combinations, and for years had been meeting to discuss what would happen once the Olympic lottery was over.

It should come as no surprise that there is a difference of opinion between the federal minister and the provincial ministers on that particular subject. We felt that perhaps that matter could now be referred to the first ministers. We announced some time ago we were inviting proposals for the hardware that would be necessary for a more active gain. That is being done by the Ontario Lottery Corporation. It is not an instant gain; it is a gain where people choose their numbers themselves rather than buying a ticket with a number already on it.

An hon. member: It's called the numbers racket.

Mr. Kerrio: A la Dutch Schultz.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The federal government has done the same thing. I would think there is every reason to support what has been said editorially in a number of journals of finding some way to rationalize this. It seems to me absolutely ridiculous to have two state-run lotteries competing against each other in the same jurisdictions. We are urging the government of Canada to honour its commitment. It seemed to be quite clear at the time of the introduction of Loto Canada that at the end of 1979 they would not carry on with Loto Canada but would leave the field for the provinces as in fact had been developed prior to the introduction of Loto Canada.

Mr. Nixon: By way of supplementary, there was an indication following the minister's trip to Regina, where these matters were discussed and some of them were settled, that we were going to have a type of instant lottery—not Wintario but the Provincial—where in a number was selected, fed into some kind of a computer and there would be an instant win or instant loss.

The minister has been talking about hardware. Has he heard about a somewhat similar machine which I think has already been developed where you put your money in and pull a handle and there is an instant win or loss? The money comes out at the bottom. Is there anything different between what is now going to be done in the province and putting a slot machine in all the grocery stores?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Knowing my honourable friend's strict Calvinistic background, I share his concern.

Mr. Nixon: I never said it was sinful; you did though.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The announcement to which he makes reference following the Regina meeting was the announcement by Loto Canada that it was the intention of the federal government to introduce such a game across this country. I find that scandalous. I find that completely unacceptable.

Mr. Nixon: What kind of hardware is the minister searching for?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The difference is the instant feature where one would immediately know the result.

Mr. Nixon: That's where the good Lord enters into it.

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, I'm sure that any synod would draw the distinction.

Mr. Nixon: You're wrong, there is no difference.

Hon. Mr. Welch: In the game we are talking about, the only difference between that and the actual lottery is that one chooses the number rather than the number already being printed on the ticket. It's simply a lottery, a more active one than the present.

Mr. Nixon: It's a matter of free will then.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It's the federal government that has introduced the instant features. If you go into a bank now and buy a Loto Canada ticket, you can open up an envelope and find out whether you got an immediate win there. I wrote to Iona Campagnola almost a year ago expressing some concern about that type of gambling in this country. I am still opposed to it and this government would be opposed to it.

Mr. Nixon: You know precisely what you are doing.

Mr. S. Smith: Blessed are those who wait to find out what they have won.

HANDICAPPED CHILDREN'S ALLOWANCE

Mr. di Santo: I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Is the minister aware that now it takes six months to determine the eligibility to receive the handicapped allowance for parents with retarded children? If he is aware of this, can he explain to us why it is that it takes such a long time? Can the minister also tell the House why it is that the delay in processing family benefit applications is increasing month after month?

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think the time frame that the member suggests may have occurred in a few very exceptional cases. I can assure him that is not the average length of time. It is very rarely that it would take six months to process. I agree, however, it should not ever under any circumstances take that length of time. But there are regulations which I hope will shortly be approved—and by shortly I mean within a matter of a few weeks—which will streamline the process and simplify the application procedure based on the experience that we have had over the last year, since the introduction of that program. It will result, for example, in a delegation of decision making which will also eliminate the necessity for an order in council and will, in fact, make it an approval which can be granted under the authority of regulations under the family benefits legislation.

I hope that the regulations will be approved within a matter of a couple of weeks or so and that ultimately before the end of the summer, the process will, I hope, be much more streamlined and efficient and effective in the delivery of that service to the handicapped children of this province by the fall.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: In view of the fact that most of the cases that I have are processed in six months, perhaps it would help if I submitted them to the minister.

But I would like to ask him about the delay in processing the normal family benefits application, especially Metropolitan Toronto, and if it has to do with the guidelines or with the shortage of field officers in his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: My impression is that it is probably neither of the two reasons.

Mr. Wildman: It's the second one.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Personally, I think the structures that have existed and the method of procedure, in the sense that all applications are processed for family benefits in Toronto—

If my parliamentary assistant would move a bit one way or the other; there, he has gone—I have lost him, obviously. And they say I am a pinko.

Mr. Martel: Your parliamentary assistant is a Red Tory.

Hon. Mr. Norton: He's a Red Tory, that's it.

Mr. Wildman: Are you not replacing people who are on leave in your ministry?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I don't believe it is a shortage of field workers. I don't believe it is specifically the regulations; I think it is the procedure that has required the processing of applications in the head office in Toronto.

As I indicated earlier, in the reorganization of the ministry—the proposals that I announced a short time ago—one of the objectives of that, in my mind one of the important objectives, is a decentralization of the decision-making process. I would like to see, and I hope we will see—and I am not suggesting it can happen overnight because it requires further training of staff; it requires the establishment of the authority at the local level—the decision making with respect to family benefits made as closely as possible to the field-worker level in this province, so that the process of making out applications, forwarding them to Toronto, waiting sometimes if the information is incomplete until they are sent back to the field and further information developed and forwarded back; those are the kinds of things I think have in some instances, not in all cases, caused delays. I think through decentralization and more decision-making authority that should be eliminated.

PEACH TREE DAMAGE

Mr. McGuigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the fact that the severity of the past two winters has all but wiped out the peach orchards in the county of Kent and has severely damaged peach orchards in the county of Essex, would the minister have the Crop Insurance Commission of Ontario review their decision back in 1974 when they were requested by the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers' Association to develop a plan that would insure the trees themselves rather than the crop as at present? Would the minister have the commission review those plans with a view to developing a system of insuring the trees themselves?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, as you know we have developed many new plans over the last three years. I am not exactly sure how a plan to insure the trees themselves would work out as far as the crop insurance is concerned. We would certainly be glad to look at it, but we would first like a formal request from the appropriate body.

Mr. Swart: In view of the fact this demonstrates further it is only really in the Niagara Peninsula we have the frost-free conditions to produce peaches year-by-year, will the minister give further consideration to preventing the paving over of that fruit land, as is presently provided in the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act?

Hon. W. Newman: That matter has been dealt with in this House at some length. Months and months ago a decision was made and was handed down at that time.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Very sensible.

SAULT STE. MARIE CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES

Mr. Wildman: I have a question for the Minister of Correctional Services. In view of the minister's reply to the public building inspection panel's comments on the Sault Ste. Marie jail that the money just wasn't available to deal with the production of a new building for Sault Ste. Marie and district; and the statement by his assistant director, Mr. Ben Hoffman, that the program for inmates working in the Ministry of Natural Resources forestry program had been temporarily dropped because of spending restraints; can he indicate what, if anything, the ministry is doing to try and alleviate crowding in the Sault Ste. Marie and district jail through one or other of these programs?

What are his plans with regard to a new building; or getting the inmates out into the field and working with MNR?

Hon. Mr. Drea: To put it in perspective, one of the difficulties in the Sault Ste. Marie jail, which is overcrowded, is the fact that as of a week ago, the last time I was up there, there were only four sentenced inmates in the whole place. They were all on remand.

Mr. Wildman: Right, there aren't very many.

Mr. Worton: Well-behaved people.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, but as I pointed out at the time, I am not in control of the destiny of remand inmates. I told the court to get off their tail up there and start processing cases.

Mr. S. Smith: How about the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry)?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes; I have talked to the Attorney General and I have talked to the crown, and I have talked to everybody else.

Mr. Nixon: Does the minister want to take over as Treasurer? Now that Darcy is moving out, they are looking for a Treasurer. How about that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In regard to the question of the expansion of the Sault Ste. Marie facility, there is no question that with the population increase and other social factors in the entire Algoma area, the catchment area for that institution is the entire district of Algoma. There is going to have to be either an expansion to the existing facility, which is rather difficult because of its location and the lack of land, or the building of a new institution.

As I said the last time I was in Sault Ste. Marie, there is no question that both in Sudbury and the Sault—because the population changes and the fact that remands are getting longer in both centres—we are going to have to provide within the next few years the necessary funds for expansion. When that will be, I know not, but I have said that it has to be done within the next three or four years.

In terms of alternatives for sentenced inmates, it is quite true that at McCreight's Camp north of Thessalon we did work for the Ministry of Natural Resources. The difficulty is that McCreight's Camp is completely dilapidated. We have been entering into negotiations with the Ministry of Natural Resources to acquire other property where we could take sentenced inmates and continue to do that work.

It may be of interest to you, Mr. Speaker—I was going to discuss this matter with you after the House—that in a similar situation in the district of Thunder Bay jail, we are making plans to locate a major work centre in Nipigon. That will relieve the overcrowding there. We will be doing Hydro slashing, we will be doing farming, we will be doing community work, we will be doing a number of road activities. In that circumstance, the difference between the difficulty in the Thessalon or the Algoma area and the opportunities in the Nipigon area is that the Nipigon Chamber of Commerce approached us and will help us to provide facilities. I have demonstrated there is an abundance of community work that can be done by inmates out of the Thunder Bay institution.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

BEEZEE FOODS LIMITED ACT

Mr. Edighoffer, on behalf of Mr. J. Reed, moved first reading of Bill Pr28, An Act to revive Beezee Foods Limited.

Motion agreed to.

RESIDENTIAL PREMISES RENT REVIEW AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Grossman moved first reading of Bill 24, An Act to amend the Residential Premises Rent Review Act, 1975, second session.

Motion agreed to.

LOCAL ROADS BOARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 125, An Act to amend the Local Roads Boards Act.

Motion agreed to.

REGISTRY OFFICE CLOSURES

Mr. McKessock moved, pursuant to standing order 30, that the business of the House be set aside so that the House may debate a matter of urgent public importance, that being the announcement by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations of the proposed closing of 28 registry offices in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 30, the honourable member has up to five minutes to state his case.

Mr. McKessock: I have been told by the provincial registrar that 28 of the province's 65 registry offices could be closed; the first being the registry office of South Grey in the town of Durham, which is scheduled to close September 30.

Due to the fact that this session is fast drawing to adjournment and the September 30 date will come before we return for the next session, I request that we set aside the business of the day to have an emergency debate to discuss this very important issue, which will cut service to 28 municipalities in Ontario and will be a special hardship to the rural municipalities of Ontario where distance is an important factor.

Our winters in the Durham area not only make another 60 miles to register a document hazardous, but sometimes impossible. The extra cost in time and travelling is going to be borne by the public. In Durham, the proposed saving is wages to this government is $25,000 compared to increased costs to the public of $209,461.65 in extra time and travelling. These figures have been worked out by the Grey law association. The government's duty is surely to serve.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you sure of that? [11:15]

Mr. McKessock: Cutting the ministry's budget by $25,000 to cost the public about 10 times more for that service is surely not feasible. I certainly agree with saving money if there were a true saving, but no studies have been done to find if there really is a saving or not. It is just being assumed by the ministry that if you put two offices together it is going to work and be a saving.

In the case of the Grey county law—again, the one I'm familiar with—Durham is going to be moved to the Owen Sound registry office, which is in the county building. The county does not want any more. They are already busting at the seams and there is no room there. There would not be enough parking space for the extra work load. The building would have to be expanded and then where would the savings be?

Maybe Brampton offices would be large enough to hold Orangeville, or maybe Kitchener large enough to hold Guelph and Cambridge—or would they?

Mr. Worton: Never!

Mr. McKessock: Bigness is not always better. The minister tells me some of these offices have been 53 days behind in their registrations, and they have to bus in help from other registry offices to catch up. In Durham you get same-day service. Do we want to spoil that service?

We must remember that these registry offices are one thing that pays for the government. The Durham office took in $222-557.49 last year, but I realize it is hard to talk business with a minister whose ministry does not receive this money. It goes directly into general revenue; also, the rent of the registry office is paid by the Ministry of Government Services. The only thing the minister has in his control is salaries, so he cuts here, with no business approach or realistic outlook in the matter. If salaries are the only thing that he has to look at, then let's look at who's not doing a job and cut there.

When you divide the number of full-time employees into the number of registrations—and I want to especially bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker—you find that Durham last year registered 1,866 registrations per full-time employee per year. The provincial average was only 1,326. This is 500 more registrations per employee in the Durham office than the provincial average. This is taken from the figures the minister has provided me. Surely with efficiency like that this is one office that should be left open.

If the minister has to find $750,000 to $1 million, there is another way to do it. It would be to add another 75 cents to the present cost of the registrations, and he would have it. This would not be a hardship to anybody and would leave our present service to the people of this province in place.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you to rule in favour of setting aside the business of the House today so that a number of the members whose ridings will be involved will get a chance to present their views to the minister and uphold the service to our small communities, which continue to get pushed aside.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, while I sympathize with the problem that's presented by the member—

Mr. Nixon: Don't tell me you're not supporting it?

Mr. Martel:—I can't find where this creates an emergency.

Mr. McKessock: Only if it were in Sudbury.

Mr. Nixon: Only if they were closing it in Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell you they closed down an office with 45 jobs and sent it to Sault Ste. Marie, and in my riding they also closed down an institution which cost 200 jobs. So don't give me that crap. Don't give me your nonsense this morning.

Mr. Nixon: You should have done something about it instead of sitting idly by.

Mr. Martel: Everything's an emergency. A party that constantly talks about cutting bureaucracy is here this morning advocating not only that you maintain but at the same time increase the cost in services to people.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, you want them closed; I see.

Mr. Breithaupt: You want them closed.

Mr. Martel: You can't have it both ways. I simply want to make the point that I sympathize with the problem that has to be discussed between the ministry and the people affected, but surely if this House is going to start to meet on an emergency basis every time the government decides to relocate, then we could spend the next three years doing nothing but having emergency debates. We simply don't believe that is in any way, shape or form an emergency.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This debate began last April, of course. A very fundamental part of this debate—beginning some eight or ten weeks ago—was, of course, the thrust which the Liberal Party of this province likes to take so much credit for, and that is the thrust to cut government spending. Of course, that debate has to unfold as the consequences start to unfold.

Mr. Nixon: They should start by reducing the size of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Needless to say, governments have a responsibility to respond to that obligation which we imposed on ourselves. But now, with the position of the Liberal Party—

Mr. Nixon: We are thinking of a few ministers who are not carrying their weight.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—in that OHIP debate, to in fact cut back where we think it's reasonable and sensible, one of the places we have to look at, it seems to me, is the place where the service being provided is to a minimal number of people actually using that service. That is the lawyers; there are two law firms in Durham.

Mr. Nixon: Defending the indefensible actions of the government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: To address the urgency of this, I have to point out that this began eight weeks ago. It began with the requirement that this government continue its program of cutting back.

Mr. Mancini: Larry Grossman for Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And that party over there, the Liberal Party will call us to an emergency debate every time we actually take a step to cut red tape, to cut the number of civil servants—

Mr. Nixon: Just when your decisions are wrong.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and to in fact move to rationalize our services. Since the announcement was made that we intended to close the Durham office, there have been something like 32 question periods during which this matter could have been raised.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's been raised.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was raised twice in 32 days. There have been at least 10 or 12 days of budget debate and no one said a word about it in the budget debate. There have been all sorts of opportunities, and the people of Durham have availed themselves of those opportunities, to deal with this through the media.

Mr. Breithaupt: And here's another one.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They have been into my office. Everyone in Durham well knows that I have agreed to meet each and every person from Durham, let alone delegations or groups, among those who have asked to meet with me.

Mr. Nixon: They feel you are not receptive.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have now met with three or four groups. I believe one of the groups that came in to see me has also had the opportunity to meet with the caucus of all three parties, including my own.

Mr. Nixon: They are very concerned about your policy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So all this process of consultation has continued. To address the urgency again, I must point out that—

Mr. Breithaupt: You are going to close it anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—this consultation process and exchange of information has been going on with the ministry providing all sorts of detail and information to the people requesting it. We proposed as the first step in this to close the Colborne and Port Hope registry offices as well.

Those people came in and they were successful in making some early points to me and I agreed to defer a final decision on those offices until the end of this year. Now that had nothing to do with any emergency debate in this House. It resulted from the dialogue that—

Mr. Worton: There was a Conservative in that area, that makes a difference.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—we encouraged between the people in Northumberland and myself. My friend, the member for Northumberland (Mr. Rowe)—

Mr. Nixon: Northumberland?—that's not in Durham; you've got those places mixed up; this is in Grey county, you are mixed up.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and the member for Quinte (Mr. O'Neill)—you weren't listening—agreed to continue to process and to defer these two other offices. If there are any points to be made which we feel are good enough to warrant—

Mr. Nixon: Then you will make them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—a slowdown in our program to save money and to cut bureaucracy, then of course the decision will be changed. I do want to take this opportunity to say at the present time I have seen absolutely nothing which indicates that there is any sense or justification in deferring the Durham closing as we have decided to do in the case of Port Hope and Colborne. We will continue to meet with any group from Durham that wishes to meet with us. Finally, I would point out that the member has some wrong information. He indicated that the Durham office will close before we get back here. We have indicated to the people, and always have in Durham, that we intend to close that office as of October 31.

Mr. Nixon: Shame.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So the process will continue. We will continue to meet with people; and I am sure the people from Durham will continue to operate as effectively as they have through the media, which is right and proper.

Mr. Lewis: You certainly do single out Durham for special punishment, though.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In conclusion, the member for Scarborough West reminds me of my concluding remarks—

Mr. Nixon: That's where they tried to close the hospital.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—I would like to say in the last minute of my response—

Mr. Lewis: The hospital, the Hydro corridor, the registry office.

Mr. Worton: It's the ghost of Eric Winkler.

Mr. Lewis: What is the vendetta against Durham?

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—I should like to say that we do in fact not have the slightest bit of a vendetta going on against Durham.

Mr. Nixon: It looks that way.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, it may appear that way to you but I want to assure everyone that I know some of the lawyers who are practising in that area. They are all very fine, fair, decent, honest, reputable lawyers who have served their clients very well.

Mr. Worton: Conservatives.

Mr. Breithaupt: The clients are going to have to pay for the loss.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The people who work in the registry office have done a fine job and the town—

Mr. Lewis: All lawyers are decent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—of course, has a long and excellent history. We think their people will continue to be well served by the change we are proposing.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister's time has expired. This matter has been the subject of questions in the question period, and there is ample time to raise it by way of questioning the minister in the House and the budget debate. In my view, the subject matter of this motion does not have the degree of urgency that is required under standing order 30, and I would have to rule that the motion is not in order.

Mr. Worton: Kind of like Loto Canada, isn't it?

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TOWNSHIP OF PELEE ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved second reading of Bill 121, An Act respecting the Township of Pelee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Snow: No, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have any more to say than what was said on the introduction of the bill. It is a very brief bill that provides authority for the township of Pelee Island to run a ferry service from Sandusky, Ohio, to Pelee Island and to points in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Essex South.

Mr. Mancini: I think this is as tall as I can get, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: Stand on your seat.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill 121, An Act respecting the Township of Pelee. Mr. Speaker, may I draw to the attention of the House that the township of Pelee is the most southern part of the whole country of Canada, and is situated in my riding, and I have had the honour of representing the township of Pelee for nearly three years.

Over the past three years, brought to my attention on very numerous occasions has been the lack of good and fair transportation for the people on the island and for the tourists who would like to get to the island, and from the island to the Ontario mainland, mainly the ports of Kingsville and Leamington.

Through the initiative of the Pelee Island council, and with very successful meetings with the Deputy Minister of Transportation and Communications we have been able to put in service a second ferry which operates between Pelee Island and the mainland, and this ferry has subsidized the service of the federal ferry.

The people of the township of Pelee wish to extend their sincere thanks to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for the vessel which is under provincial jurisdiction. However, that one single vessel was not large enough and was not capable to serve all of the needs of Pelee Island, and that is why it is necessary to maintain the second ferry which comes under federal jurisdiction.

It is a well known fact that the federal authorities do not wish any longer to be part of the transportation system between Pelee Island and Sandusky, Ohio, and the Ontario mainland. So I would like to congratulate the Minister of Transportation and Communications. I would like to extend my sincere thanks to two of his very fine civil servants—Mr. Frank Norman and Mr. Charles Meyers—who have worked very diligently on behalf of the people of Pelee Island so that we could secure this legislation so that the township council of Pelee Island could operate the federal ferry.

Although in the past three years we have made some gain as far as equitable transportation for Pelee Island, I would be remiss in my responsibility of representing the people of Pelee Island if I said that the transportation that we will now have, after Bill 121 receives third reading, would be wholly satisfactory.

[11:30]

I think the minister and the ministry staff know full well that Pelee Island requires a large single ferry with high-speed capability to serve its needs in the tourist area and in the agricultural area.

Hopefully, in the two or three years to come, we will be able to continue our consultation with the minister and we will be able to secure an even better ferry service for the township of Pelee.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, of course I and my party support this bill which will give some improvement in the service to the township of Pelee. I would like to ask the minister whether, when he winds up the debate, he could indicate whether there is going to be any provincial assistance in the way of a subsidy such as road subsidies or this sort of thing, to the use of this ferry. Obviously this takes the place of what could be a bridge. I know it's too far but—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Do you know where Pelee Island is?

Mr. Swart: Of course. I've been to Pelee Island. I know where it is.

Mr. Mancini: Mel, slow the bill down.

Mr. Swart: But it takes the place, nevertheless, of a road system.

Mr. Mancini: Let the record show that he's slowing the bill down.

Mr. Nixon: Does he want a bridge?

Hon. Mr. Snow: A bridge to Pelee Island!

Mr. Swart: It's the only contact that these people who live on the island of Pelee have. It seems to me that it's not unreasonable that there should be some form of road subsidy to the municipality of Pelee in the operation of this ferry. I'm not sure whether there is or not, but I hope the minister will comment on that. In other words, it's really costly, of course, for people now to get in and out of Pelee Island.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say briefly that I support this bill. It's been a problem for some time. Having sat on county council, I can recall visiting Pelee Island a number of years ago with the county council. At that time they were looking for some assistance in getting an airport for one of their transportation needs in one part of the county. It's been a problem. Now that the federal government has more or less removed itself from the situation, it's certainly going to take some co-operation.

I think it's the responsibility of the federal government as well to see that adequate transportation facilities are available to this township 15 miles from the mainland. With this authority for the municipality to operate it, perhaps some agreements can be made with both levels of government. I don't think the federal government should in any way relieve themselves of any responsibility. I believe that is something that certainly has to be considered. For 71 years, I think, they have in some way subsidized and assisted in seeing that transportation was made available.

I think the member for Essex South was quite correct in saying that one good-sized ship that had the speed and so forth is necessary. It made me think of the improvement made in the area of Manitoulin Island in the last two years with the new ship they have there for transportation. It was indeed an improvement. We should maybe be looking at something similar in the Pelee area. Hopefully, this could be arranged with the co-operation of the two levels of government, federal and provincial, and in some way operated by the township.

I certainly hope we keep this in mind because there is certainly the potential for tourists, and we also don't want to forget the agricultural resources that are available through the good land in that area—soya beans and seed corn plants located on the island.

Mr. Mancini: Pheasant farms.

Mr. Ruston: Of course, the pheasant farms, as we all know, are their main attraction each fall.

Mr. Mancini: World renowned.

Mr. Ruston: This is something we should all keep in mind. The facilities should be available to maintain this township. It is, after all, a part of Ontario and a part of Canada, and I think it's everyone's responsibility to see that adequate transportation is available to it.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to stress the point that Pelee Island is the most southern point in Canada. I think it's a point that our Ministry of Industry and Tourism should come along and sell so that we could attract that many more tourists who would come from Sandusky, just across the lake, and be able to come into the province of Ontario.

Mr. Mancini: The minister should listen to this.

Mr. B. Newman: After all, Mr. Minister, the slogan this year is, "We Treat you Royally." We certainly would like to see our Yankee friends come across into Pelee Island to help the economy of that island and, for this, we commend you for introducing this bill. We hope that it resolves many of the problems that they have had there with transportation in the past.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I thank the honourable members for the support of this bill. I'm sure they are very familiar with the reason for this legislation—the fact that the federal government who have operated a ferry serving Pelee Island for such a great number of years, last year notified the island and the province that they no longer intended to do so. Even though many meetings were held and many points were made that the service was still required, the federal minister has decided to discontinue their participation. But after several presentations and representations by myself and fellow members and on our recommendation, the boat owned by the federal government was put up for tender for someone in the private sector to operate this ferry service.

The township of Pelee Island saw fit to submit their proposal to the federal government, which has been accepted, to lease this federal ferry and to operate it, hopefully, on a private sector type of basis because they feel that the operation of this particular ferry will not require subsidy. Of course, the Upper Canada—the other ferry which is owned by the province and which we supplied to the island last year when the private operator give up the service—is also run by the township in agreement with the ministry and we do subsidize the operation of the ferry service from the island to the Ontario mainland.

Unfortunately, the Upper Canada, although it gave good service, as I understand it, and the islanders were quite happy with it, is not large enough to carry some of the agricultural equipment and the large loads of fertilizer, seed corn and so on that are required on the island, especially the large combines and tractors. So it is very necessary to the economy of the township of Pelee Island to have additional service.

I'd like to compliment the township on their own initiative to step forward when the federal government offered the ship for tender and to put forward their proposal. They're not asking for a subsidy and they want to continue to operate this service from Sandusky because of the importance of the tourist industry to the island. Most of their tourists, I'm told, come from Sandusky Port. So I was happy to bring forward this minor piece of legislation which we found was necessary to allow them to proceed and operate this service in international waters.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Kennedy, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 110, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the parliamentary assistant have an opening statement?

Mr. Kennedy: No, Mr. Speaker, the changes are just to update the Education Act, 1974, in relation to the dates contained in the recent changes to the Municipal Elections Act and that's the substance of it, and a few changes in clerks' responsibilities.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne), who is our education critic, had to be in London today and he asked me to make a comment or two on second reading of the bill. Certainly we have no objections to this at all. It simply lines up the time for the election and the first meeting of the school board with the changes brought about by the Municipal Elections Act in four municipal councils. We think that this is of course a necessary change to keep school board work in step with the municipal councils.

Rather than send this to committee, I was interested in the first section of Bill 110. There is a definition of county municipality and I, for the life of me, can't decide why that sort of a definition is required unless it may be is to preclude some sort of duplication in representation. Otherwise, the bill seems to be very straightforward. It is an example, however, of how complex a relatively simple change seems to be when it comes to making the changes in statutes which accomplish it.

After all, we changed the election date and it gives rise to Bill 110 and Bill 111 with all of the complexities and ramifications and references to other pieces of legislation involved. It is a great credit to the draftsmen and of course to the parliamentary assistant that this matter is done in such a careful and expeditious way.

Mr. Swart: As the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has said, this bill, as stated in the explanatory notes as well, provides necessary changes due to the change in the Municipal Elections Act and certain other necessary housekeeping changes, and I support it. However, I have one concern—and perhaps the parliamentary assistant would comment on this—and that is with regard to section 2, subsection 9, which sets the time when a council may pass a bylaw to change the methods of electing the school board and although this may only be a minor thing, it is different to the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act amendments which we made in this House last night—

Mr. Nixon: I remember.

Mr. Swart: —which has nothing to do with the election of the chairman.

Mr. Nixon: I thought you wanted to run that through again.

Mr. Swart: We should, just for your sake.

Mr. Warner: Why not?

Mr. Swart: I proposed an amendment which was accepted by the government and, quite frankly, I wasn't aware that this bill set a different time so that a municipal council, if they want to change the composition of a council or a county council, will now have to pass the bylaw at least 30 days prior to the last posting of the offices for which elections are going to be held. This provides that the date is September 1. It moved from October 1 to September 1. If I had known that, I probably would have moved that amendment to the act so they would have been in conformity and it seems to me there is value in having conformity so that municipal councils don't get confused on this. If a change is going to be made, I think change should be made in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act rather than in this act. I like this one better. It's clearcut by the first of September. But apart from that minor comment, we fully support the bill.

[11:45]

Mr. Warner: The bill in section 2 sets out the boundaries and how they can be changed. One of the concerns that was brought forward during all of the hearings on the Robarts report was the different kind of approach towards boundaries for school trustees as opposed to those that might be required for aldermen. In other words, the suggestion that seemed to make a great deal of sense to a lot of people was that the boundaries for trustees should follow the school pattern in Toronto. I am not sure about communities outside of Metro. Within Metro, it is mostly now a situation of a family of schools where there is a junior school, a senior school and a high school occupying a certain neighbourhood. It is perhaps a very large neighbourhood but, nonetheless, it is a neighbourhood.

The boundaries of that school population would not necessarily follow straight lines, nor would they necessarily be in conjunction with the boundaries as set out for the ward system. Obviously, there is some concern that the ward system should fall in line for the trustees as well as for the aldermen.

I am wondering if the Minister of Education (Mr. Wells) has a concern that it would make more sense to urge the municipalities, when they go about trying to set new boundaries, to set out their ward boundaries in conjunction with their school system and then have the election for both aldermen and trustees on the basis of new boundaries that would be coterminous but would also reflect the school system as opposed to the arbitrary way and the neat geographic way of simply setting out straight lines, particularly in urban areas. I am wondering if the minister has given that matter any thought and if he has any comments on it.

Mr. Kennedy: Responding to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, that definition change was made to accommodate situations, specifically in Oxford, where the representation of the city of Woodstock would have resulted in an imbalance of trustees in their view. That covers that situation.

In reply to the member for Welland-Thorold, the date of September 1 is to have this in place at that time.

Mr. Swart: I recognize that. It's just that it is not the same as in the Municipal Act for reorganizing municipalities. It seems to me that they should conform.

Mr. Kennedy: That is true enough. In response to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, outside Metro, this provides, as is the case, for representation based on the equalized residential and farm assessment. Within the city of Metropolitan Toronto, the representation is established and this piece of legislation wouldn't change that. I recognize the honourable member's comments and we will take them under consideration, if the observations are as I understand them.

I trust that answers the queries raised. I thank the members for bringing them forward.

MUNICIPALITY OF METROPOLITAN TORONTO AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Kennedy, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 111, An Act to amend the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto Act.

Mr. Kennedy: Here again it is self-explanatory. It tidies up the Metropolitan Toronto Act in relation to the Education Act, 1974.

Mr. Nixon: We support it.

Mr. Warner: This is quite good. We are really expediting things. We support the bill, but the comment must be made that it is regrettable we are not going to get any changes with respect to the structure of education in Metro Toronto prior to the 1978 municipal election.

We had all anticipated getting some response from the Minister of Education in relation to the Robarts report and the subsequent white paper which was released, because there are some considerable problems with respect to the operation of the educational system in Metro Toronto. There is a very serious problem as to how the Metro board functions and whether or not it does function adequately. There are some concerns about the way in which the Metro board is able to handle its broader responsibilities, in the way in which it disperses funds.

We had a question in the House just the other day. The government House leader will certainly recall, as he recalls everything that is raised here, that there was a question about the additional money being given from the ministry to Metro for special ed, and yet there was a decline in the number of teachers. How does that happen? What is wrong with the mechanism of Metro Toronto that the money doesn't end up being spent where it is supposed to be spent?

There are considerable problems and questions. We thought on this side that the legislation from the government regarding the white paper and the Robarts report would help to solve some of the problems. It is with regret that all we have at this point is a housekeeping bill and not the kind of substantive material which we really require, if we are to get the education system in Metro Toronto back on the track and functioning better than it is now.

Having said all of that, however, we certainly give our support to the bill and wish it speedy passage.

Mr. Kennedy: I note the comments of the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. As he says, it is quite true the issues he has raised have been discussed at some length. The housekeeping nature of the bill is to make these changes in order to have the machinery in place for elections this fall. The other broader issues he has brought forward are of a concern and ongoing.

BUILDING CODE AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 91, An Act to amend the Building Code Act, 1974.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. M. N. Davison: During second reading, the parliamentary assistant and I and a number of other members engaged in a discussion that couldn't properly take place because there was no room on second reading for questions and answers, so to speak. There was one matter I wanted to clear up with the parliamentary assistant before we passed by this section.

The concern I originally raised with the parliamentary assistant was to whether or not there would be a necessity for a person wanting to build his own home to become a member of HUDAC because of these changes to the building code. I was quite able to accept the minister's assurance that no, that was not necessary because of the definitions of that other piece of legislation. Individuals can build their own homes without having to belong to HUDAC. I think that's a very useful way to proceed.

What I'm still unclear about is what happens if, after having built his own home, an individual chooses to sell it. Will people be denied a right to sell it until they become members of HUDAC and have another inspection of the home, or will the ministry impose, or is there in regulations or legislation an imposition of a residency requirement in the home? Perhaps the minister could respond to that issue and then we can pass by this section.

Mr. Pope: I thank the honourable member for raising that question. After second reading we did have discussions on this matter. I'm advised that the test is that if the person constructing the home occupies it he is entitled to sell it without being registered.

There hasn't been a test case, to the best of my knowledge. I may be corrected if I'm wrong, but there hasn't been a test case as to what period of time of occupancy constitutes occupancy in the way you might have with some federal or other provincial statutes. Basically, the test is if the owner occupies the home he is not required to register under the HUDAC program.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I think we have arrived at an understanding. What you are saying, as I understand it, is that there's no legislation or regulations on the books that would specifically explain what the occupancy or residency requirement would be in terms of time, and if there should be any dispute that would probably be something that would end up in the courts and the courts would then have to interpret the legislation.

Mr. Pope: I think if we arrived at some kind of a problem in that respect we would probably either have to move through the courts or through regulation. I think the honourable member has suggested that in his initial comments and that's probably correct.

Section 3 agreed to.

Sections 4 to 8, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Davison moves that in section 9(2)(4) the words "one year" be struck out and the words "two years" be substituted therefor.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The amendment is obviously self-explanatory. As I understand it, there was at some point in recent history a one-year time on this question as to when proceedings can be commenced. The legislation or the regulation was changed at some point to six months, and during the consultative process with municipalities and others in regard to the building code it was suggested to the ministry that six months was not adequate and, therefore, they should go back to the old requirement of one year.

[12:00]

When we're talking about building, we're not dealing with something relatively simple like a transistor radio; we're dealing with a very huge investment on the part of the buyer and with a situation where quite serious problems may not show up in the first year.

While I think someone could quite properly stand up and argue that the period in which an action or a proceeding could be commenced should be five years or 10 years or 20 years, I simply put forward the amendment in the spirit of reasonable compromise and suggest that what we do is accept the amendment, raise it to two years instead of one year, and try that out for a few years and see what happens.

If it's absolutely not necessary and obviously not necessary to have a two-year period, then we can go back to one year. On the other hand, as I suspect, if it may seem that two years is not long enough, perhaps we can extend it to three or four or beyond. I move the amendment in that spirit of reasonableness. I hope that it would be acceptable to the ministry and to the other opposition party.

Mr. Nixon: Before the parliamentary assistant comments on the amendment, we're quite interested in its provisions. I have just been discussing it with some of my colleagues, and our experience is that we have not had complaints indicating that time beyond one year would be required. It might be. If there's some record of a problem in this connection that would be alleviated by changing the limit, I would like to hear about it. Otherwise, our tendency is not to support the amendment. I would like to hear from the parliamentary assistant as to what he has to say on it.

Mr. Pope: I believe that there may be a bit of a misunderstanding. We're not discussing protection under the HUDAC home warranty plan provided to individual home owners which will enable individual home owners to seek redress in obtaining fundamental repairs to their premises. What we are talking about is section 23 of the Building Code Act which provides for prosecution for the furnishing of false information on any statement or failure to comply with any order, direction or other requirement made under the act.

The honourable member from the New Democratic Party is quite right that this change has been made to the legislation in response specifically to a resolution from the city of Owen Sound which was adopted at a regular meeting of city council held on May 30, 1977. There are a lot of "whereas" clauses, but I think I would just say that it says: "Now therefore be it resolved that the province of Ontario be requested to amend the Building Code Act, 1974, to provide that proceedings to enforce a contravention of the code be initiated within one year after the time of the contravention and that imprisonment may be for a term of not more than six months."

I might say this resolution was supported, by the city of Thunder Bay in a communication to the ministry dated June 14, 1977; by the city of Waterloo, the borough of Etobicoke and the borough of East York in a communication of June 20, 1977; by the city of Windsor in a communication dated June 27, 1977; by the city of St. Thomas in a letter dated June 29, 1977; by the city of Kitchener in a communication dated June 27, 1977; and by the cities of Brampton, Port Colborne, Niagara Falls, St. Catharines, Stratford, the borough of Scarborough, the cities of Toronto, Hamilton, Cornwall, Woodstock, Guelph, Oshawa, London, Mississauga, the borough of North York and the city of Barrie, as well as by the Ontario Building Officials Association.

Mr. Nixon: They favour one year rather than six months?

Mr. Pope: They favour one year; that's correct. To give a little more background, the Municipal Act provided under section 466(2) that every such finance is recoverable under the Summary Convictions Act, all of the provisions of which apply, "except that proceedings to enforce bylaws passed under section 38 of the Planning Act or any predecessor of such section may be instituted within one year after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose."

Basically, prior to the proclamation of the Building Code Act of 1974, building bylaws were made by municipalities under the authority of sections found in the Municipal Act, and under the authority found in the Planning Act. Proceedings to enforce bylaws made under section 38 of the Planning Act could be instituted within one year after the time when the subject matter of the proceedings arose.

The Building Code Act in 1974, by incorporating the summary conviction procedures, provided for a six-month period. As I previously mentioned, it was at the request of numerous municipalities throughout Ontario, whose representations were received in the year 1977, and after consultation with the construction industry and with the appropriate building official association that it was decided the one-year period would be appropriate.

The basic problem that we have with any extension beyond the one year period, is what could develop to be an evidentiary problem, and also the fact that justice delayed is justice denied. These are some of the situations that we are rather worried about. We would prefer to remain with the one-year period. If that is inappropriate for any reason, particularly with respect to larger buildings—I think this is what my friend may be worrying about—then we will have another look at it. I think with the provision in the amendments to the Building Code Act requiring the filing of plans and specifications with the ministry, we shouldn't have that kind of problem in obtaining adequate information to prosecute.

I appreciate the concern. It was a concern that the ministry considered in making the recommendations but they decided to stick with the recommendations of the city and building officials.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Parliamentary Assistant, would I be correct then in understanding you to say that if over the next few years it becomes evident that there are some problems with a one-year limit, the ministry will then very seriously consider raising it to two?

Mr. Pope: I would just like to clarify that. If there are situations brought to our attention which demonstrate on a general basis the inadequacy of that time period—and I think the honourable member will be bringing some of these to our attention if they occur—I think then the ministry would have to have a look at it and would be quite willing to do so.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Davison's amendment please say "aye."

Those opposed please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the motion defeated.

MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES ACT

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 85, An Act to revise the Ministry of Correctional Services Act.

On section 9:

Hon. Mr. Drea: There were two statements made in connection with section 9. They were made on the question of letters and so forth. I don't know whether they are on 9 or 10. It seems to me that we didn't conclude 9. There was an amendment on 9 involving something else but at the time when the business of inmate mail to MPs and MPPs was discussed, I would like to point out that remarks were made that the federal system does not censor or read or open letters to and from MPs. That is not correct; they do.

Mr. M. N. Davison: So does the RCMP.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for High Park-Swansea. I was not in the chair before, has your motion been put?

Mr. Ziembra: Yes, it has, but what I would like to do is withdraw the motion because I lumped in the MPPs' visiting rights, and mail with another amendment dealing with nongovernmental agencies. On the advice of legislative counsel, it has been suggested that I place the nongovernmental agencies amendment first. When that carries, I could place the MPPs' rights amendment as section 9(a). When the bill is printed again it could perhaps be number 10 and all the succeeding sections could be renumbered.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: What you are saying is that the motion you have already put you want split into two separate motions?

Mr. Ziembra: Yes, exactly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ziembra moves to add to section 9 of the bill the words: "Nongovernmental agencies shall direct and be accountable for persons serving as volunteers with them in programs in partnership with the ministry."

Mr. Ziembra: Volunteers who work in the prison system, I feel, should be free to criticize the officials as private citizens. They are not employees of the minister. They are not answerable in the same way that civil servants are answerable to the minister. I think these volunteers would lose whatever originality or autonomy they have when they go into our prison system and work in the interests of inmates.

If the minister insists that volunteers' services should be under the direction of one of his employees, then as far as I am concerned he shouldn't be allowing these visitors to come to jail, if that is going to be his approach. That isn't the case now. I know that the John Howard Society has programs of its own in co-operation with the ministry. They are not answerable to or under the direct control of the deputy minister or any of the other correctional experts.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's not true.

Mr. Ziemba: If there is a problem with probationaries or parolees, the government should reassess its whole approach to using these private agencies and insisting on having direct control over them. Speaking from the point of view of the volunteer agencies, if they wanted to be under the direction of a civil servant they would become civil servants. They wouldn't be operating as they do in a dedicated and compassionate way as private citizens.

For that reason, I am moving this amendment. I think it is in order. I am willing to be reasonable about it, if the minister thinks that it is too loose. I don't buy his argument that three or four people could go out and form an agency and organize a breakout. If he thinks these volunteer agencies should be identified, then perhaps he could identify them in regulation at the end of the bill. If he wants to tighten it up or bring in an amendment that could speak to the principle of autonomy for volunteer agencies, I would be very pleased to withdraw this one and accept his.

Mr. Bradley: Speaking to the amendment, when we discussed this in the earlier sessions, both the critic for the New Democratic Party and I indicated that we had had contact most particularly with the John Howard Society and Elizabeth Fry Society and that they had expressed concern. The minister gave rather a lengthy answer the last time this issue was discussed in the House, indicating that he did not feel that it would jeopardize the position of anyone from the John Howard Society or the Elizabeth Fry Society or any other recognized group that was doing volunteer work within the correctional services system.

[12:15]

However, I did indicate at that time that if his ministry had an amendment which could accommodate their wishes, I would be interested, along with the member for High Park-Swansea, in at least having the ministry explore that, if it is at all possible and if the minister and his officials feel it is a real problem. Apparently the people from these groups do feel rather strongly that their programs will be interfered with by being under the direction of an employee of the Ministry of Correctional Services.

I think we recognize that the responsibility for what is going on within the correctional services system in Ontario rests with the ministry employees and, ultimately, with the Minister of Correctional Services. I think this is probably the argument that the minister most hung his hat on, the idea that ultimately these people have to be responsible to someone within the system, because he has to accept the responsibility for what happens within the Ministry of Correctional Services. The head of the John Howard Society or of the Elizabeth Fry Society, for instance, may not want to be completely responsible for certain actions that might take place within the correctional services system over which they had no direct control and supervision.

I would be interested in hearing any further comments the minister might have to justify the position he's adopted.

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I have met with two branches of the Elizabeth Fry Society since last Thursday and they were monumentally unconcerned; they didn't even know anything about this, and couldn't care less, even as late as last night. I just want to point that out.

This question isn't something that is restricted to the John Howard Society. The John Howard Society, eminent though its position may be, does not provide us with the bulk of our volunteer services. Across the province, the Salvation Army provides us with the bulk of those services. They think section 9 as it stands now is perfectly adequate.

As a matter of fact, people from the volunteer organizations—and many of them are not, as I keep emphasizing, umbrella social agencies; they are ad hoc groups, quite often from a particular parish or a particular church, not the entire church. Quite often they are from a convent or a theological school. Quite often they are just a group of people in a neighbourhood. They come in totally unstructured. These people point out that this section is entirely new. We have never mentioned the word "volunteer" in a ministry act before or an act under the former Department of Reform Institutions. What we are doing in this is recognizing that there are volunteer services provided.

In all fairness, what the member for High Park-Swansea mentioned aren't volunteer services; they are professional services. The difficulty with his amendment and the alternatives put forward in one proposal by the John Howard Society is that nobody from either group—nobody—has either written to me or communicated to me. There was one communication from the John Howard Society to the deputy minister. But notwithstanding the fact that we debated this once, and my comments are on record, there has not even been a phone call.

When a volunteer comes into an institution, there is the question of security. One of the basic difficulties that many volunteers have in becoming acclimatized to institutions is the question of security. In a great many cases they do not understand why they cannot do this at this time. We've gone to great lengths in the past six months to orient every volunteer who comes in, to tell him exactly why we have these regulations, which to lay people like myself, and I'm sure to honourable members, quite often seems to be very picky little things. When they are explained by the institution, they are rather substantial matters involving security.

As a matter of fact, last night I was in Ottawa, where there is the largest volunteer group in the province in one place, in the detention centre. Through the co-operation of Algonquin College and our own staff, we have produced a rather extensive film, for the magnificent cost of $50, which provides a complete orientation, not only for new inmates coming into that detention centre but also for volunteers.

The volunteers there, and in other places where I have been, are quite satisfied with the ministry program; and I've been to virtually every volunteer recognition night in the past six months across this province in various communities. What they want, and what we are providing, is a volunteer coordinator from the inside of the institution so that there is a specialist in putting them into time slots or into programs and allocating those resources.

Were I to accept this amendment, that means we would have absolutely no control over the people who came into our institutions. The full responsibility would go to their agency. That is a rather awesome responsibility, and I simply don't think that social agencies, or groups of people, or people banded together because of the fact that they have a common religious persuasion, or community outlook or what have you, want to be placed in this position.

The other suggestion is, why don't you list the agencies by regulation? There are groups of volunteers who form up very rapidly across this province. Sometimes it's only one or two people who come in and say: "Look, I would like to get involved in one of your programs, I think I can help." How in the world do we list that person's name in there to recognize to whom he is accountable? So what you're doing, in effect, is taking a rather simple section which recognizes that volunteers do operate under the direction of the ministry personnel so, therefore, the responsibility is ours, and you're turning it into an infinitely complicated system whereby people almost have to get certification and recognition.

I don't want to be placed in the position that where the Salvation Army in a community hasn't been providing services to the federal government or to mental health, all of a sudden I have to pass a regulation recognizing the Salvation Army for purposes of that particular institution. I find that totally degrading. They don't have to be recognized now. We have taken the precautions. We have given them a particular status in our ministry that does not exist in other ministries where there are volunteers. Since the overriding question in terms of institutions is security, I think that's very important.

Secondly, it's been brought to our attention that there are groups now that go in holus bolus and are not under our supervision. That is totally untrue. It may very well be that there are cases where we may take female inmates, because of the lack of numbers that would put them into a centre operated by us, and place them on a fee-for-service basis in a residence run by somebody else, but that person is under the direct supervision of the superintendent of the institution from whence they came until the sentence is completed.

If they are on parole, they are under the direct supervision of the probation officer, who is charged with the responsibility of ensuring that they conform to parole regulations. There has to be a consistency. This isn't the taking of ex-offenders, of people who have no responsibilities to the courts any more, nor the courts any control over them through us. You are dealing with people the courts have sentenced but who have not completed that sentence and are under our direct control.

In the field of outside probation, just straight probation, there is no problem. There is no problem at all, because for 98 or 99 per cent of their time these people are perfectly free in the community. They can do what they want within the terms of the probation order. They may attend upon a social agency, they may attend upon the ARF, they may attend upon AA, and so forth, so we don't have that control. What we're talking about is specific volunteer service where there are institutions.

On the very night that this was first raised just previously, the New Democratic Party, later joined by the official opposition, did produce an amendment upon the probation bill of the Ministry of Community and Social Services, and the thrust of that amendment was that if you were taking somebody and contracting out his probation from a public employee, which would be the ministry, then you had to ensure that there was a public employee in charge of that volunteer. That was exactly what was produced on the floor after considerable argument. This is precisely the same thing. If there's going to be consistency in programs for the offender, then there must be consistency. To do otherwise in this would be to negate all of the debates on that past evening regarding the use of volunteers or non-ministry employees. Everyone was most emphatic that there had to be controls, otherwise there might be very great difficulties that could not be resolved.

Mr. Nixon: If I understand the amendment, which I don't believe was put at this session but which was put at a previous session—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It has been put again at this session.

Mr. Nixon:—it has to do with access to these institutions by members of the Legislature.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That is not before us. That is another amendment which will follow this one.

All those in favour of Mr. Ziemba's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

The member for High Park-Swansea has a second amendment which he would like to be section 9(a). Is that correct?

Mr. Ziemba: Yes, I would like this amendment to be named section 9(a).

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ziemba moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto the following:

"9(a): (i) Every member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario is entitled to enter and inspect any correctional institution, community resource centre or other facility established or designated under this act for any purpose related to the member's duties and responsibilities as a member of the Legislative Assembly.

"(ii) Any letter addressed to an inmate of an institution from a member of the Legislative Assembly, the Ombudsman of Ontario or the correctional investigator of Canada, shall be immediately forwarded unopened to the inmate by the director or the superintendent of the institution or a person designated by either of them in writing.

"(iii) Any letter written by an inmate of an institution that is addressed to a member of the Legislative Assembly, the Ombudsman or the correctional investigator of Canada shall be immediately forwarded unopened to the member, Ombudsman or correctional investigator, as the case may be, by the director, superintendent or a person designated by them in writing."

Mr. Ziemba: The first part of the amendment is in regulation now and I don't think the minister has any quarrel with it. I take violent objection to this business about getting mail and sending mail and having it censored by the correctional staff. I was always under the impression that our letters were coming and going unopened. In fact the regulation suggests that in respect to section 28. It says: "An inmate shall be permitted at any time to send or receive letters from his solicitor, the minister, the deputy minister, members of the Ontario Legislative Assembly or members of the Parliament of Canada, and such letters shall be forwarded without delay and without the deletion of any part thereof." Doesn't that give the impression that you are passing on letters without opening them?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No.

Mr. Ziemba: Why would you put that in there if you are going to treat our letters the same as you treat any letters that come to these institutions? I think that whole regulation is really misleading.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Read the next section before you get so cocky.

[12:30]

Mr. Ziemba: I don't know why it wasn't spelled out for us, because I had a number of inmates write to me from institutions believing that their mail was confidential. Let me tell the minister that most of the letters weren't very controversial, they were just routine complaints. During the past six months when I was the NDP critic for this ministry, I haven't received one complaint about the ministry. What am I to believe? Is the ministry run so well that there isn't one prisoner complaining about the system? Or is someone intercepting those letters and not passing them on to me?

Mr. Nixon: They are fighting to get in.

Mr. Gregory: The third possibility is that you are the last one they would complain to.

Mr. Ruston: You've lost your credibility.

Mr. Ziemba: I don't know if I want to go along with the member for Mississauga East—that I would be the last one to complain to. It seems that the role of opposition members is to bring up problem areas. How are we going to know if there are any problems if people who are incarcerated haven't got open access to us? I think this is a fundamental right.

When the Mounties are criticized for starting an Operation Cathedral, I think this ministry isn't too far behind with its approach to mail. I don't believe the minister could give us one case where an elected representative would send a letter that would be seen as a threat to security. Why would that letter be opened? There is no excuse that I can think of for opening mail other than simple curiosity—or perhaps an instinct for survival. Corrections staff is just making sure that people don't find out about what goes on in some of these institutions.

I would like to see all members support this amendment, because I think it is fundamental to individual rights.

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Chairman, let me disabuse the honourable member of the idea that we are suggesting in any way, shape or form that a member of this assembly would do something contrary to the Criminal Code in the contents of a written communication to a sentenced inmate, or to somebody being held for remand. The question is one of security. What are we supposed to do with an envelope that comes with a letterhead on it? How do we know that it is really your letterhead? Do we have to come back and say to the member, "Did you write a letter to Mr. So-and-so today?"

I will tell you, the Ombudsman and the correctional investigator who have this privilege—and that's in other acts; it's also in this—very valid; shouldn't be touched, going to either one of them—are very concerned about the security of their envelopes. Both are trying to develop a type of envelope only they will have total control over, so their names cannot be forged.

If the member for High Park-Swansea is to tell me today—and I don't think he can—that every single letterhead in his riding office, in his legislative office, is totally under his control; that I couldn't go there today and say, "I would like to see Mr. Ziembra's letterhead, because"—for a number of reasons—"I would like to have Mr. Ziembra's letterhead from his riding office, because I keep forgetting his address." Your secretary would provide that envelope and she wouldn't think twice about it, nor should she.

You're shaking your head. If you are to tell me that you're that security conscious in your riding office—

Mr. Ziembra: I'm not security conscious.

Hon. Mr. Drea:—then I suggest to you that you are confirming some of the reasoning that I have behind the stance I am taking.

It is not a regulation. It is part of the manual, it is not in regulations. The procedure now is that on the outgoing mail we have the right to check it. But it must be forwarded without deletion and without delay to the member—and the includes, by the way, the minister.

Sometimes they scan it, sometimes they just make sure there is no contraband. It is a spot check. I don't want to go into too many details because obviously we don't check every piece of mail going out and I don't want to tell people exactly what our procedures in general are.

On incoming mail, the letter is not read. When the member writes, and it is on his letterhead—this, of course, applies if the sender is thus identified. If a letter is sent in a plain white envelope, how are we to know the sender until we open it up? But in coming in, and I am drawing from our own regulations, all we do is slit the envelope to make sure there isn't contraband in it. We don't bother reading it. It is delivered to the inmate without delay.

What you are asking us to do is, by virtue of the letterhead or some type of identification that purports to be one of the 125 members here, to completely throw out security. I may say there is a legal case on this. There is a legal case where, in the trial division and at the federal Court of Appeal, they have upheld the right of the correctional system to open mail.

The particular case, for those who are interested, is Solosky versus the Queen. The argument was that correspondence to a solicitor should not be opened. At the Federal Court, trial division and at the Federal Court of Appeal that has been turned down. It is now a stated case before the Supreme Court of Canada.

So even if it was the will of the House today that they might want to disregard the admonitions I have made about security, here we would be trying to pass legislation which might be directly contrary to the view of the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada when it came down. I don't question the right of this assembly to do so.

Mr. Nixon: I hope not.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am not suggesting that at all. But neither have I ever known this assembly, when it did pass legislation prematurely, because the Supreme Court of Canada was ruling on a procedure, that it didn't have to amend itself or didn't choose to amend itself afterwards.

It is purely a matter of security. Obviously this matter was debated at some length previously, when the Ombudsman Act was being written. The section was put in the Ombudsman Act, put into our act, that his mail is to be left unopened, and rightly so.

With the correctional investigator, in the case of where we have a federal inmate being temporarily with us either on remand pending a trial for parole, it's the same thing.

Even there, I suggest to you, there is grave concern by the Ombudsman about security. I just don't think it is practical to throw it wide open and I don't think it would produce the effects.

Let me once again disabuse the member of this, we don't stop mail going. If you haven't received a communication it is because some people haven't chosen to write to you. I have had forwarded copies of communications from inmates to virtually every member of this House. They come over to my office for a reply or they have received this, it is addressed directly to them.

I can tell you, my mail is down. I think the reason that the mail may be down is the fact that they are going to the Ombudsman directly. That is why the Ombudsman is there. The other night it was mentioned that it was an affront for me to say that I thought the Ombudsman was the proper person to handle it.

Let's be very practical about it. Suppose we do get a letter. I am talking now as a member of the assembly, not the minister. Supposing I do get a letter from somebody in the Thunder Bay correctional institution who may have lived in my riding. As a back bencher or as a member of this assembly I am not going to be able to go up to Thunder Bay to investigate, or if I am, I may have some other duties here that will preclude me going for a week. The Ombudsman has his correctional investigation staff in place across the province. He can get there within the day. He can examine it impartially.

It is all very well for the suggestion to come out that the MPPs should investigate everything. As I look across, there are some members there with far more service than I. Prior to many of the situations being covered in the Ombudsman Act the MPPs in this House had a tremendous, almost Herculean task to even be able to scratch the surface on the number of complaints because they were here, not available outside.

The final thing I would like to say to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, the man who is very close to me in the gambling scene, is that the question was raised about members' visits. What I left the last time was this: we now have in our administrative rules that the MPP is to be admitted, period.

The question was raised: "Should we not have it enshrined in legislation?" My thought was that it is a tradition of the House. We were prepared to file that for the convenience of the Clerk so he could tell new members in the future that this was a privilege extended automatically by virtue of membership in the House, rather than putting it into a ministry bill.

But I said at the time that if it was the collective will of the House that it preferred it to be in our act, we were perfectly willing to do so. On preference, I thought it much better to be a right of the assembly and to file it with the Clerk for his convenience. We don't have many rights in comparison with members of the House of Commons in Britain or of the House of Commons in Ottawa.

In view of the fact that this had been brought in as a right some years ago by a previous minister, the Honourable Allan Crossman, I thought it was preferable that it remains as a right of the entire House, rather than being put into specific legislative language in a specific act. But if it is the will of the House to have it in legislation, so be it.

Mr. Bradley: Speaking to the amendment, I would indicate support for clause (j) of the section 9(a) amendment. Notwithstanding what the minister has said, that this is a right and tradition of members of the assembly, I see no real problem with making it part of this legislation.

I think members would like to know that it is in the statutes of the province of Ontario and that this right does exist. I have not heard of too many complaints. The other night I did hear a couple of minor complaints about access to institutions, but I have not personally experienced that, nor have I heard of very many cases where there has been a problem in getting access to one of our Correctional Services institutions. However, I think it would be preferable to have it in this act as well. I see no problem with that. It is there for everyone to see at that time. I think members would like to know they have that right enshrined in legislation.

The second part is a very difficult one—clauses (ii) and (iii) of the amendment. I think all of us in this House jealously guard our right to confidentiality and we are concerned when there is a possibility that confidentiality will be violated or the opportunity will arise for that.

The minister has made some valid points in this regard. Certainly since the Ombudsman has come on the scene to deal with the problems experienced within our Correctional Services institutions there is no question that the volume of mail to individual members of this Legislature has gone down considerably.

Obviously, the inmates themselves feel that problems brought to his attention can be handled by the Ombudsman in a very adequate manner, in that he has a staff to do so; he has people with direct expertise. There is confidence in the Ombudsman and his particular organization.

Knowing that the communications can be directed to the Ombudsman, untouched, that the lines of communication are open and confidential, it is reasonable to assume that the inmates within the institution do have reasonable access in terms of making a complaint.

I am concerned—I don't know how we're going to overcome this, and I share the concern of the member for High Park-Swansea—that the possibility exists, at least, that there is going to be more than a scanning of the mail.

The minister shakes his head. Certainly we would hope that this is the case. But I don't know how the minister can give us an ironclad guarantee that there isn't going to be a reading of the mail, either going out to the member or coming in. I don't think that guarantee can be made.

However, he makes a valid point in terms of someone being able to get access to the stationery of a member, particularly to envelopes of a member. It's difficult to do, but it's not outside the realm of possibility.

I think all members of the Legislature would share the concern that there may be certain materials which are directed to inmates within the institutions that might be used either for escape or for some other purposes which would not be desirable within the institution.

[12:45]

I suppose there is the possibility also that plans could be formulated for escape or some other activity undesirable to the smooth operation of a Correctional Services institute. It becomes a very difficult problem. In theory, I am sympathetic to what the member for High Park-Swansea is saying. If he feels it's necessary, and perhaps it will be, the minister could at least express the concern of members opposite that our communications not be read, but merely be scanned to see that our signature is on them and that there is not a careful scrutiny of these communications.

That's very difficult to do, but our options are very limited because of the questions the minister has raised about this and because of the points he has made. If the Ombudsman was not in existence, I would have to say that under those circumstances we would have to take those chances. With the Ombudsman in existence and with the mail situation as it is in relation to the Ombudsman, that does at least guarantee those within Correctional Services institutions the access to someone who is impartial and may be able to rectify their particular problems.

Mr. M. N. Davison: As I understand it, we have no problem in any of the three parties with the first part of my colleague's amendment. I can agree with it. I have a question that the minister can answer for me when I'm finished or perhaps he can nod his head. When an MPP visits a specific prisoner in an institution, is that visit by the MPP counted or applied to total number of visits that prisoner can receive in any given time period?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. The reason that a record is kept is that there are two docket books in any institution. One is general and the second is professional. The MPP signs as he's going in because we want him to come out. It's just the same way as for a solicitor or a doctor. There's a professional log book there as well. It doesn't count at all.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On the question of the mail, I think I have a solution which will be acceptable to the minister that will allow all three parties to accept the provisions or amendments made by my colleague. As I understand the minister's real objection, it's not so much to the letters going out from the institution to the MPP but to those coming in from the MPP's office to the institution.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Maybe I could say there's one problem about mail going out that I would hope you'd address yourself to.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What's the problem?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The problem there is if it's going to go out without being looked at, what address do you have? Is it your legislative office or your riding office? What happens if the person knows your address? Say he's from your riding and your riding is relatively small in dimensions and he knows where you live. These are very practical considerations. Suppose he writes to you at your address and doesn't put the magic initials after your name and then you get an intercepted letter? These are very practical considerations about mail going out as well as coming in.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I can understand that concern. That's rather easily solved, because most of us not being terribly wealthy people have three addresses, a Queen's Park office, a constituency office and our residency. All those addresses for all MPPs can be kept on file at each particular institution and the correct spelling, initials and so on can be provided to the inmate wishing to write. I just don't see any great security problem in terms of mail leaving the institution to an MPP. It's really the same sort of situation as the Ombudsman is in.

We might get into a discussion about the employees of the Ombudsman and the employees of the MPP. I'm sure that no one would like to cast doubts on the worth or honesty of any employee of any MPP, nor would the minister nor any other member of the House really want to cast doubt upon the trustworthiness of an MPP in that he might be involved in some way in breaking a law or breaching security. I understand the minister's position on that. I think we agree that that's not the real problem, so I think we can accept the second part of my colleague's amendment.

The real problem comes with the third one, and I understand very well the minister's concern on this. Just because a letter arrives addressed to an inmate at the institution in one of the white and blue envelopes that we members of the provincial Parliament have, how does he know where it came from? I suspect most members, like myself, don't have a special letterhead; we just use the standard government letterhead.

I think there are two ways, and rather simple, inexpensive ways, in which that problem can be solved. When the staff opens that letter the only way they can verify that it has come from the member of Parliament is if his signature is on that letter. It would be a simple matter for each institution to have on file a copy signature of each member of the Legislative Assembly and for the member of the Legislative Assembly sending the letter to have his signature on the back of the envelope.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Some of those guys in there can do your signature better than you.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If that is the only way in which the ministry now identifies whether or not a letter has come from a member of Parliament, and the minister didn't suggest that there was another way—as a matter of fact, he specifically said he didn't want to be involved in having to phone us up each day to see if we sent this letter; the way you are doing it now is by signature—so if it's good enough on the inside of the letter, it's good enough on the outside of the envelope.

However, if the minister wants to raise that as an additional point, that no, we can't just count on the signature of the MPP because there are in this province a few people who can sign forged signatures—

Hon. Mr. Drea: A few?

Mr. M. N. Davison:—fine, I think it shoots a hole in the balloon of the argument about opening them up to see if it's really from the MPP by looking at his signature.

If the minister wouldn't accept that, then I have an even better solution for him. That's this: As the Ombudsman and the correctional investigator of Canada, as the minister has told us today, worried about the problem of people getting access of their envelopes and sending in letters to incarcerated people, the ministry can also follow their procedure and develop a secure envelope which can be given, one at a time, upon request, to an MPP at Queen's Park, or one of his designates in writing. The communication to the individual in the institution can then be placed in that envelope; or if you don't trust the MPP or his designate to go away and do that, if you think that might lead to another possible security problem, then I think members of Parliament would be willing to consider placing our letter in the envelope in front of a designate from your ministry.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I have been able to offer methods that clarify any problems that are raised by the second two parts of my colleague's amendment. I think all of us in the House can agree with the first part, so I think that we can now, after some more reasonable debate, proceed to a vote on which all three parties can agree on these amendments so that MPPs and people in institutions can have confidential and secure communication with each other.

Mr. Nixon: I don't quite agree with the honourable member who has just spoken that we are ready to go forward with approval of the motion as he has suggested. I agree with the comments made by my colleague from St. Catharines, however, that I believe it would be appropriate if the act were amended so the members of the Legislature by right can enter a provincial institution.

The minister has indicated it is our right now by a statement from his predecessor and that he is prepared to make such information available to the clerk and so on, and would accept an amendment making it a legal matter. I think, frankly, we would ask him to accept that.

However, I am prepared to accept the comments made by the member for St. Catharines about the role of the Ombudsman in this matter and also the objections raised by the minister. I don't believe there is a substantial problem here, particularly since it has been raised in the House, and others in the ministry and the members themselves will be aware of any hitch in free communication between the people incarcerated and their members for whatever proper purposes that they see fit.

We are not prepared to support sections 2 or 3 of the amendment, as my colleague from St. Catharines has indicated. We would either have an amendment moved delegating those two subsections, if you want to call them that, or we could not approve the amendment in total if the minister is prepared to move one, as he has said he is willing to do, and accept the visiting privileges of the members.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I presume the House leader of the official opposition does have some input from the members of his party and the member for High Park-Swansea has indicated it is their will.

I would prefer to have the three sections struck and a new section covering the visitations put in because I would want to have one exception in that. The one exception on the visits, since we are putting it into specific legislation, is really only common sense. The only limitation would be: "except where the ministry determines that the institution has become insecure or other emergency conditions exist"—that would be in the case of a riot, a fire inside; as I say, common sense. No member probably would ever want to go in under that type of situation. But as section 9(a)(i) stands now there would be no authority to ban someone on the grounds that the place has become insecure.

You will notice elsewhere in this bill for the first time we are saying that we have the right to remove inmates and transfer them when the particular centre becomes insecure. That has to be our judgement. It might very well be not from fire, it might be from some type of contagion or a number of things. But with those limitations we would accept this.

So what I would propose is: "Every member of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario is entitled to enter and inspect any correctional institution, community resource centre"—remember we are going far beyond jails—"or other facility established or designated under this act for any purpose related to the member's duties and responsibilities as a member of the Legislative Assembly, except where the minister determines that the institution has become insecure or other emergency conditions exist."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is that an amendment? Do you have that in writing?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will give you the last three parts. The rest of it is Mr. Ziemba's word-for-word—9(a)(i).

Mr. Deputy Chairman: In view of the time, might I suggest that be prepared in writing when we resume this debate at the next sitting?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, before we do, since we have some time, the proposition has been advanced by the House leader of the Liberal Party that if this amendment is going to come in the next time we would have time for a determination now on the entirety of the amendments to section 9.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I understand you are bringing in amendments to section 9(a) to Mr. Ziemba's motion.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, Mr. Chairman, the suggestion was made that the entire amendment before you now be deleted and that a separate amendment be brought in covering the visitation rights, to be debated separately.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would suggest to the minister that if we vote down the amendment of Mr. Ziemba before us then the question would have been decided and another motion may not be in order. I think the proper way would be to have an amendment to Mr. Ziemba's amendment.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order—I can see with the points of order we are going to run out of time. But are you saying that if an amendment is lost the section carries?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, another amendment could be brought forward on another matter, but the matter of members' visitations would then have been lost and that matter would have been decided. We have a motion to rise and report. I would suggest that between now and when we resume, these matters can be resolved among the various members.

Mr. Nixon: Is the motion put?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The motion will not be put. The motion is to rise and report.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported one bill without amendment and progress on another.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 91, An Act to amend the Building Code Act, 1974.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FEDERAL HOUSING PROPOSALS

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I wish to report to the Legislature the results of last week's federal-provincial housing conference. I wish to emphasize that much work still remains to be done before any final decisions can be made on the implementation of the new federal housing proposals in the province of Ontario. For example, although we have reached general agreement on the terms of a global funding agreement, which envisages the federal government making a three-year financial commitment for housing programs, the final details of the document have not been negotiated, nor of course has it been executed.

Similarly, although many of the details of the low-income housing proposals contained in the new federal programs have been clarified, an operating agreement confirming the clarification of these details and determining the manner in which Ontario will co-operate with the federal government in the delivery of these programs has not yet been drafted or executed. Further, the operating agreement required for the new community services grants program introduced by the federal government needs further negotiation and drafting.

Many of the programs discussed at the conference are of a relatively complex and technical nature, and, as indicated, time is still required for careful study of the decisions reached and their effect upon current ministry programs. However, I think it might be useful to the members for me to provide some background on the purpose of the housing conference and to outline briefly the agreements in principle which were reached at the conference.

In early February of this year there was a federal-provincial conference in Edmonton. At that time it was the understanding of the provincial ministers of housing that a further meeting of ministers would take place in April. The April meeting was felt by the provinces to be of critical importance because proposals for the new federal programs announced at the Edmonton meeting needed considerable clarification before the provinces could properly assess their impact on their own programs and on the municipalities and other groups such as non-profit organizations.

Unfortunately, the federal Minister of State for Urban Affairs, Mr. Andre Ouellet, cancelled the expected April conference and moved unilaterally to announce new federal programs. I must say that this action caused considerable confusion in the provincial ministries, particularly so since the new programs were announced piecemeal in a series of press releases without sufficient background material to permit a reasonable assessment of them.

Bearing in mind that housing programs have a tremendous social and economic impact on the province and its municipalities, and recognizing the huge sums of taxpayers' dollars involved in these programs, it was imperative that a meeting with the federal minister be held; and so I asked for a meeting of the provinces and the federal minister.

One of the major problems facing that meeting was that a number of the proposed federal programs had been announced with immediate or early implementation dates. As a result of the agreement reached at the meeting held last week, I am now in a position to report that the federal minister, in the main, has agreed to continue a number of the existing programs for a period of time that will allow for more careful and prudent planning, and continuing consultation with the provinces. This will also avoid upsetting in any serious way the current year's program.

To ensure that the process of federal-provincial consultation continues in what we hope will be a productive manner, we have done two things. First, it has been agreed that federal-provincial task forces will study a number of the federal proposals in an attempt to reach accord. Second, I insisted, and the other provincial ministers concurred, that the studies should be completed on a timetable that will allow another ministers' conference in November of this year.

This time discipline, I think, is important because, while we wish to assure ourselves that the interests of our municipalities and citizens are protected as a result of thorough analysis and study, the Ontario Ministry of Housing is anxious to reach a clear understanding of these program changes at an early date so that all concerned can get on with the job of providing housing.

Among the major items referred to the task forces is the question of federal subsidies to rent-geared-to-income housing. This is the question which has received most of the public attention in recent days. Perhaps it would be helpful and useful, Mr. Speaker, if I reviewed this subject.

Going back to the Edmonton conference in February, the federal government stated that it wished all provinces to move to a minimum rent scale that was 25 per cent of income. This policy was subsequently further enlarged to provide that the minimum rent scale would be 25 per cent of gross income and would be extended to cover both existing and new housing projects. To put teeth into the federal proposal it was stated in plain terms at last week's conference that the provinces not implementing the 25 per cent minimum rent scale would have to pay any difference from the provincial-municipal purses. In other words, full federal government assistance would not come into effect except at or above the 25 per cent of gross income level.

This federal proposal met with considerable provincial opposition and as a result it was agreed that a federal-provincial committee of officials be established to study rent scales and the definition of household income and to report back on their findings to the federal and provincial ministers this fall.

One further point of special interest: While some of the federal programs require further clarification and have been turned over for further study, it is certain that the federal government has opted out of providing direct assistance in at least two of its current major programs—AHOP and ARP. The direct subsidy housing incentives have been replaced with a plan of graduated-payment mortgages.

I must say that I am concerned; these new plans which allow for lower mortgage payment at the beginning of the payment period and higher payments later in the life of the mortgage cause me some worry. The worry is that home buyers' income will not rise fast enough to meet the higher payments required. The new federal AHOP program, unlike the old, does not contain a hardship clause. The young family in which the wife may leave the work force to have children earlier than planned could find itself in financial trouble when the day of higher mortgage payments arrives.

Mr. Martel: Can they get any higher?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That is but one example, Mr. Speaker. In any event, that kind of worry is not shared by the federal minister; this is one case in which I hope he is right and I am wrong.

Mr. Wildman: You are probably both wrong.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: However, at the meeting I asked the federal minister to continue the ARP and the AHOP programs, at least until we could sit down with the industry and lenders and work out modifications to ensure success of his new program. Mr. Ouellet took a very hard line and refused to negotiate, saying they were finished in their old form on May 1, 1978. I am particularly disappointed to see the successful ARP program changed. For that reason I will be writing to Mr. Ouellet and asking him to reconsider AHOP and ARP under the 1976 terms, on the grounds Ontario is willing to continue its rental construction and HOME grants so as to encourage production of such units.

Mr. S. Smith: I would hope so.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I think it would be fair to summarize the results of the conference by saying that at the urging of the provincial ministers the federal minister has agreed that the majority of his new housing programs need revision and greater clarification.

It is unfortunate that the orderly process of federal-provincial consultation and study was interrupted by the unilateral cancellation of the April meeting. However, I feel we have been fortunate, on the other hand, in being able to convince the federal minister to make haste more slowly and to allow more time for existing programs to run in parallel with the new proposals. Hopefully, if he cannot establish that the new proposals are more effective than the existing programs, the federal minister will reconsider the wisdom of implementing them at all.

We intend to co-operate in every way in assisting with the further evaluation of the new programs and will make every effort to obtain the best possible combination of programs to meet Ontario's housing needs.

Mr. Speaker, the record of the conference and the official statement of the agreements reached is being prepared by the Canadian intergovernmental conference secretariat. When I have received the official report, I will be pleased to provide the members with additional information.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, over the last few months I have assured members that as soon as the very complex and thorough re-assessment of Workmen's Compensation Board financing and benefits was complete, I would move without delay to seek legislative amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act. That review is now complete and while the very substantial report, which is also being tabled, contains massive amounts of information and raises a variety of very real concerns, I am honouring my commitment to introduce an amending act before the completion of this session.

In introducing the bill at the appropriate time today, it is recognized that there are benefit areas which require prompt adjustment. It is also recognized that the implications of the report will demand much additional evaluation. I wish to emphasize, therefore, that while the bill which I am introducing today focuses on the important area of immediate concern, further study and consideration of the Wyatt recommendations will be required for the many long-term issues identified in that report, as well as in submissions made to me by various organizations and groups.

I am pleased to announce that the amending act, which is intended to become law on July 1, 1978, will contain the following measures:

First, an increase in the ceiling on earnings from $15,000 to $16,200 effective July 1, 1978. While the Wyatt report urges no change in the earning ceiling pending consideration of changes in the relationship of compensation to earnings on a tax-free basis, it is considered that some interim change is justified at this time. This change will mean that the maximum rate of compensation payable will rise from $216.35 per week to $233.66 per week. The new ceiling will not only benefit workers injured on or after July 1, 1978, but will also apply to those workers receiving disability pensions as a result of accidents occurring prior to that date and will apply in those cases to benefits for periods after July 1, 1978.

The second change is in the present minimum compensation for temporary disability, which is at the present time $90 per week or 100 per cent of earnings if they are less than $90. The new minimum compensation for temporary disability will be $115 per week or 100 per cent of earnings if less. This means that those workers earning more than $153.33 per week will receive the usual tax-free 75 per cent as compensation. Those earning between $115 per week and $153.33 will receive the minimum of $115 per week, even though this will be more than 75 per cent of the earnings; and all workers who earn $115 per week or less, including part-time workers, will receive tax-free compensation equal to their full earnings.

Disability pensions awarded for accidents in any year prior to 1976 will be increased by a factor of 11 per cent with respect to 1975, a further factor of eight per cent with respect to the year 1976 and an additional factor of six per cent with respect to the year 1977. Where the accident occurred in 1976, the eight per cent and six per cent factors will apply. Where the accident occurred in 1977 the six per cent factor will apply. These factors apply retroactively, are cumulative and subject to the maximums.

With respect to permanent total disability pensions, there will be three changes in the absolute minimum. Effective July 1, 1976, it will be increased from $400 to $444; effective July 1, 1977, from $444 to $480; and effective July 1, 1978, $509 per month.

The current absolute minimum for permanent partial disability will also be raised proportionately on the same effective dates, so that effectively, July 1, 1978, the absolute minimum for a 50 per cent disability will rise from $200 to $254.50 per month, and the absolute minimum for a 25 per cent disability will be $127.25 per month compared with the present $100.

[2:15]

The Workmen's Compensation Board will be reviewing all pension records to determine what additional benefits are payable under the amendment in each case, and the increases will be paid as rapidly as possible. The pensions for dependent spouses will be increased from $286 per month to $318 per month effective July 1, 1976; to $344 per month effective July 1, 1977; and to $365 per month effective July 1, 1978.

Pensions for dependent children will also be increased from $77 per month to $86 per month effective July 1, 1976; to $93 per month effective July 1, 1977; and to $99 per month effective July 1, 1978.

Orphans' pensions will also be increased from $88 per month to $98 per month effective July 1, 1976; to $106 per month effective July 1, 1977; and to $113 per month effective July 1, 1978.

The pensions for dependants other than spouses and children will also be increased proportionate to those increases granted to dependent spouses. Retroactive adjustments in dependency pensions will be made as rapidly as possible following identification of the claims affected.

The burial allowance will be increased from $600 to $800 for deaths occurring on or after July 1, 1978. The initial lump sum payment to a dependent spouse will also be increased from $600 to $800 on the same basis on the same date.

The allowance currently payable for damage to clothing by artificial appliances will be increased from $168 per year to $192 per year with respect to lower limb prostheses and back braces for a permanent back disability, and from $84 to $96 per year with respect to upper limb prostheses; both effective July 1, 1978.

The changes in benefits which I am recommending are substantial. They are intended to provide more equitable levels of compensation to those affected by industrial injury or disease, while recognizing that a great deal of further analysis of workmen's compensation still lies ahead.

The costs of such changes are also substantial, having a total capitalized value of $262 million for existing cases, including retroactive payments for existing permanent disability and dependency pensions, plus $6 million in respect of increased cost of new claims occurring during the last six months of 1978.

I would therefore state, Mr. Speaker, that I seek your support and the support of the members of this Legislature for the amending act so that the higher levels of benefits will be available to Ontario's workers effective July 1, 1978.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour: Welcoming, as we do, this improvement in the benefits schedule of the Workmen's Compensation Board, can she inform the House as to the method of financing these improvements? Is that money available within the fund, will there have to be higher contributions or is this money coming in whole or in part from general revenue?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, all the funding for the improved benefits will come from the funding of the Workmen's Compensation Board. There will not be a requirement for any increase in the assessment levels.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: May I ask how it is that these workers have been allowed to suffer through a very difficult winter and spring when the money was there in the fund for the minister to come through with increases long before this so-called study was completed? Why did they have to wait this long if the money was right there in the fund?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It was as a result of some concern on my part, and some concern expressed very well during a meeting of the standing committee on resources development, that a member of the official opposition caucus recommended that such a study be carried out. With the assistance and support of the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty), this study was carried out.

It was felt there could not be any rational basis for change until all the information requested by the honourable member—information which I felt was entirely essential to making responsible decisions—was available to us. As soon as that information was available, as soon as we had the information from the board and from the Wyatt study, the changes were recommended and are brought to the House today.

Mr. Cassidy: Now that the minister has had that report, is the government prepared to build automatic increases into the act so that the three-year delay that injured workmen have suffered waiting for any changes in the disability pensions will never again occur in the future?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I think it is incumbent upon us to examine very carefully all of the recommendations of the Wyatt report, which are far-reaching. There are some suggestions within that report for the kinds of changes which should be instituted, but I would have to tell the honourable members that when they receive their copies of the report, as they will this afternoon, they will note that Wyatt specifically recommends that there not be indexing, but indeed that this be done on an ad hoc basis annually. That kind of mechanism most certainly, I think, can be built into a rewritten act.

Mr. Warner: It's easy for an ad hoc government.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister also tell the House if it is the government's intention, because her statement was not clear, that these increased pensions will be paid retroactively so that the increases suggested for 1975, 1976 and 1977 will now be paid as a lump sum, or is it the government's intention that the increases will only begin to be paid on July 1 of this year?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I thought I made that very clear in my statement that any pension which had been granted before the date July 1, 1975, would be subject to all three stages of increase. Any that began on July 1, 1976, would be submitted to the two-stage increase; and on July 1, 1977, to the one-stage increase. The total increase, of course, will apply to those which occur after July 1, 1978.

Mr. MacDonald: Retroactively?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Has the minister compared the increases in either the consumer price index or the industrial wage composite with the increases that she has announced today? Further, would she think seriously in the next day or so about increasing at least the widow's benefit, which is rising to $365 and is clearly inadequate?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Those two indices have been very carefully considered in the recommendation which is made today. The percentage increases are across the board, as I'm sure the honourable member recognizes, and are either equal to or in excess of the levels which are available in any other jurisdiction in Canada.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister advise us as to when she herself became aware of the funding available to make these increases possible for these injured workmen?

Hon. B. Stephenson: At the time of the submission of the Wyatt report.

Mrs. Campbell: Not before?

Hon. B. Stephenson: No.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I want to go back to the question raised by the leader of the New Democratic Party, because I still don't quite understand the minister's answer. In fact, will the workers who started in 1975 and later get a cheque to cover the increase of 11 per cent for 1976, a cheque to cover 1977, one for 1978, and then, as of July 1, be established at a new level?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes. I would imagine, however, that there will not be three separate cheques for those individuals; there will be one lump sum.

MEAT PACKING DISPUTE

Mr. S. Smith: My second question, Mr. Speaker, is also for the Minister of Labour, and it has to do with the meat packing dispute which is occurring in Ontario.

In view of the fact there are reports a strike has started at Swift and that Canada Packers has announced that, despite the minister's letter to them pointing out what I think she said in the House was an unusual stance—apparently that didn't frighten them much—they are planning to lock out their employees, is the minister aware that this will mean about 2,500 workers out of a job in Toronto and may well have very detrimental effects on consumers, given the shortage of beef that already exists and the pricing structure? Is the minister prepared just to allow Canada Packers to carry out its threat to lock out? Is she convinced that it's quite legal? Is she going to do anything about it?

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, to answer the last question first, yes, their proposed action, I gather, is entirely legal. Secondly, I really wasn't intending to frighten anybody by that statement.

Mrs. Campbell: You scare us.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Thirdly, I am informed by the Consumers' Association of Canada that as far as they are concerned any such action will have no effect at all on the consumer price of beef. They feel it is not likely to have any very detrimental effect, even on the supply, for quite some time. So my concern right at the moment is to attempt to bring the parties back to the table to negotiate a settlement which will be satisfactory to both.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Given the estimates that it will be about a month or six weeks before the supply pinch definitely will occur, and given the fact that one of the ways the supply pinch will be avoided will be with imported beef, which is a real problem to our farmers, can the minister explain to us why she bothered to write Canada Packers at all? Does she feel Canada Packers needed to know from her that their action was unusual? Did she feel they were desperate to find out whether she thought it was unusual or not? Or had she hoped to back them away from that type of action? If the minister has failed, what action is she now going to take?

Hon. B. Stephenson: It is my understanding that it will not be necessary to import beef to ensure a reasonable supply for Canadian consumers. Indeed, Canadian beef will be available and the small packing houses in this province and in this country will be quite capable, and are certainly prepared to deal with the situation at the present time.

The question was asked of me whether I found this to be an unusual practice; I said, yes, it was an unusual practice, in my understanding.

Mr. S. Smith: Why did the minister write them?

Hon. B. Stephenson: I didn't write to them; this was communicated verbally, as a matter of fact. I think it's important that the House know that it wasn't put down on paper. It is, in my estimation, an unusual practice but one which I gather has been indulged in by other employers in the past. If this is the route which the packing houses see fit to follow, since this is not limited to the province of Ontario but indeed is a national situation and I gather involves at least two other packing houses as well as Canada Packers, it is not the role of the Minister of Labour of Ontario to say, "You must not do this"; indeed I gather it is being condoned, if not supported, by departments of labour in other provinces and federally.

FEDERAL HOUSING PROPOSALS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Housing arising out of his statement on the federal-provincial meeting of last week.

In view of the very clear statement the minister gave two weeks ago that Ontario favoured the 25 per cent rent scale, and in view of the statements by the federal Minister of Housing that the provinces have the right to set whatever rent scale they see fit in public housing, can the minister indicate what Ontario's position will be leading up to the November meeting; and can the minister say whether Ontario was one of the provinces that opposed the federal proposals on the rent scales?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, if the leader of the third party will read my statement, it clearly indicates that the majority of, if not the entire, 10 provinces, opposed the federally designed program of rent-geared-to-income.

When I reported to the Legislature about the meetings in Edmonton, held on February 1 of this year, there was general agreement that some logic should be used in moving towards a 25 per cent income factor relating to rent. It was to relate to the formula that exists at present in the various provinces to calculate income. It was understood that it was to relate specifically to the new units coming on stream.

At last week's conference, it was clearly outlined by the federal minister that he was no longer referring to the income formula we had worked with for some period but to a gross income formula, which would take into account all income; even if it happened to be a tax rebate situation it would be considered as income.

I would admit that in pressing the federal minister for some clarification as to the income factor, he admitted he did not have the entire formula spelled out completely. That's the reason the 10 provinces put the federal government in the position of taking it to a federal-provincial civil servants' meeting to determine what the word "household income" should mean and the 25 per cent factor, or a percentage factor, for rent-geared-to-income. [2:30]

It has been indicated clearly before, and again today, that if there happens to be an increase in rent—and there is none anticipated at this time, because there is no formula we can work to; but if one should be worked in, it would likely be over a lengthy period of time. To conclude my answer to the question, the federal minister said very clearly, as I said in my statement today, the provinces can establish any rent factor they want in their provinces. That is clearly understood.

Mrs. Campbell: You've never understood it before.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: You can establish the rents as you see fit as a province, but he is now saying clearly and distinctly to the provinces: "If you do not get 25 per cent of gross incomes as the rent factor, you and the municipalities will pick up that shortfall 100 per cent. The federal government will not participate in any subsidy until you succeed in coming to the 25 per cent of gross income as rent." That is very clearly spelled out. We admit, I think—all 10 provinces admit—that we can establish rent.

I think the leader of the third party will admit it is quite a change away from what was originally the type of agreements we had signed with the federal government whereby there was rent established as to income that could range anywhere from 16.7 per cent to 25 per cent—not as the leader of the third party tried to indicate some weeks ago, that we had rents down to 13, 14 or 15 per cent. We have never been in that factor before. Clearly we have held up the whole program of rent-geared-to-income until there is some clarification by the federal government of what they mean by household income.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, can the minister be specific as to what Ontario's own intentions are as far as the rent-geared-to-income scale is concerned? Does Ontario in its proposals wish to see an actual increase in the rent-to-income scale? If that is the case, since it is clear that Ontario will have the power to set its own rent scale, can the minister say to what point or by what percentage amount does Ontario intend to increase the rent-geared-to-income scale in this province?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I have no announcement to make on that subject at this time until I see what the federal government wishes to offer to us in the terminology it will outline sometime between now and November.

Mr. S. Smith: Do I take it from the minister that the basic thrust of the federal position has been that they are going to get into the business of cheaper mortgage money, and basically that is it; that is basically what they see their position as being able to provide? If that is the case, doesn't the minister feel a lot of the strings they are attaching to this mortgage money represent a constitutional intrusion into a provincial area which should be resisted. Doesn't he feel they should in fact stick to providing the cheaper mortgage money and allow the provinces to work out exactly how they wish to use that money to benefit whatever people they have and whatever needs they have in their own provinces?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure it is supplementary, but I will attempt to answer it.

Mr. Bolan: Who are you to determine that?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I take it the Liberal leader is referring to the graduated payment mortgage plan, which is a very broad plan into the field of rental accommodations and ownership.

What the federal government is intending to do very clearly and very distinctly is get out of the money business—period. It is not their intention to lend funds from CMHC except under very extenuating circumstances in various parts of Canada. In other words, they are trying to encourage provinces, municipalities, nonprofits and co-ops to go into the private lending sector and to secure funding, and if a certain percentage of the funding is put up—100 per cent, for example, by a co-op through the lending institution—the federal government will write down the interest rate on that funding to one per cent. If they borrow up to 90 per cent they will write the interest rate down to roughly two per cent. It really works out to about 1.9 per cent.

That is really what they are intending to do. They are not intruding into the field, as far as we understand, except to the point that they will no longer lend funds. They have the same desire as the Ontario Mortgage Corporation and that is to move out of the loaning field and let the private sector look after it. To do that they are offering a graduated payment mortgage scheme. As I have said in my remarks, I have great difficulty in believing it will be profitable and beneficial to the overall rental market or to the housing market in this country. I make that statement not because Claude Bennett thinks that is the way it should be—

Mr. Peterson: Who is Claude Bennett?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: —but over the last number of weeks I have taken the opportunity to speak with those in the development business from across Canada—not just the province of Ontario, but across Canada. I have met with 16 of the largest principal mortgage lenders in this province and this country, and I have yet to have one positive response to the graduated payment mortgage plan that the federal government is proposing.

Mr. Makarchuk: In view of the fact that the financial institutions have indicated they are not prepared to go along with the graduated payment mortgage plan, and in view of the fact that the provincial and federal governments are getting out of the mortgage business, can the minister tell this House who is going to provide the mortgage funding for new construction then?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I suppose the member should look again at my statement where I very clearly said today that I am urging Mr. Ouellet, by letter once again, to review his program and to retain the ARP and AHOP program that was introduced in 1976, to leave it in place at least for the current year, until we have some appreciation of what the other plans will mean.

Mr. Ouellet has never taken the opportunity to meet with the people in the private sector who do the development. He has never taken the opportunity to meet with the people in the private sector who lend funding.

Mr. Peterson: You represent the private sector.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: They've come to a graduated payment mortgage plan in Ottawa that is entirely their own brainwave. They have never really tried to consult anyone.

Mr. Kerrio: Now you know how frustrated we get dealing with you guys.

Mr. Nixon: He talks to the Matthews Group regularly or their representative.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I would tell the members frankly that last week Mr. Ouellet got a clear message from 10 ministers of the provinces of Canada that the plan is not likely to succeed. I'm not throwing cold water on it at this moment, but there appears to be very little support for it in the private sector. I have asked Mr. Ouellet to retain the present program until we can try to find some way out of the situation.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Ouellet is not here to defend himself.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: His cousins are here.

Mr. Bradley: You love to pass the buck, don't you?

Mr. Peterson: You act for the private sector.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I'll act for the people I think will provide housing for this province.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a final supplementary arising out of the meeting last week of federal and provincial housing ministers. In view of the absence of any reference to it in his statement, can the minister say whether Ontario pressed the federal government to abandon its plans to completely change the nature of co-operative and nonprofit housing in the country or in the province, and can he say whether Ontario was successful in ensuring that they are not turned into an adjunct of the rent-geared-to-income housing plan?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: May I report to the House, so that there will be no misunderstanding, what sections of the National Housing Act will remain in effect. Section 15(1) will likely continue until the end of 1978. I must admit even that is a change in position from last Tuesday afternoon when Mr. Ouellet left the city of Toronto. It was to be continued until the end of August. I understand that because of some other moves he will now extend it until the end of 1978, even though he has no provision for funding in his budget at this moment.

Section 27(1)—that's the NIP program—is terminated as of March 31, 1978, and will not likely be taken up in the community services program. Section 34(1), the residential rehabilitation assistance program, will be continued. That's one that up until last week was likely to fold. Section 34(1)(a), loans to co-operatives, will continue.

Section 40, federal-provincial-based public housing and land, which is the 75-25 program that Ontario has not used very extensively over the last number of years, will be retained and could very well become the vehicle that we'll use from now on in the development of public housing in the province of Ontario, at least in the smaller communities.

Section 42, loans for acquisition and servicing of land which go to municipalities, will be continued. Section 43, which is the capital lending program from the federal government to the housing corporations, will terminate as of the end of 1978.

Under section 44(1)(a), public housing subsidies of rent supplements in public projects, 50-50 subsidies will be continued for existing units and modified for new use. Section 44(1)(b) will be continued as well. Section 51, loans for sewage treatment, will be terminated at the end of 1978 and will likely be one of the programs that will be included in the community services grants program.

Section 56(1) is the section that related to AHOP and ARP which terminated on May 1, 1978. It is now being taken over by the graduated payment mortgage plan.

TORONTO CORE AREA PLAN

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Treasurer arising from a speech the Treasurer gave to the Toronto area redevelopment council more than a month ago, but which I think is worth reviewing at this time. In that speech, the Treasurer discussed the legitimate provincial interest of the province in the city of Toronto's core area plan. He mentioned, among other things, the balance of development between the downtown and suburban commercial centres, housing provided in the plan and the use of railway lands.

In view of the fact that the province has stood back from the development of that core area plan for some time while it has been before the Ontario Municipal Board, can the Treasurer say what he means when he says the province has a legitimate interest, how that will affect any subsequent cabinet decision and whether that cabinet decision will in fact simply put years of work on the core area plan down the drain?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. I would like to review what I said well over a month ago before I comment extensively. Obviously, we have a legitimate interest. As I recall, we spelled out that interest three or four years ago. At any rate, we weren't interested in seeing all growth come to a standstill in downtown Toronto, in the core area, as some would have happen. What ultimately happened to the downtown plan was that it went to the Ontario Municipal Board, and there it is.

There will undoubtedly be decisions. In the meantime, I think my own casual reading of newspaper clippings and other areas would be that the city of Toronto, if I may say so has adopted a somewhat more realistic approach to the development of the core where Metropolitan Toronto, and indeed I suppose the federal government as well as the province, has invested a great deal in transportation systems, subways, all based on the premise that we had a growing, vibrant, alive, awake core and not something which was going to come to a complete halt, as no doubt the leader of the third party devoutly wishes.

Mr. Lewis: Ah, don't be silly.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Can the minister say why these areas of legitimate provincial interest, as he calls it, were not raised at the OMB hearing where they could be discussed publicly, and whether it is the intention of the provincial government, if opportunity arises, to put its views in terms of the housing mix, the balance of downtown development and the use of railway lands into an adaptation of the plan if it comes to cabinet?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, no, I don't think we propose to do that. I think the city of Toronto and the Ontario Municipal Board are well able to work those things out. I don't see any reason for us to get into the nitty-gritty of the city of Toronto planning or Metropolitan Toronto planning provided that it isn't trying to stop the world. As I say again, the member would undoubtedly like to see the world stop.

Mr. MacDonald: That's silly. It really is quite silly.

Mr. Martel: It is the government who has been stopping the world, with all the flip-flops this year.

Mr. Lewis: It sure has slowed it down.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the Treasurer has this confidence in the OMB and the city of Toronto, can he explain why he came galloping in at the last minute in order to express the legitimate provincial interest, in his terms, rather than allowing that provincial interest to be expressed through the proper channels and not making the OMB hearings into a charade?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I don't think they are a charade. I recognize that it really must gall the third party that the city of Toronto is allowing some development and some things are happening in this great city. It really must gall them.

Mr. Martel: Go back to the Wentworth bill.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On the other hand, the NDP's friends in some of the construction unions are much happier today than they were a few years ago.

Mr. Martel: It is not tax reform.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Certainly we have an interest. We have an interest in GO Transit, we have an interest in parkway belts, and we'll express that interest from time to time—

Mr. Martel: Your last hurrah.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—but we're not going to get into the nitty-gritty, detailed planning which only happens in a socialist Valhalla and is not going to happen here in Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Lewis: You are just an old pachyderm.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer has had to backtrack so many times this year that I can't understand why he is so uptight.

Mr. Lewis: He is just an old, decaying pachyderm.

Mr. Martel: They should call you Back-track Darcy.

Mr. MacDonald: He is in full speed retreat.

Mr. Lewis: He is the last bumble of the fossil.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: If the Treasurer is going to keep out of these planning issues can he explain what is left to the municipalities to be autonomous about, after he has written to the OMB telling it not merely to make decisions based on planning, not merely to make decisions based on official plans and not merely to make them based on solvency, but on a certain set of priorities that he thinks municipalities should have, which downplays, among other things, recreational and cultural projects? Why is the Treasurer taking this point of view with the OMB and not allowing municipalities to decide how to spend their taxpayers' money autonomously?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Whether the Leader of the Opposition recognizes it or not, we do have some responsibility in this Legislature and on this side of the House.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer had better look at his last answer.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is not what you said a little while ago.

Mr. Breaugh: The Treasurer is supposed to count to 10 before he answers.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have some responsibility for the financial viability of our municipalities. It's only a year ago that the Leader of the Opposition was going around this province with the simplistic notion that mill rates would be held to an eight per cent increase. How does he square that?

Mr. S. Smith: The Treasurer's own letter says they were held to 7.5 per cent yet he said it couldn't be done.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The honourable member is talking out of both sides of his mouth and he knows it.

Mr. Makarchuk: Heave the Treasurer out.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh, what simplistic, simple-minded solutions he has.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer is finished now.

Mr. Lewis: He had better watch that slingshot now.

Mr. Warner: Some of these members really are quite unruly, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to know why it is that the Treasurer has now decided the Ontario Municipal Board should no longer be at arm's length from the government and should be subject to his direction. Should he please explain why that is happening?

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would be glad to debate that issue at some time during my estimates; I don't know whether the question period is the appropriate time to debate these issues. I think if you examine select committee reports, ones that even the New Democratic Party didn't dissent from as I recall, members will find in a number of places that there's a clear responsibility expected of a government to give direction in broad terms to the Ontario Municipal Board. Certain members obviously would like to have a municipal board hearing one month, a year later an assessment review hearing, then they would like a couple of appeals to the cabinet, then finally refer the whole thing to a standing committee of the Legislature—and nothing would be done.

Mr. Nixon: What is your excuse for doing nothing?

Mr. Martel: You know all about cabinet interference.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are a spent force.

Mr. Martel: Yell a little louder, Darcy. We didn't hear you.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, would you ask that fellow to turn the mikes up?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: It is compassion for an aging relic who mumbles from time to time.

ADOPTION RECORDS

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services: Would the minister explain why he has done nothing about the recommendations of the committee on record disclosure to adoptees which was funded by his ministry and which made its report fully two years ago this month—June 1976?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the fact is that it's not that we have done nothing; we have done a great deal. It's a very complex issue as I am sure the honourable members opposite appreciate.

The number of very delicate interests that are involved in the resolution of that issue is at least three in every instance. Trying to find a mechanism that would protect those interests to the maximum possible and still recognize the concern of the adoptee who is seeking identifying information about his or her roots and origin is not an easy matter to resolve. In fact we are now working on what I hope will be a final proposal for policy consideration by the government in the very near future.

Mr. Blundy: Supplementary question: Does the minister see the need for some consistent policy on these records in Ontario? If so, why, after two years, has at least some direction not been given to conform somewhat with the report? It is a most conclusive report I would think.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, I think it's imperative that there be a consistency in terms of the handling of such information. In fact the attempt has been to provide consistency up to this point. But because of the manner in which some of that information is available in various agencies across the province, it has been difficult to assure that. However I have met with a number of heads of agencies who have such information, who believe that the information has not—surely as a matter of policy—been released by their agencies in contravention of the existing policy, but rather that there have been other avenues by which it has been made available without any official recognition of that by the agency.

There is concern on their part and on mine and many others', I can assure the member, that until such time as we have a more comprehensive policy that kind of pirating, if you wish, of information might continue. I would like to see that resolved in the very near future.

Mr. McClellan: We will amend the act and that will solve it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We have been examining practices in other jurisdictions as well as considering the recommendations of the committee cited and I believe it should be resolved before the fall. Otherwise, it will be just a totally incomprehensible policy.

Mr. McClellan: You can vote for our amendment and that will solve it.

AIRPORT HOUSING DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Philip: A question for the Provincial Secretary of Resources Development: Concerning the decision by the Ontario Municipal Board and the cabinet to approve a 450-unit housing development by Cannard Investments Limited less than a mile south of Toronto International Airport, does the minister not see any conflict between the decision to build the houses and the obvious environmental and housing problems, and particularly the noise problems; and is the minister not concerned that the development fractures all the borough's zoning requirements for the size of houses and setbacks?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I believe this question should be more appropriately directed to the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett).

Mr. Philip: If I may ask another question of the same minister, then, since it is my understanding that all of the various ministries that would be affected by this problem are under his aegis: In the light of the recent statements by the Honourable Alastair Gillespie in which he requested a recess on all decisions on this project until his colleague, the Minister of Transport, the Honourable Otto Lang, has had an opportunity to consider the ramifications of the Ontario government's decision; and in the light of Mr. Lang's recent statement as reported in the Toronto Star of Friday, June 16, that the decision to allow housing to go this close to the airport was a bad one; would the minister explore ways of getting together under his aegis the various ministers—namely the Minister of Housing, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McCague), and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow)—and the appropriate federal ministers, and look at a way of solving this problem?

Mr. S. Smith: Just repeat the question.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As I indicated earlier, I believe the Minister of Housing could give the member some information. I would be pleased to look at the whole aspect of your question.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, may I redirect?

Mr. Speaker: You had the opportunity on the initial question..

CHILD ABUSE

Mr. Van Horne: A question for the Minister of Community and Social Services: In the light of the universal concern over child abuse, can the minister tell us if his ministry has any plans to promote outreach assistance programs in communities across Ontario?

Mr. Lewis: The mere words induce stupor.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am not sure precisely what the honourable member would include in outreach community programs. But, as I indicated earlier this spring, there are a variety of programs that are being funded during this fiscal year for preventive programs in various communities across the province. The programs are in each case being proposed by agencies within the community. If, following review, they meet our criteria for funding of preventive programs—

Mr. McClellan: Don't go on too long, you are going to make me mad.

Hon. Mr. Norton: There are quite a variety of such programs in place—I can't give the precise number at this point; 30 comes to mind. That is in addition to the efforts we have been making, and continue to make, to establish child abuse teams in communities across the province. We have had some 40 seminars in various communities across the province as well, which have led in many instances to the establishment of child abuse teams.

I am not sure whether that covers the full range of community outreach programs that the member may have contemplated—

Mr. McClellan: I hope not. Let's hope not.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —if not, I would invite him to pursue it with a supplementary.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Could the minister advise this House how much money is being made available to the Hospital for Sick Children to enable them to expand the Denver Module Program, which seems to be the most effective in the prevention of child abuse?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I cannot give the honourable member a specific answer to that. I will undertake to do so.

Over and above the funding that is available to children's aid societies for prevention programs, which is about one quarter of their total budgets or $25 million—

Mrs. Campbell: You can't use it for that research.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —we have a special budget allotment this year which is double what it was last year, in excess of $800,000, for funding specific programs. Whether or not any of that is allocated to the specific program which the honourable member has expressed interest in, I can't say. But I will get her that information.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Ms. Bryden: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. In view of the minister's lack of information about where the liquid industrial waste which formerly went into the Beare Road landfill site is now going, and in view of the concern by local citizens near Sarnia about the report last week that Tricil Limited, a company with a very bad record on waste disposal, is preparing to establish a deep well disposal project on Highway 40, which is known as the scenic route, I understand, will the minister undertake to set up immediately a task force of ministry officials to collect information on where and in what way liquid industrial waste is now being disposed of in this province and to determine what quantities of liquid industrial waste will likely require to be disposed of in the next decade, and to examine the adequacy of the facilities now available or planned and to make recommendations for the safe disposal of the total amount of liquid industrial waste expected to be generated, which could then be referred to a select committee of the Legislature to examine this very important problem in the fall?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Another select committee? Unbelievable.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, the information that the honourable member is requesting in that series of questions is available from our ministry.

Mr. Kerrio: We're going to have a select committee on the Premier next.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Are you in favour of that site, Marion?

Ms. Bryden: I understand the minister said in the House that he did not know where the liquid industrial waste that formerly went into Beare Road was now going. Secondly, has he got the way bills on a computer system so that we can have monthly reports on exactly what waste is being generated and where it is going, and can we have those reports made public?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, as far as the wastes that is going to Beare Road—the task force of officials of my ministry and of Metro are auditing those figures, and where that's going exactly, I presume will soon be available. As far as computerizing the program is concerned, that will be done in the next few months, but we are monitoring the way bill system, not by computer, but manually at this time.

HOSPITAL BOARD REPORTS

Mr. Stong: In the absence of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. In the light of the proceedings which took place at the annual meeting of the York Central Hospital in the regional municipality of York, wherein the executive board refused to supply requested information to its members, would the minister take steps to set, make known and enforce guidelines which would require hospital boards to be more accountable to their members and communities in terms of supplying general statistics concerning the number of, types of and procedures used in operations performed at their respective hospitals?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I will be very pleased to take that question under advisement and discuss it with the Minister of Health.

Mr. Stong: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the minister would report back to the House and make these guidelines generally available throughout Ontario prior to the next annual meeting of all of the hospital boards in Ontario.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I am rather surprised, I thought it was a practice of public hospitals to divulge the numbers of operations and procedures that had taken place within those hospitals; that is public knowledge. But I will be very pleased to report back.

STUDENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Colleges and Universities. It is regarding the fact that there is a 55 per cent drop in applications for the student grant program, as reported in the paper last week. I would like to ask the minister if in fact he has any explanation for this dramatic drop and would he agree that the basic reason is the inadequacy of his program?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No.

Mr. Havrot: Good answer.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer the first part of my question? Does he have any explanation or not? Secondly, would he not agree that part of the reason for the drop is the requirement for parents to have to give away the right for privacy for their income tax and, further, the eligibility periods which eliminate thousands of students from the grant portion of the program?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, the answer is three times no. No, no, no.

Mr. S. Smith: No idea?

Mr. Eaton: They have to reveal their income so they are not eligible; that is the problem.

Mr. Grande: The minister doesn't know what is going on.

[3:00]

SALE OF BEER AT BASEBALL STADIUM

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Would the minister inform the House, in view of the fact that the patrons of Exhibition Stadium are anxiously awaiting the decision of this government with regard to serving beer in that stadium—

Mr. Warner: Beer in the ballpark—a second-round revolt.

Mr. Yakabuski:—and in view of the fact that summer is nigh—

Mr. Nixon: And the living is easy.

Mr. Kerrio: And Claire Hoy is high on beer in the ball park.

Mr. Yakabuski:—would the minister inform the House if he is moving with Godspeed to provide those patrons with that much-needed refreshment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will move with Godspeed, although that is one quarter from which I have not got any representation on the matter.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Lord works in slow and mysterious ways.

Mr. Samis: It's the power of Billy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: However, I have indicated earlier that I hope the matter will be resolved one way or the other this coming week in cabinet.

Mr. Martel: What are you recommending?

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I missed the end of that response but, recognizing the minister finds it difficult to make decisions on important matters, could he still tell us by which date this year will we have a decision as to whether or not the good people who attend Blue Jay games can actually enjoy a pint or two of beer?

Mr. Breithaupt: If they miss the playoffs.

Mr. Samis: In 1994.

Mr. Deans: Obviously you are not serious.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have, of course, had a busy year making all sorts of decisions on matters such as rent controls, condominium legislation, income tax discounts, changes to the Liquor Licence Act—

Mr. MacDonald: Going in reverse.

Mr. Warner: This decision has taken you a year and a half.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In view of that record of making decisions, the honourable members can be quite sure that we will have a decision within a week or 10 days, probably this week.

Some hon. members: Hurray!

Mr. Warner: Claire Hoy is smiling.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Premier: In view of the decision of the court of assessment on May 29 to award Cyanamid of Canada a $520,000 reduction in assessment, resulting in a tax cut of more than $82,000 for its two Niagara Falls operations, and in the light of indications that an increasing number of industrial plants will be appealing their assessments as a result of his government's announcement that it will not proceed with property tax reform this year, does the Premier have any plans to review the decision not to proceed in 1978 with the legislation or at least to compensate those municipalities adversely affected by these appeals?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member is aware that it would be very difficult to have legislation to compensate for a decision on appeal.

No, we will not be introducing market value assessment in the form of real property tax reform, although quite obviously, from the tenor of the question asked by the honourable member, it has now become the official policy of the Liberal Party of Ontario that they will introduce real property tax reform, except they won't get the chance.

Mr. Kerrio: Oh, don't bet on that.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary question: I am always amazed by the Premier's ability to get an indication from an individual member of a party what the policy of that party is.

Mr. Nixon: "Amused" is the word.

Mr. Bradley: However, my supplementary question is this: Is the Premier aware of allegations that some TEIGA ministry employees who discovered loopholes in the existing property tax system and examples of overassessed property, during a government study, have now formed companies which are launching assessment appeals and does he feel this is the proper procedure?

Mr. Makarchuk: A new growth industry in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not aware of it. If the honourable member has some information that he thinks I should have on this matter, I would be delighted to receive it from him.

[Later:]

Mr. Bradley: On a point of privilege, I just wish to make a quick correction, Mr. Speaker. In the question to the Premier, I referred to former TEIGA employees; it should be former Revenue employees.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Premier, in view of the indefinite general postponement, is he prepared to recommend to his Treasurer that municipalities which want to proceed with the tax reform, with the assessment at market value, be permitted to proceed with it themselves, as permission is provided in the act for the Minister of Revenue to lift the freeze on those municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't think it is as simple as saying, "Would you permit the municipalities to do that?" I think one gets around to the question, is it a single municipality or is it a regional municipality? I think one would have to answer the question, if this were to be done, does this encompass all of the general reforms that were included in the initial proposals?

I would have to say to the honourable member that I can't answer that question in its rather simple form. I am not being critical; I think the answer to that question has to take into account a number of other issues, and I am just not prepared to give an answer on that at this moment.

Mr. Martel: Better than no reform at all.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask a supplementary of the Premier? Does the Premier intend to continue to punish municipalities by not doing anything in the line of providing them some financial assistance as a result of their not going along with his tax reform program?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has never been the policy of this government to "punish municipalities."

Mr. Martel: The Minister of Labour did last week.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure the member for Windsor-Walkerville fully understands that, when he looks at the involvement of this government in endeavouring to assist that great municipality on so many matters over the years, for which he takes most of the credit locally, if he can get away with it. I know he understands that.

Mr. S. Smith: And rightly so.

Mr. Nixon: They don't give the Premier much credit.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I read the Windsor paper and I get reports from in-laws very regularly about how the member for Windsor-Walkerville appears almost to be a Tory when it suits him and when it doesn't he is a Liberal. I understand that.

Mr. Speaker: That wasn't part of the question, unfortunately.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It doesn't hurt at all; it's human nature. But I would say to the honourable member I also understand that Windsor has a problem with respect to what it perceives to be something less than its fair share of the resource equalization grant.

EQUALIZATION FACTOR

Mr. Swart: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue. May I ask him if he is going to permit the unjust assessment system to become more unjust and to continue indefinitely; or does he have some alternative proposal to put before the Legislature in view of the abandonment of the tax reform program? Is he or is the Treasurer going to make an announcement to this House before it rises at the end of this week; or whenever that time may be?

Mr. Martel: It will only be the 100th in the last 10 years on tax reform.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would inform the honourable member that the staff of the Ministry of Revenue and the staff of the Treasury are working at trying to find an answer to some of the problems raised in the Legislature and raised by municipalities.

I don't think the answers or proposals we might have to give to some municipalities which are in serious trouble as far as assessment is concerned will be forthcoming by the time the Legislature rises, but we are working on it.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: Will the minister at least assure this House today that he will lift the freeze on municipal equalization, on the equalization factor, so the injustice which is being done to so many municipalities with regard to grants and with regard to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That's the same question you asked of the Premier on a supplementary.

Mr. Martel: It's a new question.

Mr. Swart: No, it is not. It's entirely different. With due respect, Mr. Speaker, this pertains to the equalization factor. I'm asking the minister if he will give the assurance that the freeze on the equalization factor will be lifted so municipalities can get fairness with regard to grants and with regard to common payments made for regions and education.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would inform the honourable member we have investigated some municipalities with a view to allowing the freeze to be lifted from the equalization factors. We have discussed the whole problem with some municipalities and they have found if we had done such a thing they would have been in worse shape than they are now, so I cannot give the member that assurance until we're sure it's going to be beneficial, rather than making the problem worse.

HYDRO CORRIDORS

Mr. J. Reed: I have a question of the Minister of Energy. Is the minister aware of rather serious public accusations that Ontario Hydro has been withholding payment for lands expropriated pending the recipient's withdrawal from an organization concerned with Hydro corridors and known as the Interested Citizens' Group? Would he take it upon himself to investigate the circumstances surrounding these allegations and report to the House to assure us there is no subtle blackmail taking place?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am not aware of those allegations but I will promise to look into it and report back to the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Blackmail doesn't sound very subtle.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Mr. Deans: I have a question for the Minister of Education. Can the minister explain to the House the extent to which his ministry is able to monitor and to exercise any influence or control over the private school system in the province of Ontario as it affects the conduct of these schools and the degree of care taken by them over the children placed in their responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The responsibilities of the Ministry of Education for the private school system as opposed to the public school system of this province lie in several areas. One is that private schools are required by law to register with us. They fill out a form which is available for anyone to see and which asks for certain information. No check is made of that information. It's presumed that the correct information is put on that form.

If a private school has students who wish to obtain the secondary school graduation diploma or the secondary school honours graduation diploma, we inspect the teachers for the purpose and then give them the right to grant the credits that would allow those students to get the diplomas. As far as I know, private schools outside the boundaries of this province pay for that inspection. There is a charge for the inspection within this province also. It isn't a charge that covers the total cost, but it pays our inspectors. People go in and inspect the schools. If the teachers are found to have the standards that are required in the public school system, they then can grant the diploma. Beyond that, we have no jurisdiction with the private schools.

Mr. Deans: Supplementary: Is it the minister's intention to investigate the unfortunate incidents which caused the loss of life of a number of students from St. John's School and, since the inquest will take place in Quebec and we will have absolutely no input, to determine whether or not it would be appropriate to review the overall responsibility undertaken by the Ministry of Education to determine whether or not it is sufficient and whether or not it may be necessary to rewrite some of the legislation governing private schools to guarantee the safety of the children in their care?

Hon. Mr. Wells: My friend has sent me a letter about this matter to which, I must say, if it had been sent to me unilaterally and had not been sent also jointly to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), my answer would have been no, it would not have been the responsibility of the ministry to do that. The coroner's inquest would have been the proper vehicle through which that investigation should be carried on. Since he did write also to the Attorney General, we are collaborating and I'm waiting to find out what the Attorney General has to say on the matter.

SCHOOL BOARD ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Nixon: I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of Education. It's one that I've put to him before, but I didn't get an answer. Can he report to the House on the policy of the various county boards to reduce their administrative staff and costs at the same time and at the same rate, as they are cutting back due to the lower enrolment of students and for other reasons?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I don't have any knowledge of any policy in that particular regard. That would be up to the local school boards, in their wisdom, in deciding on their budgets, to decide if they wish to trim their administrative staff. As I think I said to my friend before, as far as the teaching staff is concerned—

Mr. Nixon: Yes, that's different.

Hon. Mr. Wells:—much of that is all negotiated in the contracts they negotiate each year.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I appreciate the minister's comments about the teaching staff. Has he received complaints—as I have and I'm very sympathetic to them—that in many areas schools are being closed, teachers are either being laid off or not being replaced and yet the size and cost of the administrative staff is growing, both in numbers and cost? Would the minister agree with me that this is something that must concern us and cannot simply be fobbed off by saying that this is a local responsibility, particularly since it was under our responsibility in the first place, or at least the government's through one of the minister's predecessor's, that it was dictated that every board had to have a director of education with everything that went with it?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think the only place we dictate is that they do indeed have to have a director of education and chief executive officer; that's it. What happens beyond and below that is entirely up to the local trustees. I get letters just the same as my friend does complaining there is a very heavy in-between administrative staff.

Mr. Nixon: And is the minister not concerned?

[3:15]

Hon. Mr. Wells: I draw to my friend's attention that the staff is all appointed, mostly by resolutions of those elected school boards. They decide to have superintendents, assistant superintendents, curriculum co-ordinators and master teachers in certain areas—the list goes on and on and on. I also draw to his attention that we do not require any of those things under our legislation or regulations.

Mr. Nixon: Wouldn't the minister feel there is something we should do about this and not just ignore it?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let me say that if my friend thinks we should do something about it and stress that boards look at their administrative structures and make sure that if there is any fat in them it be cut out, the answer is yes. If he means we should do something legislatively, I would say no.

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Warner: I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Since the disposal of liquid waste is a severe problem and a growing problem for Metro Toronto and other areas of the province, and since he told me earlier that his government doesn't have any policy on this important matter, would he not think it appropriate to refer this business to the resources development committee in the fall, when the Legislature reconvenes in October? In the interim, he could collect whatever useful data there is available from his own—

Hon. B. Stephenson: What for?

Mr. Warner:—ministry and from other interested groups, and supply the resources committee in the fall with that material, so that although he—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Warner:—doesn't have any policy we could develop some guidelines for this province?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, that's probably a decision that could be made in the fall. There is some work ongoing, as the member knows, and I have mentioned many times; a task force with Metro and members of my ministry. We would expect there will be some fairly significant developments between now and October, but it might be a valuable question to raise at that time and might be needed.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: I am wondering why, if the minister is now interested in solving this problem, he couldn't simply say today that yes, we're agreed to do that in the fall, so that everyone who is interested can be preparing material over the summertime? Why couldn't he simply tell us that he will agree to that today?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Because we are always preparing material, and I think we should wait to see what the situation is in the fall. I think that's the only responsible thing to do.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment:

Bill Pr28, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION
AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. B. Stephenson moved first reading of Bill 126, An Act to amend the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to.

LANDLORD AND TENANT
AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 127, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to modify the security of tenure provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act to meet some problems faced by mobile home owners. The bill provides that a mobile home park owner cannot arbitrarily refuse to enter into or renew a tenancy agreement with a person who has taken possession of a mobile home from a tenant of the landlord.

In addition, where an owner wishes to terminate a lease for purposes related to the owner's own use of the site, or to change its use or undertake a major renovation, the owner shall make every effort to find an alternative site for the tenant. In these circumstances, as well as in the situation where a tenant's move is made necessary by a breach by the owner of his obligations under the act, the tenant is entitled to be reimbursed for any moving costs incurred as a result.

CONDOMINIUM AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 128, An Act to amend the Condominium Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, the bill amends the Condominium Act to enable mobile home parks to be registered as condominium projects. The bill also clarifies the existing law by stating that a designated unit can consist of vacant land. This bill, therefore, provides for flexibility in the development of mobile home condominium projects by enabling a developer to choose between designating a mobile home as a unit in itself, or alternatively designating a vacant lot as a unit upon which a mobile home may be placed.

MUNICIPAL AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 129, An Act to amend the Municipal Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide for separate taxation of mobile home park operators and mobile home owners. Where a mobile home is assessed and taxed by a municipality the tax collector must send a tax notice to the mobile home owner indicating the amount of the tax to be paid in respect of the assessed property. Any taxes due in respect of the assessed mobile home constitute a lien on the mobile home rather than against the land of the owner of the mobile home park.

EDUCATION AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 130, An Act to amend the Education Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: The purpose of this amendment is similar to that of the Municipal Amendment Act. It is to do the same thing and will apply simply to mobile home parks in unorganized communities.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 28, 94, 95, 96 and 98 standing on the notice paper. (See appendix, page 3639.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HEALTH CARE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved resolution 14:

That a select committee of this Legislature be appointed:

1. To review Ontario's health-care costs, health-care financing methods, and services provided for that expenditure; and then to compare that profile with those of other provinces and countries as the committee may deem appropriate for purposes of providing a valid basis for comparison;
2. To review alternative methods of financing the health-care system and the impact of those alternatives on the fiscal and economic affairs of the province; and to make recommendations thereon;
3. To review existing reports which relate to methods and means of containing or reducing health-care costs, and to report its findings to the Legislature.

The committee shall report its final findings no later than October 17, 1978. The select committee shall have authority to sit during recesses and have full power and authority to employ counsel and other such persons as the committee may deem advisable. The proceedings of the committee shall be reported by Hansard in the format used by the House unless otherwise ordered by the committee.

The committee may call for persons, papers and things and examine witnesses under oath, and the Assembly doth command and compel attendance before the said select committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations, for which the honourable the Speaker may issue his warrant or warrants.

The said committee shall be composed of eight members as follows: Elgie (chairman), Conway, Johnson, McCaffrey, Mackenzie, Riddell, Turner and Warner. The committee shall have power to substitute members provided that notice of such substitution is given to the chairman at the commencement of each meeting.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to?

Mr. Breugh: No. I have an amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Breugh moves that resolution 14 be amended by adding a fourth term of reference, namely, to review and recommend alternative methods in the delivery of health-care services.

Mr. Breugh: It is implicit in what is written here as the terms of reference, and after discussing this with the chairman of the committee there was general agreement, that if we're to do a reasonably effective job of examining health-care costs, of course a primary source of health-care costs is how that service is delivered to the public at large.

It is our view that the terms of reference should be expanded somewhat to make it rather explicit that it is the job of this committee, while it is considering all forms of gathering and dispensing revenue, to also look at how the service itself is provided. It is not our intention to broaden substantively what the committee does, nor to broaden its time frame either, but rather to see that implicit in the terms of reference for the committee is this very important part of health-care costs.

We had some previous discussions on this in connection with the matter that was referred to the social development committee. We all recognize the need to go through a rather thorough and substantial exercise in looking at health-care costs in the province. We fail to see how that can be done with any degree of intelligence unless we look at how the money is spent, and that is, in the delivery system itself.

We are not asking that the committee sit forever and a day, nor are we asking that we broaden the terms of reference to include the entire world; we are saying this is an element, and surely the substantive element, in the cost of health-care services and we must look at the delivery system.

[3:30]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we have considered this in our caucus. I just want to speak briefly about what has led us to the opinion that we would not support the amendment for a fourth term of reference.

The first point is that reference of the report of the Minister of Health to the standing committee, insisted on by my leader, led to a very productive result; not only were there changes in OHIP rates but it also became apparent that OHIP financing methods had to be reviewed. As a result one of the recommendations from the committee report called for the establishment of a select committee and this is what the motion before us this afternoon will do.

Frankly, we were persuaded by the concept that the committee need not necessarily be a large one. I should also say frankly that we're very pleased the member for York East, (Mr. Elgie), has consented to act as chairman, or so we are told. We think with a committee comprising a very highly competent and respected chairman with a competent and respected membership from all parties,—and a very short deadline, October 17—something quite constructive and useful can come out of the recommendation.

This is not an all-encompassing review of the provision of health-care services. We also point out to the mover of the amendment, that in the first term of reference, the phrase, "and services provided for that expenditure" will essentially permit the committee, if in their wisdom they think it is useful, to expand their review and consideration to include the provision of those services.

I'm sure you're aware, Mr. Speaker, it indicates in the third term of reference the following: "To review existing reports which relate to methods and means of containing a reducing health care cost." Having looked at some of those reports and read them very carefully myself, I am of the opinion that those reports open up almost the entire field of review. But we are very much concerned that the emphasis be on the financing aspect, and also that the report be available in the fall so action can be taken by this House during the fall session. So often, when a deadline has been given to a select committee, and I have from time to time acted on committees of this type, the committee finds important further things to review and asks for further perpetuation, if not perpetual perpetuation,—

Mr. Warner: Are you on the company law committee this time?

Mr. Nixon:—all of which could be justified if the committee sees fit later in this session. But we feel, for these reasons, the terms of reference are in no way restrictive. We have confidence in the committee, under these terms of reference, to give us a report which this House can act upon effectively and expeditiously. We do not intend to support the expansion of the terms according to the amendment.

Mr. Martel: I am a bit disappointed because I thought my friends to my right had indicated that they were prepared to support the motion.

Mr. Nixon: You live in perpetual disappointment.

Mr. Martel: With the Liberals around that's right—

Hon. B. Stephenson: And perpetual perpetuation of various kinds of peculiar activities.

Mr. Martel:—because God only knows how long they're going to stay in the same place on any given issue beyond one minute, and this is yet another example.

Mr. B. Newman: You can look in a mirror.

Mr. Martel: I want to make a few points. How one can deal simply with the cost without really dealing with the system is beyond me. If you want, you could merely hire a chartered accountant to calculate what the costs are, but if you're not going to look at how they're going to deliver that system, or alternative methods of delivering that system, then I think the exercise is merely an exercise in futility. The sum total of what you will get next fall will be that we might cut this, or that has to go this way. I think you have to look at alternative methods.

Surely, when we reach a point where we're spending, what is it now, almost $4 billion, if we're really seriously looking at costs, we should take the time to find alternative methods to guarantee that we're providing the proper service at the right price. Surely you can't separate one from the other.

I don't pretend to be an expert in the field of health, but I want to tell the House it's like anything else. Unless we look at the delivery of it, we can't really gauge whether we're getting the benefits in terms of the costs. That's precisely what the committee is going to attempt to do. The government is going to take the costs that have occurred from OHIP to this time and determine whether in fact they are reasonable. Well, if that isn't weighed against something, or if that's not measured against something new we might use to attempt to deliver at a different cost, then surely the government doesn't need the exercise we are going through.

I have never been as excited as my friends to the right are that we have to have it come fall. I think that's just a lot of poppycock. If we are spending $4 billion annually, and we are establishing a select committee to look at the financing, surely we must look at the other parts of it. I mean you don't undertake a mathematical calculation and leave one of the ingredients out, Mr. Speaker. You take the entire equation so you can come up with solutions which are relevant. What we are doing in our haste to meet a couple of requests made during the debate on OHIP is to simply look at the cost and surely that's irresponsible when we are spending $4 billion.

I heard the Minister of Labour and she's correct. I suppose there's tons of material somewhere on file that could be looked at. But obviously we haven't done it or we wouldn't have the select committee.

Interjection.

Mr. Martel: Well, what is the government appointing a select committee for then?

And surely if we have tons of material and we hire the staff to glean from it the various recommendations and we look at them, we must look at it in terms of what we are trying to achieve. Just to tabulate the bill to see from the bottom line whether we are getting adequate services for cost is crazy, unless the government is looking at alternatives.

What is the government attempting to achieve, the bottom line? That's insufficient. We know what the bottom line is now and unless the government is going to look at alternatives, we are, I think—and I hate to say it—just wasting our time if the other ingredients aren't included. I implore the House to consider that.

Let's not be in such a hurry to get a report by some deadline and really not achieve what we are attempting to do. Some of us and my friend who is going to chair this committee know what it's like to work under the gun. We went through it with the Inco committee.

We worked under the gun, we made recommendations, everyone gave a little to try and reach a consensus and none of us were satisfied that doing it in haste achieved a lot. We really didn't.

I am sure my friend from York East (Mr. Elgie) agrees with that, that he can't be party to that sort of haste where you have a gun held to your head as you try to reach a consensus; that you are better off taking the time to do a very calculated, very detailed but significant job, because to go through another exercise like Inco and Falconbridge would be a waste of taxpayers' money. It really was a waste because although we got consensus the government failed to respond, because they had to respond almost within hours of receiving our recommendations.

I implore the House that with a $4 billion expenditure at stake; with us prepared to get to the bottom line; we must look at the alternatives to determine whether we have reached the bottom line in the best interests of society and in the best interests of delivering health services at a cost which we can afford.

If we don't do that, then scrap it. I say to the House leader scrap it, because if we don't do that we are going to get to the bottom line and a chartered accountant with a staff working with him could do that for us this summer in about a month. He's not going to look at delivery. He's simply looking at the bottom line in terms of cost and surely we are not just interested in cost. We are interested in the proper type of delivery with the amount of money available to the government to operate. Surely that's what the government should be interested in doing and not cutting it short just for expediency. I would urge the government to reconsider its opinion if it wants to make this a successful venture this summer.

Hon. B. Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I doubt that there has been any subject which has been studied more thoroughly by people with specific expertise in the area of the professional service and the consumer requirements than the delivery of health care services.

This has happened not only in Canada and the United States but around the world. I would doubt that there is any country in the world which has been so diligent in its exploration of this subject as Canada has been. At the present time, in the confines of my own library, I have a six-foot stack of reports—Canadian primarily—which weighs 400 pounds and which constitutes the expert examination of alternative methods of delivery of health care services for this country.

I would implore the members of this committee to make use of the information which has been developed over the past decade, which is thoughtful, incisive and has been examined extremely carefully.

Mr. Breaugh: That's exactly what we are asking you to do.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would remind the honourable members that the third term of reference within those suggested terms of reference give the committee exactly that power to do so.

Mr. Martel: Then accept point four.

Hon. B. Stephenson: I would also remind members of the committee that it took Mr. Castonguay four and a half years to do his study for the province of Quebec. It has taken other committees equally long or very little shorter periods of time to examine the very thorny and difficult subject of delivery of health care services.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that although there may be a great deal of expertise in this House, there is not sufficient expertise to really make the kinds of examination and to draw the kinds of conclusions which would be necessary within that committee if there were going to be developed specific alternative methods of health care delivery legislated by government.

I would recommend very sincerely that the members of the committee take advantage of the opportunity to examine a number of reports which have been written in this country which have relevance for this province and which could provide the background information required by the committee, in a very helpful way.

Mr. Martel: That's all I'm saying.

Hon. B. Stephenson: But a fourth term of reference is absolutely unneeded in order to carry out that kind of exercise.

Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank members of the opposition and the third party for the co-operation there has been in setting up this committee. The size, to begin with, surely has to be an important indication of the seriousness that we have about this committee. I am also delighted with the makeup of the committee. I might say, Mr. Speaker, it must be some sort of record. Fifteen minutes have gone by and I haven't been asked to resign yet by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Hon. B. Stephenson: You are doing pretty well.

Mr. Breaugh: You aren't in the chairmanship, yet. That's the point.

Mr. Warner: Don't put any bets on it.

Mr. Elgie: With that sort of confidence under my belt, I suppose we can just move ahead.

I would like to review the matters leading up to the setting-up of this committee, because as the member for Sudbury knows, I share many of his views. But let's remember what brought this committee about. The social development committee passed a motion on April 20 referring to the House this statement: "Your committee recommends that examination of all aspects of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan be continued by this committee or such other committees as the Legislature may decide," et cetera, et cetera, "with a view to recommending a long-term alternative to the premium system."

The direction was clear. The third party's own leader shortly after that, if I may quote him, on page 1910, said, "We therefore think that a study should go forward within this Legislature to find alternate means of financing health costs." On that same page he also said, "looking at the alternatives to health financing and do this in a constructive kind of way with a view to bringing in a recommendation sometime in the fall."

Mr. Martel: You need the alternatives, then. You'd have to look at them.

Mr. Elgie: So with those recommendations, and with the clear suggestion from other remarks that we needed to have some information about health costs, we proceeded to draw up terms of reference that would allow us to report in the fall, as was the mandate suggested, even by the leader of the third party.

Mr. Breaugh: That's right.

Mr. Elgie: It is my feeling that the first item of the resolution—incidentally, item number one was proposed in order to give all members an overview of the health care system. It will review costs, financing methods, services provided for that expenditure; and then compare that profile with other provinces and other countries, all of which have different methods of delivery, and—

Mr. Martel: Alternatives.

[3:45]

Mr. Elgie:—and all of which can be compared in this precise, well-delineated way, without going through a long, drawn-out procedure.

Similarly, item three, as the member for York Mills (B. Stephenson) has said, asks us to review existing reports, of which there are many. If members will take a moment to look at the Mustard report, they will see that it is broken down into primary care, secondary care, and tertiary care.

Then there is a reaction and response. So the documentation is all there. To ask this committee to go about anything other than a review of the existing reports, I think is unrealistic.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the amendment? I am reminded that the resolution as such has not been read into the record. I am advised that that should be done at least by the mover or the chair, so I will do that.

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that a select committee of this Legislature be appointed:

1. To review Ontario's health-care costs, health-care financing methods, and services provided for that expenditure; and then to compare that profile with those of other provinces and countries as the committee may deem appropriate for purposes of providing a valid basis for comparison;

2. To review alternative methods of financing the health-care system and the impact of those alternatives on the fiscal and economic affairs of the province; and to make recommendations thereon;

3. To review existing reports which relate to methods and means of containing or reducing health-care costs and to report its findings to the Legislature.

The committee shall report its final findings no later than October 17, 1978. The select committee shall have authority to sit during recesses and have full power and authority to employ counsel and other such persons as the committee may deem advisable. The proceedings of the committee shall be reported by Hansard in the format used by the House unless otherwise ordered by the committee.

The committee may call for persons, papers and things and examine witnesses under oath, and the assembly doth command and compel attendance before said select committee of such persons and the production of such papers and things as the committee may deem necessary for any of its proceedings and deliberations for which the honourable the Speaker may use his warrant or warrants.

The committee shall be composed of eight members as follows: chairman, Mr. Elgie; members, Messrs. Conway, Johnson, McCaffrey, Mackenzie, Riddell, Turner and Warner. The committee shall have power to substitute members, provided that notice of such substitution is given to the chairman of the committee at the commencement of each meeting.

Mr. Breaugh has moved an amendment, namely, adding a fourth term of reference which will say, "To review and recommend alternative methods in the delivery of health care services."

All those in favour of Mr. Breaugh's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
I declare the amendment lost.

Resolution concurred in.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 48, An Act respecting Commodity Boards and Marketing Agencies.

House in committee of the whole.

CORONERS AMENDMENT ACT (concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 86, An Act to amend the Coroners Act, 1972.

On section 3:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We are dealing with section 3(3).

Mr. Stong: I have an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Stong moves that section 3(3) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "3. That said section 9 is amended by adding thereto the following subsection: 4(a) where a worker dies as the result of an accident occurring in the course of his employment at or in a construction project, mining plant or mine, including a pit or quarry, the person in charge of such project, mining plant or mine shall immediately give notice of the death to a coroner and the coroner shall issue his warrant to hold an inquest upon the body."

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, the reason I moved this amendment was that I was persuaded by the arguments and the submissions made by the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) on our last occasion; also I had been contacted by a Mr. Higgins of Sudbury with respect to this amendment and the concern was expressed that the section requiring a compulsory inquest not only include action in the mine itself and the shaft but a compulsory inquest arising out of a death including any of the operations of a mine, and hence I included "mining plant" which would include those operations. Simply put, that is the purport of my amendment—to include a mine and the operations concerned therewith.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I was concerned with the definition of a mine when first we discussed this section of the bill. I compared at the time the definition of a mine as contained in the Mining Act, which is some two paragraphs long. It does include grinding, it does include screening, it does include leaching, it does include smelting, it does include refining and all those operations which happen to ores or minerals after they have left the mining shop. Now, the minister did say at that time that the definition of "mine" in the Coroners Act would be coincident with the definition of "mine" in the Mining Act. The minister did relieve my mind at that time.

This amendment, of course, goes a little step in that direction but we only have the word of the minister as recorded in Hansard that the mine means all of those diverse activities that would take place when you are dealing with ores—the smelting, the grinding, the leaching, the crushing. I am supportive of the amendment in that it does to some degree define what a mine is and what mining means. I am just wondering why the minister does not include in the bill the definition of "mine." All it would take would be to translate that out of the Mining Act and include it in the definition section of the Coroners Act and it would relieve all anxiety of all people concerned with this bill.

But who knows what definition succeeding ministers will impose upon the coroner; and if there is somebody from the coroner's jurisdiction in the building, I am sure they hear these words loud and clear—that the traditional definition of "mine" and "mining" as enunciated in the Mining Act is what we are speaking to here this afternoon.

With those provisos, Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the amendment and hope the minister will respond in the affirmative to my concerns.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, as the honourable member who just moved this amendment will confirm, it was as a result of a representative of Local 6500 of the United Steelworkers of America pointing out, after the last day we dealt with this particular legislation and amendments, that in order to be consistent with the Mining Act we should include the term "plant or mining plant."

As I indicated to the honourable member before, it is our intention to use the same definition that is in the Mining Act. However, the legislative counsel felt that in view of our definition of "mine" and "mining plant" it wasn't necessary to put the definition or interpretation into this legislation. It should be understood—and let the record show it would be understood—that the definition in the amendment to this section is as contained in the provisions of the Mining Act at the present time.

Mr. Martel: If I understand the Mining Act, and the definition is explicit in the Mining Act, I wonder when that reference to coroner's inquest is removed—and the Mining Act is now under the Minister of Labour—what interpretation is put on plants like Algoma. I think that's the point my friend is speaking about—places like Algoma and places in Hamilton, or maybe the iron ore plant in Sudbury, which all come under the Mining Act at present.

I would suspect if the definition is removed from the Mining Act, with the overtones and references in the Coroners Act that all of them will be investigated, you might have an occasion where an inquest will not be called. If the minister is so sure it will occur I fail to understand his reluctance to incorporate it into the act. If he says that's what it means then, as sure as he might be, those of us over here are not quite as sure.

I have to remind the minister we've had some bitter experiences over the years. With great assistance from the chief coroner himself and Dr. Bennett some great improvements have been made over the years in the type of representations worker representatives have been able to make at coroner's inquests, but it has not come readily. We've extracted it bit by bit.

It's my 11th year here. We've extracted getting those rights for the workers over the years, to even be allowed to ask a question, or to get away from having all inquests held on Wednesday afternoon so that the businessmen in Sudbury who close their offices could serve on the coroner's inquests every Wednesday afternoon. Those things are not long gone; in fact they are relatively new, with some credit to those people involved in administering the act.

We would just feel a little more comfortable if the minister was prepared to put it in the act. He says he means it, that it entails all those operations my colleague speaks about. That being the case, why doesn't he give us a little peace of mind and simply embody in the act the definition of mining and then we'd have no problems with it? That's being very accommodating for us over here and we would get through the act, because that's what you mean anyway. Surely if that's what you mean you should be prepared to put it in the act.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As the honourable member knows, the definition of "mine" and "mining plant" is not going to be affected by any change as far as inquests are concerned and the transfer of that responsibility from the Mining Act to the Coroners Act. As the honourable member knows, the Mining Act is a very thick document, and the definition of mine and mining plant will remain.

[4:00]

The only other thing I can say is, to repeat what I've already said, the legislative counsel did not feel it was necessary. It was something we considered when the bill was originally being drafted. I would assume your critic felt the same way. There's been no move to amend the interpretation or the definition section. If we talk about mine and mining plant in section 3(3), what other definition is there? What other definition is there, except as is set out in the Mining Act, especially when we add the word "plant"?

If the honourable member feels that what we've said here and what's on the record and in the submissions and points made by the member for Sudbury and in my reply isn't enough, then possibly you can make an amendment to the definition section. But we've gone by that section. That section has been carried by this committee. I don't know what the procedure would be in a situation like that.

Rather than go back to section 1 or 2, whatever the definition section is, I would suggest, rather than have everything explicit, the honourable member realize there is no other definition for "mine" or "mining plant" in respect to inquests. We are taking the exact provisions that exist in the Mining Act, including all the trappings, all the definitions, everything dealing with inquests, from one act to another. I can't imagine that if we're doing that, we would in any way limit the scope or the definition of mine or mining plant.

Mr. Martel: We didn't move an amendment to the definition. But there was unrest, as I spoke to the people from Local 6500, that that might not include those other operations. That's what prompted us to raise whether or not we could be assured by having the original sections from the Mining Act included.

I turn to the chairman and I ask the chairman's indulgence for a moment. If this House gave agreement, I'm sure we could go back to that section, definition. If we could get concurrence, and allow the minister's staff under the gallery who must have the amendment from the Mining Act to prepare the amendment, we could move that very simple amendment of definition. The minister himself says that's what he means. If that's what he means, I'm sure the House is prepared to accept that amendment, and I'm sure we could get concurrence to revert to that section. The minister's staff under the gallery could prepare the amendment for us in a couple of minutes.

The minister includes that definition and I respect the minister's view. But down the road there could be someone else who's a little more ambivalent on it and I prefer to see it written in. I'm sure we could, with the chairman's ruling, get agreement from the House. We could go back and allow the minister to move the amendment on his own rather than us, because I don't have a copy before me.

I checked with my colleague from Sudbury who's trying to look it up, but I'm sure the minister's staff under the gallery has it and we could resolve it in a matter of minutes.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Is the honourable member talking about amending the definition section?

Mr. Martel: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we do that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: There is no definition section in this act before us. I would suggest we can only amend the act that is before us. This has not got a definition section in it and therefore we can't do that.

Mr. Martel: I'm sure we're able to add a section to the act called "definition." Any act has definitions. We simply include under definitions, "this will be." I urge the chairman to allow that, since the minister is agreeable. Surely we shouldn't play around with something like that. If the chairman would give us a few moments to work that out, I'm sure we could include that in the definition section and satisfy everyone.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Might I suggest that we take the vote on this section, then we can take it from there.

Mrs. Campbell: Could I just ask a question of the Solicitor General for clarification? Is the coroner not in the same position vis-à-vis legislation as a judge is? Is he not bound by the terms of the legislation itself, rather than by some sort of statement contained in Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The point I was attempting to make is that the member for Sudbury asked me, by way of clarification, would the definition of "mine" in the section we are dealing with be the same as that now contained in the Mining Act. My answer was yes, in so many words; we are moving a section that is in the Mining Act to the Coroners Act. Therefore, it is obvious that that section and all its ancillary provisions, including a definition of mine and mining plant, is also moved to the Coroners Act.

There is no other definition. I would suggest by being silent in the Coroners Act on a definition we would refer to the Mining Act in respect to any definition, because that provision is moved from one act to another.

However, if the member for Sudbury East feels that we need some further clarification—as I say, I'm going by advice of legislative counsel who are experts in this field, who say that it is not necessary to have a second definition of mine or mining plant in the Coroners Act.

Mr. Germa: With all due respect to the legislative counsel, certainly he is a master of words but I presume that he is not a master of mining. That's where I find some uneasiness. The longer I sit here and listen to the minister debate, the more he's digging himself in deeper and deeper.

Mr. Martel: He agrees with us.

Mr. Germa: I would refer to section 4(a), which says "not including a pit or quarry." By doing that, you have therefore changed the definition of mine as contained in the Mining Act.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I can save the honourable member a question. The member for York Centre's amendment eliminates that exemption.

Mr. Germa: That's understood, Mr. Chairman. The point is that the member for York Centre had to amend the minister's bill in order for it not to contradict the definition of "mine" in the Mining Act, and in the Mining Act it definitely includes a pit or quarry.

I don't know what the legislative counsel was thinking of when he chose to try to exclude pit or quarry from this section when he said it refers to a mine, but not including a pit or quarry. So, there is uneasiness on my part. It is not true, Mr. Chairman, that our critic was not concerned and did not make a move to correct this section. He did in fact, move an amendment to read "workplace," which would include every workplace in the province of Ontario where a worker might get killed. That would include shop, factory, mine, smelter, pit or quarry or wherever people work. That's how concerned the critic for this party was. We did try to get universal coverage for inquests to be held wherever a person died as a result of his occupation.

I think the longer I stay here, the more concerned I am that the definition of mine and the activity of mining must be included. I presume there is a definition section in the Coroners Act which we are amending. I would go along with the minister and I am sure the chairman can find some device—I think he'll unanimously agree—to revert to an earlier section, at which time the minister will introduce amendments in the definition section to describe the noun "mine" and the verb "mine." There are two definitions.

I would again ask the minister to respond and the chairman to find a device to get these definitions in the Coroners Act because there are tens of thousands of people who work in mines, pits and quarries and plants connected with these operations who are concerned with what is going on. I am further concerned, now that I realize what the legislative counsel was trying to do when he was trying to weaken the definition of "mine" by excluding a pit or quarry, which the member for York Centre caught on to and has amended.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Chairman, in order to resolve this dilemma, we would not object to an amendment being proposed by the minister which would include the definition as subsection (b), wherein for the purpose of subsection 4(a) "mine" means, and then go on with the definition in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Is the honourable member suggesting that, rather than putting it in the definition section, we further amend subsection 4(a)? Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Stong: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest we add a subsection 4(b), if it would make it easier.

Mr. Martel: Or put it in the definition section. Whichever is easier.

Mr. Stong: There is no definition section in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would therefore move that there is a new subsection 4(b)—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Can we hold that until the motion before us is dealt with?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, with the greatest of respect, I just don't want duplication; I see the government House leader in consultation with legal counsel and representatives of the minister's staff. Maybe we could straighten it out and do it all at once. If we could just have a couple of minutes to synchronize what is going on. If you could just hold on for a moment to see what—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Martel: —whichever way you want to do it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, there is no reason why we can't go ahead with the honourable member's amendment now and decide one way or another on that section; by the time we are through with that, even if we haven't got the proper wording, we can deal with the balance of the bill and then come back. All right?

Motion agreed to.

Section 3, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Bounsell: You have in hand, Mr. Chairman, a further amendment moved by myself to section 3(3), dealing with subsection 4(a). It proposes that subsection 4(a) be amended by adding the words "in a hospital or laboratory" after the word "quarry" in line three.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I suggest, with respect, we have already carried the section. We had taken your amendments earlier as amendments to this but you were not in the House and we have already carried that section.

Mr. Bounsell: I just arrived in the House, Mr. Chairman; I apologize if that is the case. You have carried the section now?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Bounsell: So our further amendment to the section is out of order. I will speak further to this principle at another part in the bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The members will recall that we had carried through section 11 and reverted to section 3.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Honourable Mr. Kerr moves that section 13 of the bill be struck out and that sections 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18 of the bill be renumbered as sections 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17 respectively.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, I had indicated during second reading of this bill that I would be making this amendment. The main purpose of my making the amendment is as a result of some consultation with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and his staff. There are a number of occasions when, depending on the type of inquest and the complexities of an inquest, it just may not be necessary to have a barrister and solicitor attend in all cases.

[4:15]

At the present time that isn't required. We use people who may be students, for example, or who are from the coroner's office, or even from the Attorney General's office who are not barristers or solicitors, but who have some experience in the conduct and the intricacies of an inquest and who have been able to represent properly the coroner at such inquests.

The request has been made to me and to the ministry that in view of the number of crown attorneys who are under the employ of the Attorney General and the shortage of staff, it would be difficult to have a barrister or solicitor attend all inquests in every case as provided by the section. Therefore, at least at this time, I would request that this section be deleted.

Mr. Stong: Perhaps I am only speaking on behalf of myself when I address myself to this amendment that is being proposed by the Solicitor General at this time.

I appreciate what he has said with respect to the requirement of barristers and solicitors and their attendance at inquests. However, I have had opportunity to speak to the coroner and he has expressed to me a concern that the coroner who is conducting an inquest have the assistance of a person who is knowledgeable in the law. Such a person, naturally, would be a barrister or a solicitor—we hope.

However, if section 13 of the bill is deleted we revert to the old act. The present section of the act reads that "every coroner, before holding an inquest, shall notify the crown attorney of the time and place at which it is to be held, and the crown attorney or his representative shall attend the inquest and shall act as counsel to the coroner at the inquest." I stand to be corrected on this, but I understand that a crown attorney or a representative of a crown attorney must be a person who is designated as such in legislation. In other words, a crown attorney acting in his capacity as a crown attorney cannot designate a lay person or a lawyer in law to represent him or his interests or the interests of the crown attorney at an inquest, or at any other hearing.

I appreciate the concern about the claim that barristers and solicitors are the only ones knowledgeable in the law. I also recognize that on second reading representations were made with respect to the position that lay people ought to conduct this type of inquiry and assist the coroner. I have no objection to that in principle. I'm wondering if it could be accomplished better by leaving the present section 13 in the bill and amending it so that it includes "or a barrister or a solicitor or any other person designated by him." This would avoid having a crown attorney act beyond the scope of his jurisdiction in appointing a person other than a crown attorney.

I stand to be corrected that a crown attorney can only appoint a crown attorney, but that was my understanding. If we're concerned about barristers and solicitors or any other lay person, then perhaps the section should remain and be amended to include "or any other person." I'd be glad to hear from the minister on that.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I have no objection to the additional wording suggested by my friend—that is, adding the words "or any other person" after the words "or a barrister and solicitor" in the third line of subsection 1.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Are you then withdrawing your amendment, Mr. Solicitor General?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Did the member for York Centre wish to amend section 13?

Mrs. Campbell: Are you accepting the Solicitor General's amendment?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: He hasn't made an amendment. He has withdrawn his amendment to delete the clause.

Mr. Stong: Then I will propose that the words, "or any other person" be included in section 13(1) following "barrister and solicitor" in the third line.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I have that in writing, please?

Mr. Stong: Yes, sir.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall section 13 be stood down for the moment?

Mrs. Campbell: No, it's carried.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I'm awaiting Mr. Stong's amendment.

Sections 14 to 18, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there a further amendment from the Solicitor General?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Chairman, in reference to the definition of "mine" and "mining plant" as suggested by the members for Sudbury and Sudbury East, it is now my feeling that it would be better to amend section 1 of the bill, which is the definition section.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: This will be a new section 1 of the bill and all other sections will be renumbered, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think that will look after the points raised by the honourable members.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Honourable Mr. Kerr moves that the bill be amended by adding thereto a new section 1, which shall read: "Section 1 of the Coroners Act, 1972, being chapter 98, is amended by adding thereto the following clauses:

(aa) 'Mine' means a mine as defined in part IX of the Mining Act.

(ab) 'Mining plant' means a plant as defined in part IX of the Mining Act."

Sections 1 to 18 of the bill are to be renumbered accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

On section 13:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Stong moves that section 13 of the bill be amended by adding the words "or any other person" after "barrister and solicitor" in line 6.

Motion agreed to.

Section 13, as amended, agreed to.

Bill 86, as amended, reported.

MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES ACT

Resumption of the adjourned consideration of Bill 85, An Act to revise the Minister of Correctional Services Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I would remind the members that we were dealing with section 9 when this debate was adjourned. We have before us an amendment from Mr. Ziembra which was a matter of discussion.

On section 9:

Mr. Ziembra: To expedite matters, I'm going to suggest that we divide that amendment and vote on the first part which deals with access by MPPs to correctional centres; then we could leave the other part, dealing with the coming and going of MPPs' mail and vote on that separately, if that is agreeable.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I have no objection, but in fairness, Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what I proposed on Friday when you gave a ruling. Now, if you will give a ruling in the proper way which would allow that, I think we would expedite matters today, as we would have expedited them on Friday.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: With respect, Mr. Minister, I don't recall giving any ruling on this matter. I made a suggestion that over the weekend this might be sorted out. As I recall, you had an amendment to the amendment to 9(a).

Hon. Mr. Drea: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: And I do not have that in writing.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Well you can have it right now, Mr. Chairman, because I will introduce it.

However, before I introduce it, if you will grant me the liberty, is everybody still agreed that they want the visitation rights in the act or do they want it as a tradition—

Mr. Ziembra: Yes, we're sure of it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, you did. Other members weren't too sure, so you just wait a minute.

Mr. Worton: I'm not too sure either.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It was my understanding on Friday, from the House leader of the Liberal Party, that there was a consensus. However, it was brought to my attention afterwards by some senior people in the party that there may not have been, but if there is a consensus I will proceed. You know I have no objection. I just want to know if that's what members want. I know where the third party stands.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Honourable Mr. Drea moves that subsection 1 of the proposed section 9(a), moved as an amendment to the bill, be amended by adding at the end thereof, "unless the minister determines that the institution, community resource centre or facility is insecure or an emergency condition exists therein."

Hon. Mr. Drea: While we are waiting a moment, how do we propose to delete—or what are we going to do with subsections 2 and 3?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I have your proposed amendment, which was a further amendment. The amendment was to delete subsections 2 and 3 of the proposed amendment, which was in order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: You have it?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I have that in writing here. We will take it as two amendments to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: All right.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: We have two separate amendments to the amendment; we will take them one at a time. You have an amendment to the amendment which adds those words to section 1, and your further amendment is to delete subsections 2 and 3 of the proposed amendment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Well yes, Mr. Chairman, except that the member for High Park-Swansea said those are the two he wants to separate. This was what began the trouble on Friday. So would you tell me, since you ruled they couldn't be separated on Friday, or you appeared to rule that way, what you intend to do today before I move it.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, with respect, I have two amendments from you to

Mr. Ziemba's motion, which is before me. One is to add certain words to 9(a)(1); and your second amendment to the amendment is to delete subsections 2 and 3.

Mr. Nixon: That could be one.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: If we do this it will accomplish your purpose. Is that agreed?

Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion on these amendments?

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, I want to say that over the 20 years that I have been a member here, and being close to one of the larger institutions in the province, namely the Guelph Correctional Centre, I have never run into any difficulty getting into the premises—there are some people who have difficulty getting out—but, really, I would like to know what advantage this is going to give. I have always felt that the ministry has honoured members' wishes when they wanted to call there. I have had reports of a few examples of members abusing those privileges at times. I thought they used bad judgement 10 or 12 years ago. I would like the minister to convince me of what this amendment will do that just good ordinary common horse sense won't do with arrangements as we have had them in the past.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In all fairness, as a member, not necessarily as the minister, I would have preferred that the same procedures remain, which is as it has been since Mr. Allan Grossman was the minister. I was prepared to file the administrative order with the Clerk so it could be brought to the attention of members or new members in the future. However, on Friday it was the feeling of some veteran members of the Legislature, not the least of whom was the House leader of the Liberal Party, who has compiled a distinguished record here, that it would be better if it was formally placed into legislation.

As I said originally some time ago, and again on Friday, while I preferred one thing I was certainly agreeable if it was the consensus of members, whatever members felt most comfortable with. I would think that now, since the New Democratic Party has produced a unanimous consensus, if you want to put it that way, and they would prefer it to be in legislation; that is there appears to be a consensus in the opposition—my own party is somewhat ambivalent on the matter—I think that perhaps to save time we will put it in there. But there certainly will not be any change in the procedures.

The one thing I would draw to the attention of members, though, is that the question of when the place becomes insecure is dealt with later on in the bill. It gives us the right to declare an institution insecure, for a number of reasons; and when you do the inmates must be removed to a secure institution. The insecure status is just a brief period of time while the institution is still in existence, because there wouldn't be any inmates in it later.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Ziemba has moved that the bill be amended by adding thereto section 9a(1), (2) and (3).

Hon. Mr. Drea has moved an amendment to the amendment, that the proposed 9a(1) moved as an amendment to the bill, be amended by adding at the end thereof: "unless the minister determines that the institution, community resource centre or facility is insecure, or an emergency condition exists therein."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea further moves that the proposed section 9a(2) and (3) be deleted.

Mr. Ziemba: Mr. Chairman, this has to do with MPPs' mail coming and going. The minister has advised us that the Ombudsman is considering special envelopes, because there is fear that his envelopes could be duplicated and used for illegal purposes. It was for that reason that our mail is opened, censored.

Now two things: With regard to MPPs' mail going to the institution, most of the new jails have elaborate and sophisticated x-ray equipment that checks people coming and going. I don't know why we can't use that, if the minister is worried that one of us is sending a hacksaw to some prisoner, or that somebody has stolen our letter and is using it to send a hacksaw to some prisoner.

Failing that, if we have a courier service that delivers plaques to people who reach age 90 or are celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary, why couldn't we use the same courier service to deliver mail to institutions, to ensure that MPPs' mail isn't opened and censored?

I don't feel as strongly about the mail going from MPPs as I do about the mail coming from the institutions to MPPs. Here is a situation where we are inviting criticism from people in the institutions. As far as I am concerned, they are at some risk if they criticize the staff, because mail addressed to MPPs will be opened and read. To my mind, there is no excuse for this mail to be opened. Certainly, prisoners aren't sending hacksaws out of jail. There is nothing that could be coming out of prison by way of contraband that would require the minister—

Hon. Mr. Drea: You have got to be kidding.

Mr. Martel: I don't want them to send me a hacksaw blade. That's what he is saying. I can always purchase one. They don't have to send us one.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There is other contraband that comes out.

Mr. Martel: Sure, but none that would benefit Ed.

Mr. Philip: There are easier ways of getting contraband out; you can get contraband out other ways.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Ziembra: I might accept MPP's mail being opened going to a prison, but I do not accept that mail coming out of a prison necessarily should be opened. I don't know if the minister can convince me that this is absolutely necessary, if there is some great risk to the security. I don't know why he insists on opening this mail. I hope that the third part of the amendment carries.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask a question of the minister. What is the position of an MPP if he or she is in receipt, from one of the institutions, of some sort of material which is contraband material? What is the obligation on the MPP to turn it over and to whom? I would like to know what protection there is that we can extend to anyone in an institution if we are in receipt of such material and what our legal obligation is having been in receipt of it?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could I ask the member for Sudbury East to please take his seat? He is between the chairs and the speaker.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, not being a solicitor, my concern would be that the contraband in the envelope did not necessarily arrive at the Parliament Buildings—

Mrs. Campbell: It might arrive at the east door instead of the north door and we would be in trouble.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No. It might arrive at your riding office or it might arrive at your home address and it mightn't have MPP on the envelope. It might be just written to Margaret Campbell, and your address is a matter of public record. What concerns me in this is—and I'll get a ruling in just a moment—I wouldn't think you had any protection at all. There might be some limited form of protection if you chose to unveil it in the House and say, "Look what I have received," on the basis that the security of the Ministry of Correctional Services for that institution had been breached or that it was in the public interest.

The courts already—through the first two levels of the Federal Court of Canada right up to the Federal Court of Appeal—have ruled that with the most precious and the most sacred privilege in our society, which is the lawyer-client communication, the absolute confidentiality of it must bow to the security regulations of the institution. That was the case I mentioned the other day, Solosky versus the Queen.

When that relationship, which is squarely enconced in law, must bow to security—and that is what the courts have ruled in this case so far, pending the final determination by the Supreme Court of Canada—it seems to me the communication between an inmate and the MPP, which regardless of our feelings is not enconced in law or in tradition anywhere, certainly must bow. I am informed that if the material is a narcotic or otherwise illegal, et cetera, then he or she must turn it over to the police.

Secondly, other material does not have to be turned over. There is no penalty in our regulations except confiscation of material. For instance, cash is contraband. Cash is not allowed in an institution. It's quite true you have trust accounts and so forth. It's neither allowed to come in nor to come out. In a great many cases it is a more substantial form of contraband than is a narcotic, either in the small leaf form or in pill form. It seems to me the fundamental issue here is security.

I think you have to look at it in this regard, that at the moment we do not necessarily open every letter going out to an MPP, nor open every letter coming in to an inmate that has an MPP's signature or letterhead on it but we may. We are not talking about hacksaw blades or anything as mundane as that. Anybody who is knowledgeable, either as a professional in the legal field or has had experience in the courts, is fully aware of the number of items that can be of great value to people on the inside, or certain things coming out.

A continuing flow of letters comes to me from inmates. They know the system and in some cases they describe rather substantial matters going on; as a matter of fact, I have received material from other honourable members here that has been sent to them directly by inmates describing, in a couple of cases with great accuracy and in some others with less, exactly what was going on. There doesn't appear to be an impediment against the inmate under this system.

I would say that I agree with the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) that I would have some substantial doubts on this, were it not for the absolute right of the inmate to communicate with and to receive communications from the Ombudsman or the correctional investigator for Canada, whichever is applicable in his case.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Drea's amendment please say "aye."

Those opposed say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 10 to 21, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 22:

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I believe you have an amendment to section 22 which is really a change of just a couple of words.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Drea moves that section 22 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "The minister may designate any person as an inspector to make such inspection or investigation as the minister may require in connection with the administration of this act and the minister may and has just cause to dismiss any employee of the ministry who obstructs an inspection or an investigation or withholds, destroys, conceals or refused to furnish any information or thing required by an inspector for the purposes of the inspection or investigation."

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the honourable minister what powers he has at this time under the old statute for an investigation, as well as an inspection?

Hon. Mr. Drea: None, that is the basic difficulty. We have the powers to do an investigation but we do not have the powers that would be normally assigned in an inspection. On an investigation, which is less formal than an inspection, we want to have those powers, particularly the right to obtain records.

A very good example of this is that prior to my time, in the Don Jail inquiry which led to the Shapiro royal commission, one of the reasons why there was a determination made to go to a public inquiry was the inability during an investigation to obtain records and so forth and so on.

Mr. Nixon: Police records, criminal records and so on?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, no. These are records of the institution. For instance, who was on duty at certain times—a number of internal matters like that.

An inspection is a formal procedure; we inspect every institution from time to time for security and a number of other matters. We want to have the same rights if an internal investigation is required.

Our normal procedure when we do an investigation is if there is any reasonable cause to believe there has been anything contrary to the Criminal Code, immediately the police are called in and conduct their own separate investigation for the purposes of the crown. Notwithstanding that, because of our internal regulations and our discipline procedures we carry on an internal investigation, subject to the regulations of the Ministry of Correctional Services Act, which has nothing to do with whether or not criminal proceedings may or may not result.

Mr. Nixon: I certainly have no objection to the amendment. I find it strange, however, that not only does the minister feel he needs these powers spelled out specifically, but that in the past anyone would consider that the minister or his predecessors didn't have full access to them, because they are your records. Whose are they, if they are not yours? That is as to who was on duty and who did what, when. They are your jails; you are the boss. Whose are they, if they are not yours?

[4:45]

Hon. Mr. Drea: Well, Mr. Chairman, they are ours, but by the same token, we feel we would like to have the same powers in an investigation as we do in the regular and routine formal inspection. Then there is no argument as to how certain items or certain records were obtained et cetera.

One of the difficulties is that after an investigation it may be very possible there will be internal proceedings leading to outside grievances within the Civil Service Commission. This is of some concern to us.

Motion agreed to.

Sections 23 to 25, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 26:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 26 of the bill be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(1) The minister may authorize an inmate or group of inmates to participate in a work project or a rehabilitation program outside the correctional institution in which the inmate or inmates are confined, and the minister may authorize the absence of the inmate or group of inmates from the correctional institution for that purpose on such terms and conditions as the minister may specify.

"(2) Every inmate who is absent from a correctional institution under subsection 1 shall comply with such terms and conditions as are specified by the minister.

"(3) Every inmate who contravenes subsection 2 without lawful excuse, the proof of which lies upon him, is guilty of an offence and on summary conviction is liable to imprisonment of a term of not more than one year."

Hon. Mr. Drea: We are taking inmates out in work gangs now. The same amendment will be used in a later section with regard to temporary absence.

This is something which the courts so far have been unable to reckon with because there is the tendency in the courts now, unless somebody physically breaks away from an institution by going through the wire or over the wall, to regard that as unlawfully at large rather than escaped. The sentences being given these days for being unlawfully at large are very minor.

It is my feeling the public deserves to be reassured when we take inmates out of institutions. There is no question the inmates are carefully screened and are not a security risk before they go, but there has to be a deterrent to them walking away. The deterrent is making it a provincial offence to walk away from that outside work gang, by virtue of the fact it is a violation of one of the terms and conditions set out by the minister. This will reinforce our efforts before the courts to have these substantial sentences passed on people who violate the trust the ministry has put in them as well as the trust the public has put in them.

When I first introduced this bill and was discussing it I said we might introduce this. Subsequent to that, two people walked away from a paid job in northwestern Ontario and stayed out for a day. Immediately they were charged with being unlawfully at large rather than with escape.

We have also had a bad situation in one court in the province where a person walked out of a minimum security institution—one without a fence and obviously one that's easy to walk out of. The court gave him one day on the grounds that if we really wanted to confine somebody we'd better build walls. This defeats the whole purpose of a minimum security institution where the person is gradually brought around to being able to go back to full status in the community.

We want to have this in there for two reasons: First, the public wants some assurance that there will be penalties for people who do violate that trust, because it is costly. These people may not be security risks and they may not be a danger to other people if they do take off, but nonetheless it's going to cost you as a taxpayer extra costs in policing and in court proceedings. Therefore, there has to be a deterrent.

Second, all inmates, when they do this type of thing, will be treated accordingly. It won't be one judge's interpretation as to whether walking away from custodial care in an outside work gang is different to breaking out of a maximum security institution and, therefore, falls to the much lesser charge.

Mr. Bradley: Speaking to the amendment, we agree with this amendment and see it as being essential to making the program a success. Security is very important. The minister has aptly put the case for it. If this program is to be a success as far as the public is concerned, the public must have a certain degree of security, the kind of security that can be brought about by means of a reasonable deterrent.

The minister has given some prime examples of how this is not operating at the present time without specific legislation to guide the courts. We in the opposition see an escape as being an escape, regardless of whether it's from a maximum security institution or whether it's from a work gang or from a minimum security institution. We feel that the amendment allows for handling this particular problem in the appropriate manner.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ziembra: I have a further amendment to section 26.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ziembra moves that section 26 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

"(2) Where an inmate participates in a work project under subsection 1, the inmate shall be paid a wage for his work that is similar to the wage received by a person who performs substantially the same kind of work as a full-time vocation.

"(3) All amounts owing to an inmate in respect of work performed under this section shall be held by the ministry in trust for the inmate, to be paid to the inmate upon his release from the correctional institution at the commencement of parole or the expiration of his sentence; but the ministry may deduct from the moneys owing to the inmate an amount calculated in accordance with the regulations, as compensation to the ministry for the inmate's accommodation in the correctional institution."

Mr. Bradley: Do you have an extra copy of that amendment? I have the other amendment you proposed.

Mr. Ziembra: Do you want it read again?

Mr. Bradley: I have a copy now.

Mr. Ziembra: This is the key section to this legislation, and it has to do with work projects. While most progressive people see this as good legislation, the worry that has been so often expressed is still there. Our provincial correctional centres could be providing cheap labour or slave labour. The wage levels could be depressed and projects could be taken over and done by prisoners, projects that would normally be done by the public or private sector.

I've met with the minister's staff and they have assured me, as he's assured me, that before any project is taken over by the Ministry of Correctional Services they check with the local union first. That's well and good and I'm pleased to see that, but we have no assurances that this is going to be the procedure by his successor a few years down the road.

When I read the minister's speeches and learn that getting offenders out working in the community should provide the people of Ontario with $10 million worth of free labour this year, that's a cause for concern, especially when he adds, "We have only begun to scratch the surface. Our goal is to help Canada regain its economic strength." What the heck are we going to do, put all 5,000 prisoners out working to regain Canada's economic strength?

I don't think the minister means that. If he does, then we are in trouble in this province. We have 300,000 people out of work who are looking for work. I can't think of the kind of work he could be taking over that would guarantee that somewhere along the line jobs wouldn't be done by prisoners that could be done by trade unionists or people in the private sector.

I also know that there is going to be pressure on the minister from all of these local councils. There have been a few incidents now where local councils were denied the use of his free labour. I can see that escalating over the years with local councils looking for a cheap way out. They won't have to raise the mill rate if they can get their local projects done by convict labour. I certainly don't want to support any legislation of that kind. That's why I'm moving that inmates should be paid the prevailing rate for work that they do. The ministry can deduct from their pay cheques their accommodation expenses and give the rest to their dependants because those dependants are at present getting money from Community and Social Services in any case.

This isn't a new proposal. The minister has a program in place in Guelph where prisoners are members of the Canadian Food and Allied Workers Union. They are paid union wages, and there is a deduction of $5 a day from their pay cheques towards their accommodation. I understand that the ministry is also paying for prisoners to plant trees in northern Ontario.

If money can be found to do this, I certainly would like to see his ministry, by way of perhaps switching funds from the Ministry of Community and Social Services or whatever, pay people and get away from this idea of free and cheap labour.

Mr. Bradley: I have for some time shared the concerns expressed by the member for High Park-Swansea. Time and time again we have questioned the minister, through his estimates or in the House or privately, and also people from his ministry, to determine that people from Correctional Services institutions are not doing jobs that would otherwise be done by those who might be unemployed in the province of Ontario.

This has been a concern of organized labour. It has been a concern of those who are presently on either the welfare rolls or collecting unemployment insurance. However, on these occasions the minister has provided assurances to the House or to committee or to members individually that such is not the case. He has outlined carefully his consultation with the Canadian Labour Congress, the Ontario Federation of Labour, the Canadian Union of Public Employees and various other unions. As a consultant on this particular program he has a person from the labour union movement who advises him on the advisability of these particular projects as they are undertaken.

All of us in the House ought to be ever vigilant that the programs and projects being carried out are not being done at the expense of those who require jobs within the community.

[5:00]

I think those assurances have been pretty ironclad. We have organized labour to inform members of the opposition, and to inform the ministry if, indeed, this is not being done. There is consultation before projects are carried out to determine whether or not they might in any way be done by paid employees. I think the ministry is concerned enough to determine before allowing projects to be carried out that they are not merely requests by various municipalities to get work done that they don't want to pay employees to do.

To pay inmates from our institutions in Ontario the going rate to do this work would simply eliminate many of the projects that might otherwise be undertaken. I can think of certain projects within my own community, one particularly involving the clean-up of the old Welland Canal, where there is no way the federal, provincial, or municipal government would undertake a project of this kind. However, with the assistance of labour provided by inmates from our institutions this kind of project may be undertaken and may be quite successful.

The assurances will be there from the labour union movement and others that the work being done, once again, is not work being done at the expense of those who might otherwise have jobs. Because we feel paying the inmates the going rate would be detrimental to this entire program and in fact, render it almost impossible to carry out in a meaningful way, we cannot support this amendment.

Mr. M. Davidson: I rise to speak in favour of the amendment as it is placed, although I personally would like to have seen it go a little further. The member for High Park-Swansea suggested during his remarks that a portion of the moneys so paid should be directed towards the maintenance of the families. Unfortunately, I noticed that is not included in the amendment.

While not trying to cast any aspersions on the ministry or the Minister of Correctional Services I suggest a lot of the work now being carried out by inmates in the various municipalities could well be done by people within the municipality had the Treasurer seen fit to live up to the Edmonton commitment and forwarded enough funding to the municipalities so these jobs would be done and paid for in the normal manner.

I am one of those who, like the member for St. Catharines, agree with the type of program. I agree that the work program is probably one of the more progressive things that have come forward in this House. I also feel that work being done is work that should be paid for. When one takes a look at what is happening here you realize that in these types of programs, such as the one in Guelph where the inmate is earning a wage in conjunction with the trade-union agreement, he is paying back a portion of that to the institution for his accommodation and for various other items he may require during his stay in that institution. A portion of that is also going towards financing his dependants and his family, whereas were this not the case, they in all probability would be relying entirely upon the social services of the community. All of which again is money paid out by the province one way or another. I feel this is the kind of situation, if at all possible, the minister should be working towards.

I fully understand this is not a program you can implement overnight. I fully understand that you can't expect to have all inmates who have been provided work in various communities receiving pay starting next Monday once it shows on a piece of paper.

As I said earlier, had the Treasurer and the government seen fit to fund the municipalities the way they are supposed to and lived up to the Edmonton commitment, a good number of these jobs would be on the payrolls of the municipality and would not have to be done by inmates of institutions.

I accompanied the member for High Park-Swansea to the briefing for the estimates and I was also pleased to see that there is discussion among the ministry, the community, and the unions representing the workers, within those various communities or on other projects taking place.

Perhaps the minister can respond to this. I'm not at all certain there are not some jobs carried out where there is no trade union and where, perhaps, consultation with a trade union cannot take place. We're not at all certain as to whether or not these jobs are jobs that can be done by people working on a full-time basis.

However, I do support the amendment as moved by the member for High Park-Swansea. If we're not going to get it through at this time, I think it's something the ministry and the people in the Liberal Party should look at. Perhaps all of us, by working together, can work towards that goal and find an answer to that problem.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I would like to recommend this amendment to my colleagues because it takes a very large step in the right direction. I think it's quite in keeping with the momentum being built in this area by the current minister. I would just hope that after we accept and pass this amendment, the minister would cast his mind even further into the future and look at some of the other things in this area that could be done.

We're all aware of the terribly high and unacceptable recidivism rate in the province of Ontario. I suspect one of the reasons we have such a high rate is that people in our society who are frustrated by their lack of skills often end up in our institutions. After spending some long period of time there, not particularly usefully in many cases, they return to society—a society with terribly high unemployment—still with limited skills, and find themselves totally unable to function as they should be able to in that society. Often, they commit an offence again which puts them back in the slammer—the cycle is never-ending.

I know the minister is very, very concerned about that problem and is taking large steps to get it under control. But there are all the other problems involved too, such as the problem of a child whose parent is in an institution. That child is part of a de facto single-parent family, and is living, most likely, on some form of social assistance. That presents to the child all sorts of additional problems, aside from the fact that one of his parents is in prison. That too, is one of the reasons we have such a high rate of juvenile delinquency with children in that position.

I think that the approach being taken by the minister and my colleague from High Park-Swansea is an excellent one. In some jurisdictions such as Sweden, where they are quite enlightened, in this particular matter at any rate, they have tried to set up work programs for a number of reasons which I think are very good. One of the most important reasons is not to have the inmate actually filling his time doing some kind of work because the society has a belief in the Protestant work ethic, but rather because the inmate will learn skills that will be useful and marketable when he or she returns to society.

In Sweden they have had a great deal of success with their projects. As I understand it, the division of money in some of those projects runs in the following way: The person is paid the union rate for the job, which is a relatively reasonable rate, and the money is divided into three equal parts with some exceptions made in cases of need; one third of the money goes to provide a fund to re-establish the inmate when he or she goes into society from the institution; one third of the money provides real assistance to the dependants of the inmate in society so we don't face all of the other social damage that arises from having a parent in prison and one third goes to pay not only for the inmate's few needs, such as food, cigarettes, or what have you, while in the institution, but to pay for the inmate's clothing, to pay part of the costs to the ministry—to the Ministry of Correctional Services in our case—where that person is being incarcerated.

I favour the amendment very much because it is a big step in the right direction. I would like to add my congratulations to the many that have been offered to the minister for the approach he's taking. I hope he'll continue in the future as he's done up until now with that kind of picture at the end of the tunnel, so that some time over the next few years we will have a system in Ontario that we can hold up to the world as a fine example to follow.

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, I'm going to oppose this amendment. But before I do I would like to place on the record—it will just take a couple of minutes—the various work programs of the ministry, because they're not all we do. In some of the remarks that have been made today by various members of the New Democratic Party there is a bit of confusion.

Nothing would please me more than if there were sufficient prison industries—by which I mean industries employing prisoners either as the whole work force or as in the Guelph abattoir situation, a mixed labour force of civilians and inmates—to go around. Not only in our system in Ontario but, believe me—I don't get along very well with the federal government—but I would like to see nothing better, because of their particular type of inmate, than that they had enough such industries. But, they are not there.

We have moved heaven and earth, quite frankly. We're making some progress. A great deal of support and help has come from Canada Manpower, the Federal Department of Public Works, and a number of bodies like that. The industry just isn't there.

When I say prison industry I mean industry physically located in the prison, such as the Guelph abattoir, or the mattress factory at Mimico, or the jute bagnill that we will soon have at Mimico, and other developments elsewhere. The jobs are not coming. Let me explain.

It used to be a great source of employment for inmates to make licence plates. It is a defunct industry. We used to make eight million or 10 million a year; now we make around a million and just the coloured markers. The market is defunct.

At one time we used to have long sentences and they could make their own clothing. Now, the sentences are getting shorter and, besides, how many jobs are there for males in that particular type of thing? You have to look at getting somebody an occupation where, when they come out they can get a job. There isn't much market at the moment for making licence plate markers, although, certainly, well—

Mr. Bradley: Why didn't you finish it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I was going to say we were trying to get into the export field, and we may very well, but again, that's for only a very small portion of the people in institutions.

At one time the best project we had was farming. It was killed on the grounds that it didn't lead to farm jobs because the hired hand wasn't there any more. My predecessors way back made a terrible mistake. The best thing about the farming operation was it led to the most basic of all work skills and perfected it, the ability to work hard and long on a sustained basis. It's a very labour-intensive type of field.

At the moment, we have about 450 to 500 inmates who are gainfully employed every day, and I emphasize the word gainfully. They either go out of the institution on a temporary absence and work for an employer, or they are in the mattress factory, or the abattoir, or other paying projects.

Not only myself as the minister, but as a ministry, we are totally opposed to convict labour; that was abolished at the turn of the century. We would be using that labour in competition with and taking away jobs from people who have done no wrong. I can think of nothing more unfair than to penalize a man or a woman who has never done anything except be an asset to society.

We move progressively in the penal field so we are not doing that. When they go to work for General Motors or for the chicken plucking factory in Mr. Gaunt's riding, in Walkerton, or when they go to many small plants and so forth in and around Ottawa, they are paid for it. They are paid dollar for dollar, penny for penny, fringe for fringe, what have you, whether there is a union or not. We insist on that.

In addition we have people who are living in our CRCs, our community resource centres. Most of them go gainfully to work every day. Some go to school. We consider that to be work although obviously they are not paid to go to school. We will not undercut labour.

Finally we come to the bulk of the inmates. All right, we are bringing them out—the ones who are responsible enough, which is the polite way of saying not a security risk—to do tasks that otherwise wouldn't be done in the community. And I think that's the operative thing. We are not taking on long-term projects because if it is a long-term project, and I mean by that more than a couple of weeks or a month, you could hire people to do it. You should be able to hire, and I am talking about five or six days a week of course.

For instance, how would I be in a position to pay for something like this? Mr. Chairman, with your indulgence, this is from the Westway Horticultural Society:

"Dear Sirs: The R. J. Smith senior citizens apartments landscape project which we undertook this spring for the first time involved far too much physical work for older members but thanks to a gang of six able-bodied men from Mimico it was turned into a good experience for all concerned. We are grateful. I must say that the men were pleasant and co-operative and although gardening seemed to be a new experience for most of them, the association was pleasant. I strongly recommend this work treatment as humane and constructive and I am certain that our residents at the home and Westway Horticultural members appreciate the flower beds that were planted this weekend."

That was written in May. Now, how would I ever get around to figuring out who should pay those six inmates of Mimico who went and did that? Is it the Westway Horticultural Society? Is it the Minister of Community and Social Services? Is it Metro or is it me? I am not in a position to pay out those kinds of funds.

First of all, I think we have to recognize that there is somebody who hasn't been mentioned; that is the victim. If people are going to get paid, I am all for them getting paid, making some money and picking up their responsibilities, when they are gainfully employed and in our custody, of paying income tax, OHIP, CPP. But the victim—there has to be some accountability. You don't go to jail to get a job and build up a nest egg.

That's it, and I don't care if there are some very fuzzy proposals coming from some civil servants in Ottawa indicating that people would feel much better if they came home from jail with a bit of money in their pockets. But you forget the victim. You are not just a statistic when you are in a provincial institution. You did something. Many of these are victimless or you cannot identify the victim. It has been mischief, or perjury. It has been things for which you cannot specifically say that he took money from you, or he took money from me.

Nonetheless, all of us including the taxpayer out there, had to pay for the police, the courts and now, here. There has to be an accountability. What we are building up in our system now is an accountability that you will go and do community work if you are incarcerated without pay. If you do that on a sustained and responsible basis, then you will get first crack at the paying jobs available to inmates.

For instance, this summer we will be putting a great number into harvesting, farm picking and so forth. Those who have worked hard in community projects and have shown their responsibility will be offered the chance to go out as farm labour and be paid penny for penny, dollar for dollar. They will keep the bulk of that. They will pay back their board to us, or they will pay their board to the farmer. To me, this is a logical system of building up a person's responsibility and self-worth. The first thing they have to get through their head is that they are accountable. They must make some accounting to society in general as well as to their particular victim.

If they do that, show progress and accept the discipline and responsibility that comes with sustained work, that is fine. Then they move out to a position where they can benefit themselves and benefit the community by working and being paid. They also begin to do many of the things that were mentioned here. The final thing I want to say on this particular matter is that if we had to pay for the community work, quite frankly, we would have to stop every single project across this province tomorrow. How am I going to pay? There is a case that was given to me jointly by the member for St. Catharines and my own House leader. A man who was stabbed very seriously in St. Catharines some time ago through no fault of his own, a totally innocent victim, is now paralyzed for life. We are sending him inmates from the Niagara Detention Centre from time to time to cut his lawn, shovel his snow and to help him to remain in his own home. What municipality could afford to get into that type of personalized service, that type of one-on-one service and that type of cost in finding a person to do it on a once-a-month basis? One couldn't even employ anybody to do that.

I respect the concern of the New Democratic Party on this matter. I am not nor is the ministry nor is the government—in fact, it is stated government policy—undertaking work that costs one wage earner his job nor will we undertake anything that erodes future job opportunities. We have been able to do this across the province in varying degrees. We have produced on-the-job training for our own people. It makes it much better when they go back and go out. On that basis, I will not accept this amendment.

Mr. Worton: I have something I would like to draw to the minister's attention. Perhaps this bill isn't the appropriate place.

Mr. Chairman: I hope it's in regard to this amendment.

Mr. Worton: Oh, it will help out. For many years the Guelph Correctional Centre was one of the beauty spots of the institutions under your ministry. The grounds directly surrounding the buildings are still in good shape, but if you go along the road where there are streams and waterfalls along Highway 7, they are certainly in a bad state and need overhauling. The grass is knee-high and the area is certainly a mess.

I would think that's a project very close to home that you could improve. I realize there are a number of visitors to that area who perhaps don't leave the grounds the way they should. This would involve the hauling away of stones, the cutting of the grass and the general condition of the trees. I think that would be a good project to start close to home.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It will be done by the time we come back.

Mr. Chairman: You have heard Mr. Ziemba's amendment to section 26. The mover said the amendment would add sections 2 and 3. I hope he is agreeable to changing those to sections 4 and 5.

All those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost.

Section 26 agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Section 37 was amended. It's all right.

Sections 27 to 37, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 38:

Mr. Chairman: Honourable Mr. Drea moves that section 38 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection: "(3) Where parole is revoked under (2), the parolee shall, notwithstanding that parole was granted before the coming into force of this act, serve the portion of his term of imprisonment including any remission that remained unexpired at the time parole was granted less (a) the period of time spent on parole after the coming into force of this act, (b) the period of time during which parole was suspended and the parolee was in custody, and (c) any remission earned after the coming into force of this act and applicable to the period during which the parole was suspended and the parolee was in custody."

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, the reason for this is the Grenier decision by Mr. Justice Linden in the Supreme Court of Ontario. In the case of a parole violation there was no question that they should lose their statutory remission except that Mr. Justice Linden pointed out we should have specific authority to do so. We are not going to bother with statutory remission because it dies automatically on June 30—on July 1 earned remission will be proclaimed by the federal government and the other 10 provinces. So it is that court case that makes the specific authority in this amendment necessary.

Motion agreed to.

Section 38, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 39 to 41, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 42:

Mr. Chairman: Honourable Mr. Drea moves that section 42(3) be deleted and the following substituted therefor: "There shall be a supervisor of probation services to be responsible throughout Ontario for the supervision of administration of probation services provided by the ministry."

Hon. Mr. Drea: The reason for that is to change it from "the minister shall" to "there shall."

Motion agreed to.

Section 42, as amended, agreed to.

On section 43:

Mr. Bradley: Just a point of explanation on section 43(3): "In addition to the duties of a probation officer referred to in (1) a probation officer shall perform such other duties as are assigned to him by the minister." Would the minister elaborate on what those other duties might be?

Hon. Mr. Drea: One of them is the supervision of community service orders which so far, while technically under probation, are moving off into a specific sentence of their own. As you know, until they are and until a particular period of time, when they are a valid sentence by themselves they are still bound with a probation order. So the supervision of CSOs rather than the traditional type of probation is one of them.

There might be a direction, particularly in the north, where it would be, in addition to probation, the supervising of part-time probation officers, once you get north of the highways and so forth in the backward areas. Also we have expanded probation officers into anti-vandalism projects and a number of things where they are directly supervising reclamation work through the courts. At present they are doing this in the Timiskaming region involving Kirkland Lake and Englehart.

[5:30]

Also, quite frankly, it is to prepare for the court worker. We have the native court worker now, and I would hope that we would soon have a court worker "period" for everybody in the courts. It is something coming out of various law reform commissions and so forth. Once again, that might very well be in a limited growth area or a smaller community, and it would be in addition to the probation officer's regular or traditional probation duties of someone reporting to him.

Section 43 agreed to.

Sections 44 to 49, inclusive, agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I think there is general agreement that one of the amendments passed today involving section 9, making it 9(a), is not applicable there. I wonder whether we could have it understood when this bill is brought back for reprinting and third reading that that amendment (9(a) passed today will become section 46 of the act under general provisions—that is the one about the right of members to visit—rather than being tucked in that particular place.

Mr. Chairman: Does the committee agree? Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Chairman, with the concurrence of committee, we have one division here and it may be that we could get started on the next bill and then perhaps, if we need a 10-minute bell, we could call the 10-minute bell and clear this division up at that time, and carry on with the bill. So if the committee would agree, maybe at about a quarter to 6 or so we could then divide and clear up this bill. In the meantime, we could get some time in on Bill 96 and get started on it.

Mr. Chairman: Is the committee agreeable? Agreed.

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975.

On section 1:

Ms. Bryden: I have a question on section 1, Mr. Chairman. It is the one regulation the conduct of agents and representatives registered under section 39.

The previous bill simply provided for the registration of agents, which would be granted except for past conduct of the applicant which affords reasonable grounds for belief that he won't carry on business in accordance with the law and with honesty and integrity. This new section, Mr. Chairman, seems to be much broader and gives the board the power to regulate the conduct of agents and representatives. I wonder if the minister could explain what he has in mind under that clause and what kind of conduct he is referring to. We had a lot of debates on the Family Law Reform Act on the question of conduct and it seems to me we are getting into the same sort of thing where the government takes the power upon itself to regulate something vague, called "conduct."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, forgive me, I couldn't hear because of some discussion going on over here.

Mr. McClellan: You were trying to eavesdrop.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You were trying to eavesdrop on what was happening here. I am sorry, could you just—

Ms. Bryden: As I pointed out, Mr. Chairman, the 1975 act simply provided for the registration of agents, which would be granted except where past conduct of the applicant affords reasonable grounds for belief that he won't carry on business in accordance with the law and with honesty and integrity. This now simply gives the minister the power to regulate the conduct of registered agents and representatives. As I say, it seems to me to be rather sweeping powers for the minister to regulate their conduct without specifying in what respect, whether it is their conduct 24 hours a day or just what does he mean by that particular clause?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There's really nothing new in that section. The authority that would be granted by this section is authority which is now found under the Liquor Control Act. Currently, the agents are registered under the Liquor Licence Act but the conduct is now—

Mr. McClellan: We're all here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I've noticed.

In simple terms, the agents are registered—the authority to register them is under the Liquor Licence Act; the conduct, as described here, is currently sitting under the Liquor Control Act. This is just an opportunity with this bill before the House to bring both their registration and control of their conduct under the same act. There's nothing new being added here at all.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Grossman moves that section 9 of section 45 of the act as set out in section 2 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "the 31st day of August, 1978" in the second and third lines and inserting in lieu thereof "the 31st day of December, 1978."

Motion agreed to.

Section 2, as amended, agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. M. N. Davison: The question of the transportation of home-made wine has been raised outside of the House because of interest stirred up by the debate on this bill. As I understand it now, it's illegal to transport home-made wine without special permission from the board. I wonder if the minister would undertake to look into that matter and at some time in the future either report back to the House or bring in an amendment to allow people to transport home-made wine?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will look into that.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Grossman moves that section 1 of section 46(a) of the act as enacted by section 4 of the bill be amended by inserting after "municipality" in the first line "including a metropolitan or regional municipality." He further moves that section 4 of the said section 46(a) be amended by inserting after the words "permit 4" in the second line the words "in possession of liquor purchased."

Motion agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Grossman moves that subsection 1(a) of section 52 of the act as set out in section 6 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "1(a) Any person who is over the age of 18 years on the first of January 1979 and not an interdicted person may apply to the board for a card indicating that such person has attained the age of 18 years on or before the 31st day of December, 1978."

Motion agreed to.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. M. N. Davison: Just very briefly—because I would like to finish with this bill, if we can, before the supper hour—our party is opposing the inclusion of section 7(2)(1c) in this bill, which is the provision that imposes a minimum fine on employees of establishments who contravene sections of this legislation.

We don't believe this is a particularly good addition to the legislation because we believe it may place some employees of these establishments in a position where their job is at risk. The reason for that is that some employers, some licence holders, are frequently engaged in the practice of insisting their employees flout the legislation, particularly in terms of serving minors, and place an employee in the position where either the employee breaks the law or is fired—dismissed from his job on a trumped-up charge.

Frankly, we would not be opposing the inclusion of a minimum fine in this legislation if we believed we had enlightened labour laws in Ontario. Because we don't have the proper labour legislation to protect workers in such a position, we can't support the bill. It would put a judge in a very bad position where, after deciding that technically the person had broken the law but had done so only to protect his or her job, the judge would then be forced to impose a minimum fine. We don't think that would be an appropriate situation.

We do believe, however, that the employees of these establishments who break the law under normal circumstances, without being pressured by their employer to do so, upon conviction should not be dealt with lightly. The legislation in its other amendments provides for very stiff fines for those employees. But we do believe it would be unfair to impose the $100 minimum fine in this case as it could be very unfortunate.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Very quickly, this is consistent with the policy of putting the onus for controlling the problem on those who are delivering the products. That's the appropriate place to put it. Secondly, you'll note it's a $100 fine, not $500.

Certainly we want to make it clear that it isn't operating the way you're suggesting it's operating. The licensed operators are, in our opinion, not carrying on to a very large extent the way you're suggesting. Certain remedies are available if those things are happening.

I'd also point out that the section imposes a minimum fine on everyone who is not a licensee and not only on employees. For example, if any adult—you yourself, for example—were to acquire some liquor and deliver it to a minor, then you'd be subject to that fine as well. In point of fact, the real purport of that section is the acquisition of it by someone other than the persons you're talking to. You'll notice that section 45 of the act says "no person." However, I would point out that they must knowingly serve. There are those aspects to it, which perhaps aren't entirely clear when you're dealing with a bill with that subsection sitting in it, although I understand your concerns.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Are you suggesting they'd leave it up to the judge?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All those in favour of section 7(2)(1c) will say "aye."

All those opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Amendment staked.

Sections 8 to 11, inclusive, agreed to.

MINISTRY OF CORRECTIONAL SERVICES ACT

(concluded)

Mr. Deputy Chairman: On Bill 85, Mr. Ziembra has moved an amendment to section 9(a) to add the following clauses:

(2) Any letter addressed to an inmate of an institution from a member of the Legislative Assembly, the Ombudsman of Ontario, or the correctional investigator of Canada shall be immediately forwarded unopened to the inmate by the director or superintendent of the institution or a person designated by either of them in writing.

(3) Any letter written by an inmate of an institution that is addressed to a member of the Legislative Assembly, the Ombudsman or the correctional investigator of Canada, shall be immediately forwarded unopened to the member, Ombudsman or correctional investigator, as the case may be, by the director, superintendent or a person designated by either of them in writing.

The committee divided on Mr. Ziembra's amendment to section 9(a) of Bill 85, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 19; nays 43.

Bill 85, as amended, reported.

LIQUOR LICENCE AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

The committee divided on whether section 7(2)(1c) of Bill 96 shall stand as part of the bill, which was approved on the following vote:

Ayes 43; nays 19.

Bill 96, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported three bills with amendments.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 85, An Act to revise the Ministry of Correctional Services Act;

Bill 86, An Act to amend the Coroners Act, 1972;

Bill 96, An Act to amend the Liquor Licence Act, 1975;

Bill 95, An Act to provide Probation Services to Young Offenders.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I know that you may be calling the supper adjournment, but perhaps for the information of the members I could say that we will be starting this evening with second reading of Bill 113, An Act to amend the Training School Act. This will start a series of about eight bills put by the same minister. In discussions, it was felt that perhaps we might complete all the debates for second readings and that any divisions might be held at the completion of the eighth bill.

Agreed.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

NORTHERN ONTARIO STUDIES

28. Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Would the Ministry of Northern Affairs table all studies done within the ministry pertaining to northern Ontario commissioned by it from other ministries or by outside consultants? [Tabled April 13, 1978. Interim answer tabled April 27, 1978.]

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Northern Affairs): This ministry is working on projects with many northern communities and part of each project frequently includes a "study," although these may differ widely in scope and content. The term project is, therefore, more descriptive. I am tabling the following:

1. 1978 feasibility study for cross country ski-based tourism; 2. Effective functioning of chronic psychiatric patients in after-care settings; 3. Interim report and report No. 2 on the development of low technology solar panels; 4. Labour issues influencing the feasibility of long distance commuting in northern Ontario (preliminary assessment); 5. Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario—Initiatives and Achievements; 6. Investing in Our Future: Ontario's Regional Priority Budget 1973-1978; 7. Ministry of Northern Affairs—brief to the Royal Commission on the Northern Environment; 8. Directory of Statistics in the Northeastern Region; 9. Directory—Incorporated Communities Northeastern Ontario (North Part); 10. Directory—Indian Reserves and Settlements Northwestern Ontario; 11. Directory—Unincorporated Communities Northwestern Ontario; 12. Directory—Incorporated Communities Northwestern Ontario; 13. Directory—Indian Reserves Northeastern Ontario (South Part); 14. Directory—Unincorporated Communities Northeastern Ontario (South Part); 15. Directory—Unincorporated Communities Northeastern Ontario (North Part); 16. Directory—Indian Reserves Northeastern Ontario (North Part); 17. Construction Program 1978-79, in English and in French.

The ministry is involved in funding a land clearing and drainage needs study of agricultural lands in northwestern Ontario; no report is available as yet. [See sessional paper 140.]

HEALTH AND SAFETY OF WORKERS

94. Mr. E. J. Bounsall (Windsor-Sandwich): As per the minister's response of May 29, 1978, would the ministry table the dates of and participants in all meetings about Bill 70 which have been held since Bill 70 was tabled in this House in February, 1978, and which are planned for the future? [Tabled June 6, 1978.]

Hon. B. Stephenson (Minister of Labour): Further to my response of May 30:

Between March 23 and June 9, 1978, meetings were held with groups representing health care institutions, detention centres, firemen, policemen, agriculture, municipal workers, transportation, hotels and motels, educational institutions, and other occupations which would be covered by the amended Bill 70.

Two meetings were arranged with parties who did not arrive at the scheduled meetings. Three meetings were arranged with parties who cancelled the appointments, stating that they wished the status of Bill 70 to be finalized before conferring on draft regulations.

Invitations have been extended to nine additional groups, for which meetings will be arranged in the near future. The Registered Nurses Association do not wish to consult at this time. Representatives of the Ontario Federation of Labour have met with the Minister of Labour on several occasions.

Following is a schedule of meetings.

Meetings arranged and held: March 23, Ontario Public Service Employees Union; March 28, Ontario Professional Fire-Fighters Association; March 29, Workmen's Compensation Board; April 4, Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation; April 9, Ministry of Education; April 11, Ontario Teachers Federation; April 12, Transport Safety Association and Ontario Trucking Association; April 14, Ontario Hospital Association and Ontario Hotel & Motel Association; April 17, Canadian Union of Public Employees and Association of Municipalities of Ontario; April 19, United Transportation Union; April 21, Ministry of Colleges and Universities; April 24, Ministry of Correctional Services; April 25, Treasury, Economics & Intergovernmental Affairs; April 26, ACTRA and Police Association of Ontario; April 27, Association of Tourist Resorts of Ontario; April 28, Ministry of Community and Social Services; May 2, Ministry of Transportation and Communications; May 3, Occupational Health Nurses Association; May 8, Ontario Chambers of Commerce (held in Kitchener); May 10, Ministry of Agriculture; May 11, Ontario Nurses Association; May 16, Ontario Fur Breeders'

Association; May 18, Service Employees International Union; May 24, Ministry of Health; May 26, Association of Police Governing Authorities; May 29, Funeral Directors Association; June 1, Association of Chiefs of Police; June 8, Solicitor General.

Meetings arranged—party did not show: April 20, International Union of United Brewery and Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers; April 24, International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

Meetings arranged—party cancelled: May 1, Ontario Restaurant & Food Services Association; May 10, Ontario Federation of Agriculture; May 17, United Steelworkers of America.

Parties contacted and invited—meetings to be arranged: Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union; Canadian Guards Association; International Musicians' Union; Ontario School Trustees Council; Ontario Society of Registered Technologists; IATSE Stagehand Union; Canadian Actors' Equity Association; Ministry of Industry and Tourism; Association of Investigators and Guard Agencies of Ontario.

Invitation extended—refused by party at this time: Registered Nurses Association.

95. Mr. E. J. Bounsall: Would the ministry table all responses by ministries of the government to the amendments to Bill 70 made in the standing resources committee earlier this year? [Tabled June 6, 1978.]

Hon. B. Stephenson (Minister of Labour): The ministry believes it would be inappropriate to table interministerial responses of the sort requested.

URBAN TRANSPORTATION DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

96. Mr. E. Philip (Etobicoke): Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications indicate the number of ministry staff involved on a full- or part-time basis and the annual ministry expenditure involved for each of the following activities related to the work of the Urban Transportation Development Corporation: audit and financial review of UTDC's performance on government contracts; monitoring of research work and findings related to UTDC's work; research work performed at the ministry in areas related to UTDC's work; research, design et cetera into the application of technology being developed by UTDC; other ministry expenditure and time commitments related to UTDC's work? [Tabled June 6, 1978.]

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister of Transportation and Communications): The response to the member's question for the fiscal year 1977-78 is as follows:

(a) Audit and financial review of UTDC's performance in government contracts: (i) Ministry staff, full-time, nil; (ii) Ministry staff, part-time, 85 man-days; (iii) Expenditure, $7,640.

(b) Monitoring of research work and findings related to UTDC's work: (i) Ministry staff, full-time, 2; (ii) Ministry staff, part-time, 1.5 man-years; (iii) Expenditure, $104,700.

(c) Research work performed at the ministry in areas related to UTDC's work: (i) Ministry staff, full-time, nil; (ii) Ministry staff, part-time, 0.8 man-years; (iii) Expenditure, $9,800.

(d) Research, design, et cetera into the application of technology being developed by UTDC: (i) Ministry staff, full-time, nil; (ii) Ministry staff, part-time, nil; (iii) Expenditure, nil.

(e) Other ministry expenditure and time commitments related to UTDC's work: (i) Ministry staff, full-time, nil; (ii) Ministry staff, part-time, nil; (iii) Expenditure, nil.

AUTO PACT

98. Mr. B. Wildman (Algoma): Will the ministry table any position papers, studies, submissions to the federal government et cetera, which have been produced by or for the Ministry of Industry and Tourism in relation to the Canada-United States Automotive Trade Agreement, auto industry investment, auto industry research and development; and in particular any responses to the proposals put forward by the federal government to subsidize on a cost-shared basis the construction in Ontario of automobile or parts plants by one or more of the "big four" auto makers or their subsidiaries? [Tabled June 6, 1978.]

Hon. J. R. Rhodes (Minister of Industry and Tourism): I am pleased to table a study published in September 1975 by my ministry entitled Sector Analysis—The Automotive and Automotive Parts Industry. [Sessional paper 141.]

Of more current significance have been ongoing consultations at the ministerial and official levels. In April and May of this year, Premier Davis, the Treasurer, the Minister of Labour and I met with presidents of the five largest vehicle manufacturers, the president and board members of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association and with officials of the UAW. In addition, my officials have met with four heavy duty truck manufacturers. As the Premier has indicated, he will be making a statement on these meetings in the near future.

At the federal level, my ministry has been represented on the Automotive Industry Consultative Task Force which has been meeting during the past three months. Throughout this period there have also been ongoing consultations between the federal and Ontario governments at both the ministerial and officials levels. In these various meetings the subjects of discussion and investigation have included investment, research and development, employment, Canada's trade deficit with the USA in auto parts and the possibility of offering incentives for investment. Regarding incentives, while various approaches have been examined, no formal proposal has been made by the federal government to this government and consequently no response has been required by Ontario.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 19, 1978

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

TRAINING SCHOOLS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 113, An Act to amend the Training Schools Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, Mr. Speaker. I will wait and perhaps respond. I'm sure the honourable members opposite have some comments they'd like to make.

Mrs. Campbell: Could the minister repeat what he said? Nobody heard it.

Mr. Blundy: I think he said that he would wait until the honourable members on the opposite side responded.

Mr. Sweeney: Responded to what?

Mr. Blundy: I don't know. At this point I could sit down and I would have responded as long as the minister's statement lasted.

Mr. Sweeney: And more eloquently.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The mike wasn't working very well.

Mr. Blundy: However, to get down to the bill at hand, An Act to amend the Training Schools Act, I look upon this bill as a bill that is in some way a housekeeping bill to conform to the amalgamation of children's services within the ministry.

Mr. Haggerty: He has gone.

Mr. Blundy: Did I say something that made the minister go home?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Blundy: Oh, there he is. He's still here. I have read the bill over. I am not an expert on this bill or the programs that it is governing, however, I am willing to go for second reading of the bill on the understanding that we will have every opportunity to have an in-depth discussion of it, clause by clause, in committee.

Personally, I want to congratulate the minister on the reorganization of children's services—

Mr. McClellan: When is it going to happen?

Mr. Blundy:—and when we see the product of it, we will be able to be even more congratulatory on that matter.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That depends on how you handle this legislation.

Mr. Blundy: However, I hope that this evening, in this House, we are laying the ground rules that will provide a well thought-out amalgamation of children's services.

The one thing I want to say in my opening remarks, Mr. Speaker, is that anybody who has known me for any length of time will know that I have been decrying the cost of government, government budgets and government deficits. I have been all for restraint and I am still inclined that way. But there are certain areas within the purview of government where people are in such a position that they cannot have great restraint practised in caring for them. I would like to point out to the minister that this evening we are talking about a number of bills to do with children's services. Who else in this province could more rightfully be thought of as requiring all of our diligence and a good deal of the money available for social services in this province?

I just want the minister to know that I will not be carping at every nickel being spent if it is being wisely spent and if it is directed to an area where these expenditures are warranted. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there are many such areas. So in speaking to Bill 113 I am doing so in very general terms and I will look forward to being able to have a more positive and definite input into the bill at the time we are studying it clause by clause in committee.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate in the first of a series of bills introduced by the minister to complement whatever he's doing over there.

Mrs. Campbell: That is the mystery of life.

Mr. McClellan: Sweet mystery of life, as the member for St. George quite aptly puts it.

This bill before us, Bill 113, is the first of a series of bills in the package that has to do—this bill, at least in part—with the chaos in residential children's services. I see nothing in the package of bills that leads us out of the chaos. The promise of salvation is certainly at hand once again, but we have been hearing those promises with great regularity since the minister was appointed and since he first announced his intention to undertake the reform of children's services in this province.

Much remains to be done because virtually nothing has been done. This series of legislative proposals before us now is, in fact, the first concrete legislative step that the ministry has taken.

With respect to Bill 113, we in this caucus are prepared to support the bill. In a sense the bill drops the other shoe, I suppose you could say, from the repeal of section 8 of the Training Schools Act. I'm frankly very pleased to see the amendment to section 9 of the Training Schools Act, which in this bill changes the legislation so that instead of the language being that the judge may send a child to a training school, the language is changed so that the child is firstly made a crown ward and then, secondly, may be sent to a training school; but, I suspect, more likely would not be sent to a training school, would be sent to a more adequate treatment facility. This amendment in my view quite clearly establishes ministerial responsibility for the care and treatment of children who are brought before the court under section 9, and I think that is an important measure to be established in law.

The other measures in this bill, as the member for Sarnia said, are by and large housekeeping amendments with which we can take no exception. The overall problem, as I have said, remains that the chaos in children's residential services, which was described and documented in the report of the interministry committee on residential services, remains. Child welfare services are still very much a shambles in this province and all of the minister's task forces and studies and position papers and green papers and white papers and policy papers have not undone that shambles.

I am convinced that the ministry, or at least his division of the ministry, is making a sincere effort to deal with the problem. I question the commitment of his government however to provide the backup support and resources to make these reforms meaningful. That remains to be seen, and the slowness of the pace is perhaps a reflection of the schizophrenia of the government saying on the one hand that they wish to reform children's services, but on the other hand being really in the business of constraining children's services.

The ministry has moved in a direction that we approve of in, firstly, repealing section 8 then, more recently, announcing its intention to phase out the training school program in this province, and then, as we heard tonight, making a further change in the language of section 9 of the Training Schools Act. That is all well and good, but I say again to the minister that reform is not a matter of laws; reform is a matter of services and of the structure of services. When section 8 of the Training Schools Act was repealed the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) made some promises with respect to the development of alternative services. That was December 9, 1976, to be precise. The minister said, when she announced the removal of section 8 of the Training Schools Act, and I quote: "I would like members to know now that our priorities include the establishment of a small secure-treatment unit for severely disturbed adolescents."

Of course, if you are going to close the training schools, you have simply of necessity to provide small, closed secure-treatment facilities for severely disturbed adolescents. Nothing was done on that promise for the best part of a year or a year and a half. The minister finally announced his intention to redesignate the Oakville assessment centre as a secure-treatment unit for severely disturbed adolescents. I don't know whatever happened to the concept of "small," which was in the original promise, and I'll repeat it again since the minister looks quizzical: "a small secure-treatment unit for severely disturbed adolescents."

I would think that intelligence would dictate that a number of small secure-treatment units for severely disturbed adolescents would be established. As a matter of fact, not a single one has been established. As a matter of fact, even the Oakville facility that was promised to us—I think in February, if memory serves me correctly—was taken away with the same easy facility that it was given. It was taken away in response to pressure, I assume from the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), responding to concerns of people in his riding who didn't want that kind of a facility in their community. Sooner or later the minister and the government are going to have to decide which side they are on and decide what their policy really is.

If they are saying they want to move away from institutional incarceration of children then they have to be prepared to put their money where their mouth is and to have the courage of their convictions to go ahead and provide alternative facilities. If they knuckle under to every bully-boy vigilante citizens' group that wants to keep alternative group facilities out of their neighbourhood, they might just as well reopen the training schools and, in fact, build some new training schools.

Until they come to grips as a government, not just as a minister in his pious pronouncements, but as a government and as a cabinet, until they come to grips with the issue of making sure that alternate group facilities are not zoned out, or pressured out—even by your cabinet colleagues—then the minister's rhetoric is simply that; so much rhetoric.

The minister said on May 1 that his decision not to proceed with a secure-treatment unit in Oakville was, if I can paraphrase, merely a temporary setback—that the government would be announcing a new location almost instantly. One would have thought the minister would have announced it before the transcript had been printed, he was so insistent.

To my knowledge that facility has still not been announced. I hope the ministry will assure me I am wrong. I hope the minister does know where the first of these small secure treatment units for severely disturbed adolescents is going to be located. I hope he will tell us in the course of this debate exactly what he intends to do by way of providing concrete alternatives to training schools. Without those alternatives, the minister's program is a sham and a mockery, and I think the minister realizes this.

The minister said in his response to me, "There are so many alternatives and there are a number of communities that would dearly love to have the facility located in that community." Yes, he nods his head and says that's true. I assumed he was telling the truth, I always do, and he usually does; in fact, he always does. But the question is, where is the facility? I hope he will tell us.

Just a brief final statement: I am pleased to see that in the licensing statute, the Children's Residential Services Act, the standards will apply equally to provincial facilities. I think that is a progressive step. We can talk, when we come to that statute, about what the standards are, because again, no one seems to know. Nevertheless, this is certainly one of the most well-intentioned ministers that I know and we certainly continue to applaud his good intentions.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, I just have a few brief remarks and I am confining my remarks to Bill 113. I am, I guess, terribly disappointed that really all we are doing in this bill is reworking for the most part that which is already in effect. There is no imaginative approach in this bill, nothing really to indicate a new look at training schools. I happen not to be dwelling so much on alternatives. While I very strongly believe in alternatives, I also feel, and I am sorry that my experience makes me feel this way, that training schools of some sort must be kept in place.

I had hoped after all these delays there might have been something in this bill which would indicate that we are concerned in the facility itself, quite apart from the alternative facilities suggested. I trust that before this bill gets out of committee it will not look the way that it does now. I trust it will look not just as a bill in legal semantics virtually, or as a housekeeping bill, but that it will carry us forward to a new look at the way in which we treat children who are unfortunately in need of a training-school type of facility.

Certainly I have a great deal of concern with reference to section 13(4)(m). I see that as another way of passing off responsibility from the ministry to whomever out there will take on the responsibility if we cut back on funding. As I see it, that cannot stand as it is presently indicated.

I won't labour the point. I would invite the minister to respond to what I've said. But I will say I trust that when we get into committee we will have an act to amend the Training Schools Act which will stand as an example for the whole of Canada in our approach to this very important aspect of the child in conflict with the law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member wishing to participate in this debate? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perhaps I ought to emphasize in responding to the comments of the honourable members opposite what I have said and maintained from the time of the transfer of responsibility to my ministry back on July 1, 1977, that what we are dealing with in this package are interim legislative amendments.

Mrs. Campbell: Not good enough after all this time.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In spite of what the honourable member opposite may feel, a great deal of work has gone into the development of these amendments and the development of standards which is under way in the ministry, which I'll refer to more fully later in responding to some of the specific comments of the honourable members. When we think in terms of the longer term omnibus changes which we have discussed previously, I'm sure the member for St. George realizes a task of that magnitude is not something that can be done in a matter of a few months.

I do want to point out that although these amendments may be viewed and referred to as housekeeping amendments, I view them as considerably more than that. I think they have to be viewed in the context of the policy statements I made earlier this spring relating to training schools. If there is any general policy categorization or principle embodied in this particular act, it is to do two things. One is to further the decentralization of the program within our ministry and the establishment of an area administration, which is consistent with what I have stated earlier in terms of our goal of reducing the numbers of training schools and having them serve the children of the province on a regional basis. Second, it is to allow for the program changes I indicated in terms of the development of alternatives.

As the member for Bellwoods has noted, the change in section 9 is significant. It's not just a housekeeping change. It's quite significant in that the wardship of the child who was formerly a ward of the training school will now be with the crown. That will permit a greater degree of flexibility in terms of placement of that child in the most appropriate treatment setting available. It will not preclude what the member for St. George has suggested. We're not suggesting the complete elimination of training schools. I recognize the validity of the point she has made, that there will be a continuing need for a secure setting in a training school setting for some children.

The point I have consistently tried to make is we have historically had more children in training schools than was necessary. There were children there who were perhaps inappropriately in training schools.

Mrs. Campbell: Because there wasn't any place else.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In some instances, that was so.

Given the reality, in terms of the economy and so on, I want to emphasize as well that we recognize that there are not, at this point in time, adequate resources in the communities to deal with the problems of these particular children.

The progressive reduction in the numbers of training schools will, I hope, free up existing resources which can and will be allocated to the development of community resources. At the present time our existing training schools are approximately at half capacity; so theoretically, at least, we could reduce the numbers of training schools by half, without having to remove any children into alternative settings immediately, by that process freeing up resources to be allocated to the development of community alternatives.

I'm well aware of that, and I want to emphasize that this legislation to this extent will enable our ministry to move in that direction.

The member for St. George also expressed some concern, I believe, about section 13(4)(m), relating to funding. I want to assure the honourable member that it is not our intention to shift funding responsibility by virtue of this provision. If she recalls the discussions that have taken place in terms of children's services committees and bears in mind the development of alternative resources in the community, it's important that we have the flexibility to provide for the funding of those alternative resources and at some point in time, with the development of the children's services committee, if there is to be a coherent and co-ordinated approach to the—

Mr. McClellan: What do you mean "if"?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well, when; I say "if there is to be"—

Mr. McClellan: I say "when"!

Hon. Mr. Norton: I intend that there shall be, if members are co-operative on the opposite side. If that is to be a reality, then it's also going to be necessary that we provide for a funding mechanism which at this point in time, it would be my intent, would be vested with the children's services committee, which would be monitoring the progress of children; this provision presumably would allow for that kind of flexibility as well.

I think that we must not fall into the trap, perhaps, of developing legislation which is so rigid as to preclude the very kind of flexibility that I know the honourable member wishes to see within the system in order to meet the diverse needs of the children of this province.

I have just one final comment: it really doesn't relate to the principle of the bill, but I would like to make a brief response to the member for Bellwoods and the concern he expressed relating to the pace with which change has been overtly evident. I suggest to him that, as he always assumes that he knows what I am thinking, I am sure he is well aware of the approach we have taken, recognizing—in terms of consultation right now—

Mr. McClellan: It's called flying by the seat of your pants.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—that there are literally hundreds of agencies and thousands of committed and dedicated individuals across this province who are involved in the provision of care for children whose understanding, commitment and support is essential to the success of the kinds of changes of magnitude that we have undertaken. If the honourable member has at any point been a participant in that consultation process, he will understand that there is a great divergence of opinion as to the pace that should be followed.

There are some—very few, I suggest—who are saying, "You're going far too slowly." There are far more people who are saying, "Don't move too quickly." I think that we have hit a very good pace. It's a happy medium, but it's a realistic pace at which we can proceed, and, I believe, at the same time ensure that those people who are most concerned and most involved in the province of Ontario are aware of what is happening. We have an opportunity to encourage and develop not only their input but their support to see this through to fruition. [8:30]

Motion agreed to.

CHILD WELFARE ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 114, An Act to revise the Child Welfare Act.

Mr. McClellan: Is the minister not going to make a statement?

Hon. Mr. Norton: No. Go ahead.

Mr. Blundy: I thought the minister would want to try to do a selling job on those of us present on this bill to revise the Child Welfare Act, but I guess he is going to wait and see what we have to say and how strongly we feel about it.

I would like to make a few comments about the bill. As I said in regard to Bill 113, I want to support the bill and send it to committee to have it thoroughly studied, but when I come to a bill such as this I can't resist the opportunity to speak to the minister and the members of this House on the need for more money for children's agencies and societies in the province of Ontario.

I was speaking to a person just recently and I said I thought that in my community of Sarnia we had one of the highest caseloads of children's aid societies in Ontario and the problems being confronted by them were very great. I ended up by saying that of course I was sure that the children's aid societies of Metro Toronto must have a great deal more trouble than a relatively small municipality has.

This person, who is knowledgeable about these things and who is professional in the field, told me she thought that many of the smaller municipalities were experiencing even more problems than the large municipalities such as Metro Toronto because there are such a diversity of agencies in a city like Toronto as compared to a municipality such as my own.

I do want to make a very special plea to the minister in regard to children's aid societies concerning the staffing and the budgeting, which, of course, makes possible the staffing. I think a good deal of prevention might be practised with considerable success if the workers within the various child agencies, in particular, the children's aid society, had the time and opportunity to really work with a child and work for the child to the point where there might be some corrective help given and as a result some prevention of problems further on down the line.

Bill 114 is quite an extensive bill. I know there are many areas in the bill that will need to be discussed at some length. I am looking forward to that opportunity in committee. I will be quite happy to have the bill referred to committee for study at a later date, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McClellan: Goodness, everyone is being so brief. I will try to remedy that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We can always count on you.

Mr. McClellan: For me, this is really very delightful to be able to take part in this particular debate and the review of this particular act. I am especially pleased the minister has brought forward not simply a series of amendments to the Child Welfare Act but that he has in this bill repealed the Child Welfare Act and brought forward an entirely new Child Welfare Act. That opens the legislation to the House for a serious and intensive scrutiny and gives us the opportunity to put forward some things that, hopefully, will strengthen and improve the legislation.

By and large, the suggestions I want to put forward or the issues I want to highlight tonight are not issues in which I think there is a partisan difference, but they are simply problems which we as legislators are attempting to solve. I think they will be approached by all parties in that spirit. In particular, we look forward to the opportunity to have hearings on the Child Welfare Act. I gather that they are tentatively scheduled for some time in the early fall and then proceed through the bill clause by clause.

There is one issue I do want to deal with first before I proceed through the bill to try to address a number of particular concerns that I have. We in this party have argued for a very long time that the focus of child welfare services in Ontario needs to be turned around; it needs to be turned away from the traditional crisis orientation and the traditional focus on prevention and needs to become preventive social service. That is not simply a matter of redrafting laws. It is a matter of restructuring social services in this province in a very radical way, and developing social services in the province which do not exist because our social service system is reactive in nature. Our social service system is crisis-oriented, and this legislation doesn't deal with prevention, or seek to prevent family breakdown. This legislation is designed to help society deal with families that have broken up and with children who are already damaged. That is what this bill is about.

I have only to refer you to section 6 of the new bill where the function of children's aid societies are spelled out, and prevention is simply a subordinate clause of section 6, sub 2(c). It is not one of the functions of children's aid societies in this province to prevent the circumstances which may require the protection of children, to quote the bill. Even the wording of the bill talks about prevention in terms of protection.

There is no notion of prevention in Ontario and I know the minister, who is jotting down notes, will respond that Ontario does have a preventive child welfare system. He can redefine items in the child welfare budget until he is blue in the face and until he can pretend that they total up to something in the order of $25 million—I believe he said the other day—of child welfare funds allocated for preventive services, he has simply redefined what social agencies are doing and labelled it prevention. But it is not prevention.

We do not have a legislative framework for the provision of preventive services. We do not have a structure which can provide social services on a preventive basis; that is to say, to provide support in an anticipatory way which would serve to prevent family breakdown and physical and emotional damage to kids. We don't do that.

As a matter of fact, when you look at the record of this ministry over the last 10 years or, more gruesomely, over the last three years since the Conservative social service constraints began, you can see very clearly just how little commitment this government has to preventive social services.

It's worth noting at this time, before we get into a discussion of the legal niceties of the Child Welfare Act, that the minister can make his laws as nice as he pleases, but when he cuts back on visiting homemakers' services in this province he is telling us where his priorities really are. We read in the estimates book, the minister's own material, that the level of visiting homemakers' services, which is one of the most effective preventive social services that we have, has fallen 25 per cent in this province since 1974-75, that measured in hours of service it has fallen 25 per cent since the government started its social service cutback program. Then the minister has the nerve to talk to us in other documents about a priority on prevention; he has the nerve to talk to us about prevention in child welfare services.

We read in the minister's estimates book that the level of home nursing services has fallen 31 per cent since 1975-76, and that measured in visits per year it is actually lower in 1977-78 than it was in 1970. Then he has the nerve to talk to us about preventive social services or about prevention.

When the minister puts constraints on day care, when he makes it necessary for parents to go to the welfare office and fill out demeaning means tests in order to claim day-care subsidies, when the minister brings day-care capital expansion to a complete halt, when the minister turns day care into a welfare service—and we'll talk a lot more about that during the debate on the Day Nurseries Act—then the minister is not in the business of providing supporting and organizing preventive social services.

Those two service areas, nursing services on the one hand and daycare services on the other, have been most brutally savaged over the last three to four years by this government's social services cutback programs. They are precisely the kinds of preventive social services that need to be strengthened if we are to develop a social service system which focuses itself on prevention rather than protection and restoration of already damaged families and individuals.

Mr. B. Newman: Carried.

Mr. McClellan: As I said, this legislation simply deals with the disposition of damaged kids and the disposition of damaged families.

The major reforms that the minister talks about will never be found in a statute like this but they will only show up in the front line of social services, in the communities and neighbourhoods. That is precisely where services, to the extent that they exist at all, remain in a state of shambles.

The legislation deals with a number of issues that I'd like to proceed through, high-light, perhaps express concern on, and try to identify areas where the legislation is going to require the benefit of expert testimony at the hearings and very thorough scrutiny in clause by clause discussion. Some of the measures, clearly, we applaud. For example, the provision requiring the reporting of child abuse, with penalties attached to professionals and the statutory requirement attached to everybody, is a good reform. That is long overdue. Just how overdue and how desperately needed it is we saw in the Solicitor General's annual report this year.

We read in the section dealing with reports of child abuse by the coroners, that even though the number of child abuse cases has increased dramatically since 1974, from 562 in that year to 1,045 in 1977, we would still expect, according to studies, Ontario, with its population, to have something in the order of 2,000 reported child abuse cases per year. That hideous statistic makes us comparable to other jurisdictions. That means that 50 per cent of the child abuse cases are still not being reported. I believe that the statutory requirement, with penalties for negligent professionals, is going to be helpful in dealing with that problem.

Much has been made, since the Ellis inquest, of the issue of admission of evidence in child-abuse hearings. I have to say that I'm disappointed that the admission of evidence of past maltreatment was made discretionary rather than mandatory. That's something that we will be moving to amend when we get to committee.

I'm also surprised at the way the ministry has handled another issue that emerged in the Ellis case, that is, the question of exchange of information between social agencies. As a social worker, I don't have very much use for the excuse of confidentiality between social workers and social agencies to cover up their blunders. I have no use for that at all. As a matter of fact, I hoped the ministry had stuck to its guns and required an exchange of information between social agencies in protection cases.

Mr. Martel: You would think they were out not to help the child.

Mr. McClellan: I think, frankly, that the minister has been snowed by the agencies.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You be careful how you use that word.

Mr. McClellan: I predicted some time ago that he would be snowed—

Hon. Mr. Snow: Be careful how you use that word.

Mr. McClellan: You snowed them the worst of all, but we have talked about that already.

Mr. Martel: I think that was Bill 21.

Hon. Mr. Snow: A great bill.

Mr. McClellan: That's one area where there is no justification for a kind of a conspiracy of silence which benefits nobody.

Mr. Martel: Except the children's aid society.

Mr. McClellan: It places children at risk. It's not just children's aid societies that are involved in that kind of nonsense; and it is nonsense. We can deal with it in the hearings, because we will hear about it; and we can deal with it in clause by clause where we can do something about it.

Again, this relates to my concern about preventive care and preventive services, but I am not satisfied with section 29 (5) which allows the judge to take into consideration work in the home, because there are no provisions in the act to set with any kind of specificity what those services really are. Until there is a structure of preventive social services in place in the province so that Mrs. Jones in such and such a neighbourhood can reliably expect to get—almost on the basis of a contract between the social service delivery system and herself—can get the services she needs with a certainty they are there in place and are provided on the basis of adequacy and competence, then it is dangerous to return children under supervision orders on the basis of a very nebulous notion of some kind of work being done in the home.

It's my understanding that all of the children who have died and whose tragic deaths have been publicized, that trail of hideous deaths that has led to this legislation being here tonight, were under supervision orders and that all of those children were receiving some kind of work in the home. We have a case in this morning's Globe and Mail of Lessard being visited by the Ottawa Children's Aid Society, I believe as recently as a week before the death of the child. I suppose you could call that work in the home. There are an enormous number of questions related to that whole area.

In case you are getting restless, Mr. Speaker, I intend to take a fair bit of time on this bill, because it is the full Child Welfare Act and it's something that comes before this House very rarely. I don't expect it to be back before another 10 years, despite what the minister has said.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Are you speaking of third reading or are you speaking of—

Mr. McClellan: I don't believe this is an interim bill, in other words; I believe that this is it.

Mrs. Campbell: I don't think any of them are.

Mr. McClellan: This is the bill. Whether the minister intends otherwise or not, I put no stock in his good intentions. What I have before me is the Child Welfare Act and I intend to deal with it. I intend to operate on the assumption that we won't have it back before us for another decade. All of us had better do the best job on it that we can while it's before us, because we won't have another crack at it.

Mr. Haggerty: Just like the election of regional chairmen.

Mr. McClellan: I don't believe the question of legal representation for children is dealt with in this bill in an adequate kind of way. It's dealt with in line with the recommendations of the Attorney General's committee, which as everybody knows was a compromise between a series of compromises. They came up with the most compromised compromise they were able to compromise.

I think we can do better. I think the model presented to the ministry in the brief from Justice for Children makes a lot more sense, assuming—and, I think, assuming correctly—a desire on the part of most members to secure legal representation for children. I think the best way to do it is to establish a separate entity—call it the official advocate or whatever you want to call it—some kind of body that's outside the hurly-burly of private law practice and will be able to develop a particular expertise and sensitivity to the needs of children in child welfare hearings for legal representation.

I don't believe that the official guardian is in any sense at all the appropriate body to act in this capacity. The official guardian's function is very clearly defined to protect the property interests of those who are incompetent to do it. This is an entirely separate function that we are talking about that does not properly belong with the official guardian at all.

Again, I am looking forward both to deputations during hearings and to clause-by-clause consideration to see whether we can't come up with something better than the appointment of legal representation, solely at the judge's discretion. It begs too many questions to be an entirely satisfactory way of dealing with this issue.

There have been an enormous number of changes in the draft legislation for the Child Welfare Act from the time that the green paper first came out until the time that Bill 114 was tabled in the House last week. Many of those changes, I think, were for the better.

There was a curious philosophy underlying much of the green paper. I have never read such a thorough-going defence, firstly, of the ultimate rights of biological parents, almost the proprietary rights of biological parents over their children. It was stated, restated and overstated in the green paper. It is a matter of considerable interest that at least some of that feeling with respect to the biological parents was weeded out.

When we look at the best-interests section of the legislation, we really see once again a very strong statement of the pre-eminent rights of biological parents. I don't think that is adequate. When you look through that whole section 1(b), where the six considerations are listed, the section states and restates the need for continuity and family structure. There is no mention of the notion of risk in the best interest definition, which I thought was curious.

I would have thought one of the factors that a judge would take into account would be the degree of risk and the vulnerability of the child. I think the preoccupation with the rights of the natural family, which was so characteristic of the green paper and which has permeated most of this government's pronouncement's on the family, is contained again within the legislation. I hope we can deal with that in hearings.

It showed up most bizarrely in the provisions on adoption where the rights of the natural parent were stated to extend past the time of adoption placement. That would have jeopardized the entire adoption process in this province had it been allowed to stand. Fortunately the ministry moved off that position, and we are grateful that they did. There are a number of other issues that I will simply mention for the sake of brevity. I have concerns about the use of non-ward care, even in the amended legislation. All of us are familiar with the charge that non-ward care has been abused by the children's aid society. I will want to raise the question of whether non-ward care should ever be provided in a situation where there is a need for protection. If there is a need for protection, I am not sure the successor to non-ward care, or temporary care by agreement, is any more appropriate than non-ward care was.

If there is a need for protection, that is to say if a child is at risk, and this is a matter where I have an open mind, I am not sure it is appropriate that a child be involved in a decision-making capacity with respect to the nature of that agreement. The problem around that whole section has to do with its application and the protection situation, and I will want some clarification from the ministry concerning the circumstances in which temporary care by agreement will be used.

The brief from Justice for Children is particularly useful on this point in talking about the need to concretize temporary care through both provision and identification; and I would add to the development of concrete contracts between agencies and people for the provision of specific identifiable services, so that we are not in some realm of never never land with respect to the needs of the family but we know precisely what it is we are talking about.

We don't have, if I can use the Ellis example again, a family like the Ellis family getting the service that doesn't meet the need, that is inappropriate for the need. I don't think there is any doubt about the inappropriateness of that intensive therapy in that particular family.

I have concerns about the notion of place of safety. I don't know why the ministry would use an observation and detention facility as a place of safety. We are burdened with a notion of criminality in child welfare in this province. I don't know how we can escape from it, it's part of the historical development of this service, but I really wish we could.

The Danish child welfare system manages to function as a model system without any notions of criminality or without any reference to the criminal justice system at all. Here, we are quite prepared to confine children who come from a disordered family in an observation and detention home as though they were criminals. We seem incapable of separating out criminality from family breakdown. I suppose in this society there's still a lingering notion they're one and the same thing. We certainly treat damaged children often enough as though they were criminals.

I'm concerned about the issue of adjournments and the kinds of delays that result from the adjournment provisions of the act. I'm concerned about the minister's suggestions with respect to crown wardship. The amended bill doesn't go as far as the green paper, as I understand it, but he's still changing the notion of crown wardship in a very fundamental way. Crown wardship was always seen to be both permanent and secure. The minister is proposing to make it something that is not permanent.

I think I've touched on all the basics in a kind of a rambling, and I hope not exceedingly disjointed presentation; it's difficult to deal with this kind of a bill in any coherent way.

I have other matters, but I won't take the time of the House to deal with them now. We will have the opportunity to go through them in hearings. I hope I've at least indicated the complexity and range of matters that will have to be dealt with by this Legislature in committee. None of the matters I have touched upon are issues of partisan difference, leaving aside the larger issue of prevention versus crisis orientation. They are problems we will have to come to grips with and try to solve.

In conclusion, I come back to the point of political difference. You have not, in almost two years, even begun to address yourself—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Barely one.

Mr. McClellan: How long is it? It seems like two years; is it only one?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Barely; it isn't even one.

Mr. McClellan: My God; it seems like an eternity.

Mr. Blundy: It seems longer.

Mr. McClellan: It does seem longer, doesn't it?

Mrs. Campbell: Like forever.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's because you listen to yourself.

Mr. McClellan: It seems almost as long as this speech.

The fact is that in the three years since the interministerial report came down the pipe and was immediately suppressed in April 1975, this government has done virtually nothing to reform the mess in child welfare services.

There's a reason for that. One cannot undertake a fundamental reform and restructuring of child welfare services on the cheap. It's as simple as that. The government can't say it is going to transform a system which has developed over a period of 80 years, and which is dysfunctional at almost every level—and the degree of dysfunction within child welfare services is almost unimaginable.

It's still true that a kid coming into the child welfare system from any of a dozen possible different routes is disposed of by the equivalent of a toss of the coin. There are still no structures in place adequately to assess treatment needs of children and to place children in the treatment facility appropriate to their assessed needs. That elementary structure of matching needs and service simply doesn't exist. Nothing that the ministry has done so far has changed the service delivery system one jot.

To his credit, the minister has managed to create in his ministry a good place to work. I know a little bit about fads and fashions in social work and how social workers move from one groovy job situation to another. The grooviest place in town these days is the children's services division; that's no mean accomplishment.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Don't you wish you were still around?

Mr. McClellan: I would enjoy it very much. I would probably be there myself, more's the pity. But in terms of the service, it hasn't meant a damn thing. Given this government's commitment to social service restraint and given this minister's propensity to capitulate at every possible opportunity to the demands of the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) for cost reductions, I'm very doubtful that any meaningful social service reform in child welfare will ever be achieved.

The truth is—and people had better face up to it—that a fundamental reform of the child welfare system will be expensive. There's no point in trying to deceive ourselves, there's no point in lying to ourselves; it costs money to transform an entire service delivery system. It costs money to put in place a network of services that are truly preventive. It will cost money to provide visiting homemakers' services adequate to the needs of the people of this province; the interministry report tells us that in most communities they don't even exist. The ministry is not about that business, the ministry is about cost reductions and cost savings; and to his eternal shame, the minister managed to save for the Treasurer a total of $44 million in unspent social services money in the previous fiscal year.

Mr. Martel: On the backs of the poor.

Mr. McClellan: That indicates more than green papers, white papers, policy papers or draft pieces of legislation just exactly where this minister's priorities are.

Mr. Martel: He will get a stripe for that.

Mr. McClellan: He will maybe get the Darcy McKeough stooge of the year trophy. I always thought it was going to go to Dennis Timbrell.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When referring to another member, would the honourable member refer to him by his riding or ministry rather than by the surname?

Hon. Mr. Norton: And the award you anticipate he gets.

Mr. McClellan: My apologies.

Mrs. Campbell: I think the stooge award is fitting.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Not you too.

Mr. McClellan: I've forgotten his riding.

Mr. Martel: Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. McClellan: Kingston and the Islands.

Mrs. Campbell: You must remember it will have to be made out of something very cheap.

Mr. Martel: Rather cheap, like the rest of the ministry; plastic perhaps.

Mr. McClellan: The second problem this ministry has, aside from the fact that they are constrained at every turn, is that it is prevented on the basis of adequate funding from shifting responsibility to the municipal level, which is the only way, as everybody knows, that these kinds of reforms will work. If the minister proceeds with a program of decentralization which does not provide full funding to local levels of government to assume additional responsibilities for child welfare services, all he is doing is adding a further constraint on the expenditure of social service dollars. As a matter of fact, the mechanism by which the government has managed to achieve savings in the order of $44 million in fiscal 1977-78 has been simply to increase the burden on the municipality. They have made it necessary for municipal politicians to choose between providing extra social services or stabilizing the tax rate; and that is simply a mechanism for constraint.

[9:15]

That is precisely how the minister proposes to go about reforming child welfare, as nearly as we can tell, through the development of local children's services committees and increased responsibility to the municipal level. The government's fiscal policy will ensure that reform will be an unmitigated disaster if it is carried out on the basis of anything other than financial generosity.

If it is carried out on the basis of cost sharing, even the existing cost-sharing arrangements, or, more likely, if it is carried out on a more punitive cost-sharing arrangement, I can predict that it will be a disaster for social services. It will result in the kind of reduction of service levels that we have seen in visiting homemakers' and visiting nursing services.

The second problem the ministry has is that they don't know what they're doing. The minister is engaged in one of the unique experiments in modern government. He has announced a series of reforms as intentions to reform.

Hon. Mr. Norton: They are proceeding very well.

Mr. McClellan: He then put together a task force of exceptionally competent people to try to figure out what it is that the minister was talking about when he said he was going to initiate reforms. Normally what one does is to appoint an independent body to perform the task of assessing, planning and making the recommendation around what it is you are intending to do.

The minister is certainly in a unique position. I won't be uncharitable to it because it is unique and interesting. He has a lot of very talented people—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Which independent body does the member have advising him? Who are his advisers? He is suggesting people should set up independent bodies to advise them.

Mr. McClellan: I am referring to the Castonguay commission in Quebec. I refer to the Seebohm committee—

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am talking about the member's.

Mr. McClellan: I am not the government.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The member is purporting to draft legislation.

Mr. McClellan: If I were the government, I would have preferred to go the route of the British government in 1969-70 with the Seebohm committee or with the Quebec government with the Castonguay commission in the 1970s.

The minister's problem is that he is tripping over himself. His administrative responsibilities and the process of running a royal commission from inside the government, trying to figure out what the hell he is doing, are conflicting functions.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I haven't tripped at all; I have a good sense of balance.

Mr. McClellan: The minister has the same staff in positions of responsibility for ongoing programs in administration, simultaneously engaged in the function of trying to figure out what they are doing, where they are going and what social service reform is.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is fundamental if you sit on this side of the House. That's because we don't plan as though we are talking about pie in the sky.

Mr. Martel: You don't plan at all.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We do.

Mr. McClellan: The minister shouldn't dwell on it too much, because it is truly a bizarre process, and increasingly seen as a bizarre process. We are no closer in June 1978, than we were in April 1977 when it was first announced, to understanding what a local children's services committee is; and we are no clearer about how the minister intends to reorganize social services—

Mr. Martel: The amazing creature.

Mr. McClellan: —than we were when he announced his original intention to decentralize somehow.

Mr. Martel: The whole thing is just a delay process.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Why don't you pay us a visit sometime? We will brief you.

Mr. McClellan: It is every bit as ephemeral in June, 1978, as it was when it was first announced.

Mr. Martel: Get another green paper and you can postpone it indefinitely.

Mr. McClellan: The reality is that I don't believe this government has any real commitment to do what the minister says he wants to do; and I don't have very much faith in his capacity, or the capacity of his government, to pull it off.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, again I shall try to be brief. I suppose my approach to this particular bill may be somewhat different from that of my colleagues in the House, in that for years we have been looking forward to a new Child Welfare Act. Having in mind that which we have now, and have had for some time. I have to say that I view this with some sympathy, if not with endorsement, because I believe that at last we have an opportunity to review the whole range of the child welfare philosophies, which is important at this point in time.

Like my colleague, I am disturbed that we are talking about prevention, we are talking about protection, and there is nothing, really, in this legislation, that gives teeth to that kind of a philosophy or gives funds for that kind of philosophy. Of course we have such things as the child abuse provisions, but there is nothing, anywhere, of a commitment really to try to prevent that very serious indictment of our society.

Let me just go to some of the specifics. I am somewhat pleased, unlike my colleague, that we do have the best interest definitions in this legislation. But I must say that I don't think it is there for the judges, because I think the judges, in their own special way, have operated rather on the principles of those definitions. What I do think it does is help society come to grips, in very real terms, with the parameters of their problems in addressing the situation, and I think that may well be helpful to them.

I note that while there are provisions as to what the ministry can do if it has a recalcitrant municipality or an agency which is somewhat less than efficient in presenting its budget, but I don't see one darn thing that protects the rest of us from a ministry that doesn't deal with the budget adequately and on time, and we have seen enough of that. So I would like to have some kind of assurance of a new type of procedure so we will not see the ministry dealing with children's aid societies' budgets ex post facto, but rather that they may indeed deal with them in advance so a society may have some idea as to what, in fact, is part of its protection budget and what is its crisis intervention budget.

I think that has been one of the major issues, as far as I am concerned, ever since I entered politics in 1958. We have never been able to come to grips with giving to the children's aid societies, or to anyone else dealing with children, the kind of budgeting necessary for proper protection and preventive kinds of approaches to family breakdowns, to the problems of children in our society.

I don't see any new steps forward here. I suppose we couldn't expect the minister to acknowledge the inefficiencies in his own ministry, but I would at least have liked to have seen him address himself to some kind of limitation period on the ministry itself.

One of the problems and one of the dichotomies of judges is really not addressed in this particular piece of legislation. It is a very difficult thing to be a judge sitting in a family court, dealing with a matter of contributing to juvenile delinquency or a juvenile delinquency aspect of legislation, and to recognize that there should be at some point in time—if I do not have the ear of the minister I will await his pleasure.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I can listen as I speak to my colleague.

Mrs. Campbell: I would hope that the Deputy Chairman might recognize that his function is not to interrupt debate.

Mr. McClellan: He doesn't understand his function at any time.

Mrs. Campbell: I will await the pleasure of the minister.

Mr. McClellan: We can wait all night.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for St. George.

Mrs. Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martel: You now have his undivided attention.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Don't you distract me.

Mrs. Campbell: I was saying it is a difficult thing for a judge who is dealing with a matter in some other aspect of the family court function to know what to do when he or she recognizes there is a real need for the protection of a child before the court in another capacity. I would have hoped that somewhere the minister would have addressed himself to this matter and perhaps have provided for some function related to child welfare so that judges don't somehow feel they are letting a very important matter slip because they do not feel they can sit in judgement perhaps on the parent under contributing legislation and then ask a society to take a child into care. A judge then becomes something other than a judge, he becomes a police officer or an enforcement officer at the same time. That situation is in desperate need of addressing by the ministry in this particular legislation if the overriding concern is concern for the welfare of the child.

We have some pretty express references to children being before the courts in some of these proceedings. It strikes me that it would be a better provision if we recognize that a child might be talked to by a judge, have conversation with him and be produced for the purpose of an in-camera discussion rather than to see the matter spelled out as formally as it is in this legislation.

Judges normally are people who are able to talk to a child, without any direct questioning on the specifics of a matter but to draw a great deal from the attitude of the child and the answers to questions which may seem irrelevant but which are not. I would like to see a strengthening of that particular area of provision so that the hearings may be quite flexible so far as the judge is concerned.

I can't be quite as negative as my colleague has been about the role of the official guardian in view of the fact that that role has changed and expanded over the years and, as I understand it, the official guardian in his intervention in the divorce courts has been quite useful. However, that is a matter which can be discussed in depth as this goes into committee.

When I look at the child abuse provisions, I despair. The minister could not advise this afternoon as to what funding, if any, had gone to the Sick Children's Hospital. Certainly, we know that his predecessor, in some kind of effort at political PR—and that's all it could ever be deemed to be—put a little money here and a little there and a little money somewhere else instead of really zeroing in on the problem as it has been addressed at Sick Children's Hospital and the kinds of expertise which they have, I think, extended beyond the original Denver Module. It always seems to me that if you really want to address yourself to a problem, you certainly might start somewhere ahead of zero, if you know that there is something ahead of zero, rather than taking people back to zero just for the fun of it.

I really am not very happy with the provisions insofar as they pertain to child abuse. I raised all those questions on the private member's bill of the member for York East (Mr. Elgie). I thought it was a thoughtful bill that he produced, but again the weakness in that was the lack of provision for prevention.

I don't think I need to go through all the aspects of this bill. I welcome it being before us. I would have hoped, too, that the minister might have discussed with his colleague the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) some way of trying again to overcome the difficulties where you don't have a unified court between the function of a provincial court judge in child welfare cases and the function of the surrogate or Supreme Court in custody matters. It seems to me that should be worked out, because it must be very disturbing to a child, particularly a child who is of an age to understand what is happening, to be in the middle of a child welfare hearing—and only to have the whole matter washed out because some third party has gone to another court and applied for custody.

I think this is something that should have been addressed by the minister, not alone but in conjunction with the Attorney General, if we're talking about the best interests of the child. The jurisdiction is confused. It's overlapping, it's awkward and it doesn't help a child.

Having said that, I am prepared, as my colleague has indicated on behalf of this party, to support this bill in principle, again with a view to returning to this House a bill which is vastly improved and which can spell out something of a philosophy of protection both for the family and the child, a philosophy of concern for prevention rather than for crisis intervention, a philosophy which could make us leaders in Canada instead of followers, as we so often are in these very difficult areas.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I will not take a great deal of time on this bill. I guess the only saving grace about the bill is the fact that it is wide open and it will go to committee where we will have an opportunity to amend it, because as I look at the bill I am dismayed. You know it was 1971 when I started to agitate for some reform to the Child Welfare Act and as the critic for this party continued that for four years.

In fact in 1975 we finally had hope that we would get a chance to look at some meaningful reform in the Child Welfare Act. The then minister (Mr. Brunelle), on suggestion of the former member for Nipissing, Mr. R. S. Smith, the member for St. George and I, invited Judge Thomson to a meeting over in the Macdonald Block with a group of people. The minister was kind enough to say to the opposition parties—maybe he had a premonition of what was coming—that they could bring in people to take part in that first hearing or first discussion. Judge Thomson was one of three to address the group and all of us had people there because there was some hope that the minister of the day would have the act rewritten with the emphasis on prevention, and ultimately, if need be, rehabilitation.

Well, we all know what happened. The minister of that day was—

Mr. McClellan: Thrown out on his ear.

Mr. Martel: —moved to another area of jurisdiction. We had a new minister who scuttled the whole idea of looking at the Child Welfare Act. We now have this bill before us; it comes as a result of a number of green papers and this is supposed to be just the interim legislation, because the real stuff is coming somewhere down the road.

Mr. McClellan: In the sweet by and by.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those of us who have been here a few years longer than the minister thought, in 1971 to 1975, that the effort in 1975 was going to lead to something meaningful. There were all kinds of amendments, and like this bill they really didn't deal with prevention. Here we are today with the same sort of bill, which doesn't deal with prevention. In fact we will still deal with crisis-oriented situations; there's nothing in the bill that alters that one jot, nothing. Look at the bill; you know it's the most ridiculous thing. So what if we let the press in, and that's a great move forward. How is that preventive? Just take any one you want; curfew in street trades, abuse registry—my golly, that's nice stuff, but what does it do to prevent the destruction? It's not going to do a lot.

For example, it's not going to get a field worker to spend, as I have suggested for a long time, three or four days if need be in the home to try and assess where the difficulty is; to determine what's creating the problem; to determine if it can be resolved without splitting up the family. That's not going to happen under this act, and don't tell me it could happen before because most of the social workers involved in the field have too big a caseload and they can't cope. They can't cope with spending that much time with a family or making the number of visits necessary.

What about rehabilitation, getting some assistance for the child once he's been released from wherever to make sure that the same thing doesn't occur once he's back in the natural setting? What about trying to utilize the schools to detect problem areas and prevent a crisis situation from occurring? Surely that's what we should be talking about, how to try to prevent the crisis from occurring if at all possible. Teachers are well aware or can detect when a child is having problems. It shows up in his attitudes; it shows up in his marks; it shows up in such a variety of ways. All of a sudden his total personality changes, and one has to understand there is a problem developing somewhere.

How does one work under the terms of this bill with all its nice amendments to prevent that crisis from developing? It's not there. That's why my colleague speaks happily about the possibilities that are going to occur as a result of the hearings that will take place in the fall with the possibility of moving a good number of amendments. I suggest we get together very quickly in the game. I say to my friends in the Liberal Party, to assess where we want to go. That's the way, without voting against each other, to rewrite the Child Welfare Act in totality so that it is prevention-oriented and not crisis-oriented any longer.

We should move to move amendments that will make it possible for there to be some meaningful rehabilitation once the child is back in the natural setting. I say to my friends to my right we should do that readily and quickly for the sake of the child. As I read through the various amendments in this thing that I have before me—and I call it a thing; really, after this many years it is almost ludicrous. It includes the society's budget, capital grants payable to societies, definition of parents and place of safety.

Hon. Mr. Norton: What are you going to do, abolish the society's budget?

Mr. Martel: Now there's one. I want to tell you that sometimes the place of safety certainly wouldn't be the children's aid society, if it is anything like the children's aid society in Sudbury and the way it can respond, as it did with the Savard case. A more distasteful exhibition I have never come across in my life than what was done, not only by the society to me on an agreement, but what was done to the minister's own staff by that society. It was a disgrace what that children's aid society did. There should have been a house cleaning. My golly, a place of safety!

The bill deals with transfer of proceedings to another court and independent legal representation of children. It goes on and on for 30 amendments. If the minister can find for me in there some real effort at prevention and some real effort at rehabilitating the child, then we have moved a long way. I don't see it; maybe the minister can explain to me where it is. If it's short-term legislation, I can assure him that by the end of September or October, whenever it may be—unless of course we get the big threat to withdraw the bill, which has been known to happen in the last couple of months, as we have with Bill 70 sitting there—

Mr. Sterling: With 52 amendments.

Mr. Martel: Yes, but it's not being recalled. Isn't that interesting? We could have 152 amendments. The government isn't prepared to bring back Bill 70, it continues to sit on the order paper.

Mr. Gregory: He is not speaking to the principle.

Mr. Martel: When we talked about Bill 19, the Mental Health Amendment Act, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) said: "I won't bring it back."

Mr. Gregory: Is that part of the principle?

Mr. Martel: I say to my friend the minister that he might end up in the same position as his colleague the Minister of Health, his colleague, the Minister of Labour (B. Stephenson); and I understand the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)—

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is in your hands to put me in that position.

Mr. Martel: It is in our hands to bring in positive legislation which will be preventive in nature. I hope the minister is prepared to join in that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In the spirit of co-operation in a minority government.

[9:45]

Mr. Martel: I haven't seen that work in those very important bills like the Mental Health Act and the Occupational Health and Safety Act.

Mr. Sterling: Maybe this will be the first.

Mr. Martel: Maybe this minister is prepared and maybe some of the people who were instrumental — maybe Judge Thomson who sat in that first meeting in 1975 prior to the 1975 election and I think was intrigued with the idea of rewriting the whole act; and I suspect that is ultimately what we will have to do, rewrite much of the act in order to bring it in line with what we need today. I am sure the minister is prepared to co-operate with that, being the fine fellow that he is—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Co-operation is a two-way street. I've been open, responsive—

Mr. McClellan: You got your amendments; we should get ours.

Mr. Martel: We have given the minister an opportunity. He has moved 28 or 29 or 30 amendments and we are prepared to accept them, all right? We were prepared to accept most of these amendments and I hope the minister is prepared to accept most of our first 29 or 30

Hon. Mr. Norton: I should hope so.

Mr. Martel: —and being the co-operative fellow that he is I know—

Hon. Mr. Norton: Not sight unseen.

Mr. Martel: No, not sight unseen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I suggest that the member for Sudbury East and the minister withhold this discussion until a more appropriate time?

Mr. Martel: I am speaking to the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, and some of the recommendations that will make it a meaningful exercise.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We have six more bills before 10:00.

Mr. Martel: I suspect that won't occur. To save time, just to let the minister know that we will be back with our 29 or 30 or so amendments, in the spirit of co-operation to get this done and try to leave the minister in a good frame of mind so he will accept our amendments. I will pass this on to whoever wants to become embroiled in this battle.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I just want to make a few comments. I, too, am very pleased that this entire bill has been brought in front of the Legislature. I think this will provide an opportunity for workers in the field and other people who are interested, clients as well, to come before the committee and give their impressions of how the child welfare system in this province is working. It is something that we have asked for many times over the last year that I have been here and the government has not seen fit to look into the administration of the Child Welfare Act. I suggest to the minister and to the government that maybe now we will find out what really is happening out there. I think the government will be convinced by finding out what really is happening that some of the amendments we will be putting forward are needed and should have been put forward by the government.

I would like to comment on a couple of the amendments and my reaction to them. Certainly we will get into them and other issues in much more detail during the committee hearings.

I was very disappointed to see that the care by agreement, or the non-ward agreement, has not been changed to a greater extent. I know from when I worked in the field that particular process—non-ward agreement—is abused by the societies. The agreements are used in an effort to stay out of court.

In my opinion they should be used only in cases not involving protection—short-term care when maybe a parent has to enter a hospital for a few weeks or something like that. They should not be used in a case of protection: those cases should go before a judge and the court system should make the decision. I really think that care by agreement or non-ward agreement provides for little or no accountability. Therefore I think very strict guidelines have to be drawn up to make sure the societies do not abuse them.

I also was somewhat disappointed in the legislative changes about the adjournments. I know, again from experience, there are too many adjournments taking place. I like the original proposal—I think a 30-day adjournment was going to be provided, although there were no limits on the number of adjournments as I recall. I would think this is something that will have to be looked at very closely. It is very traumatic for a family and a child to have to go into court. They come out of court after a five-minute session in which the judge adjourns the whole thing and they are still in limbo. I think we will have to look at that very closely and see if somehow we can limit it to a much greater extent.

I was pleased to see that the terms and conditions of supervision can form part of a supervision order. I think that builds in a great degree of accountability and provides a measurement for the courts to find out how much progress is being made by the children's aid societies. However, I was a bit disappointed to see that maybe the supervision order should be included as part of the two-year period whereby a child is left in limbo. Under the suggestions, I believe a child can be in care under a non-ward agreement and society wardship for up to two years. If we're going to leave it at two years for intervention on the part of children's aid societies through the courts, supervision orders also should form part of that two years. That's something we can possibly look at in committee.

I noted the minister had changed his suggestion of reviews of crown wardship and made them administrative reviews. That's a whole area we will have to look at again. As my colleague from Bellwoods said, crown wardship up to this point has been something where a child was relatively secure, whether he was in a group home of children's aid or whether he went on to adoption. What is happening through some of these suggestions is that crown wardship is becoming a form of temporary wardship and that worries me.

The main problem that is not addressed, as has been noted by other members of the Legislature tonight, is the problem of prevention versus protection. If the minister examines what children's aid societies consider to be prevention, they basically say that prevention is preventing a child coming into care. Sometimes that's good and sometimes it's not too good. There are many cases where children are left at home when they shouldn't be left at home. The children's aid chalk it up as a success case if the child remains in its parents' home for a certain length of time rather than coming into care. I think this leads to some of the problems we saw earlier this year and last year with child abuse cases.

I know from experience. At one time, when I worked at children's aid, I had the unfortunate experience of having to go into a home to remove four children because their baby sister, a 15-day-old baby, had been killed by the parents. That's not a pleasant experience. The children's aid society had been involved with that family for about three months, working with the other children with suspected child abuse.

When the other children were examined in detail at the hospital it was found that there had been broken bones that had healed over.

In my opinion, there was no excuse for that case. Those children should have been taken into care long ago. But this type of thing happens because of the philosophy of the children's aid society, and of the ministry, that children are best with their biological parents at all times and that prevention and success mean leaving the kids in their home with their parents. That has to be looked at very carefully.

I personally don't feel children's aid societies can do the type of job of prevention many of us would like to see. The types of prevention I look at are the types my colleague from Bellwoods mentioned, such as day care—that's a real form of prevention—or other forms of teaching parents how to be parents, teaching them skills of parenthood. I think those are things that can be provided by other agencies, and I don't think they can be adequately provided by children's aid societies.

The primary purpose of children's aid societies should be to aid and protect the child. If we're going to talk about prevention, as I hope we will, I think we might have to look at another agency; we might have to look at separating the functions somehow within the child welfare system.

I want to comment about one final thing. I know we want to get on to other bills.

Last year in estimates, when I mentioned in-service training for those working with families that are suspected child abusers or families that have abused their children, I suggested to the minister that in my opinion the children's aid workers in most agencies across the province were not skilled or trained to work with those families. I still think that.

A social worker who goes to work for a children's aid society might have a bachelor of social work degree or a bachelor of arts degree, but there is no specific training where the social worker can learn a specific skill of how to work with specific types of problems.

The in-service training I have seen within the societies has been inadequate, to say the least.

As I said to the minister last year in estimates, when I started at the Essex County Children's Aid Society, in my orientation period I had more time spent with me by the administration in teaching me how to use the switchboard and the phones than I did on how to work with children-abuse families. I think that's something the minister and the ministry are going to have to say to children's aid societies: "Your primary purpose is the protection of children and you are going to offer these types of in-service training."

Last year the minister said that's not his responsibility, and that children's aid societies are private agencies. I think the Child Welfare Act is a provincial law. The government funds the children's aid societies and the minister can take that kind of responsibility and provide that type of direction. I hope we'll see that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I certainly would hope they would hire a social worker who already knew how to handle a telephone.

Mr. Cooke: They did that; that might say something about the Essex Count Children's Air Society, and maybe it's intended to.

Those are some of the things I wanted to talk about. There are many other issues that are addressed in the green paper and then in the legislative amendments that I hope we'll get into in great depth. I might say to the minister that I've already spoken to some social workers in different children's aid societies and told them that the entire bill had been introduced. All of them were elated that they would have the opportunity to come and speak to the social development committee and suggest their amendments.

Mr. McClellan: This is an historic event.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In the time remaining I don't know how I can possibly respond to all of the matters that were raised by the honourable members opposite.

Mr. M. Davidson: Don't try. Just take five minutes.

Mr. Cooke: Just agree that we're right.

Mr. McClellan: Concede—capitulate.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I shall try to abbreviate my remarks. I would first of all like to express sincere regret that the member for St. George (Mrs. Campbell), who was so concerned that I be attentive to her remarks, was unable to be present so that she could be attentive to my responses.

Mr. M. Davidson: Don't say it, Keith. She's right outside the door.

Hon. Mr. Norton: However, in the absence of the honourable member—

Mr. McClellan: You will be sorry you said that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I might well be.

Mr. Cooke: Here she comes.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would like to initially indicate that I bring these legislative amendments before the House, as I think the honourable members opposite will acknowledge, in good faith—

Mr. McClellan: Are you going to take that lying down, Margaret?

Mrs. Campbell: I didn't hear what he said. Are we dealing with mala fides?

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, I had commented that I regretted very much that the member for St. George wasn't here to be attentive to my remarks since I had been brought to attention for not being attentive to hers. I'm very pleased to see that she is now in the House.

Mr. B. Newman: She heard everything. She heard it all.

Mr. McClellan: Your abject apology is accepted.

Hon. Mr. Norton: In terms of the concern that some of the members opposite had expressed relating to the extent and the speed with which the amendments have appeared, I want to emphasize—and I'm sure the honourable members opposite understand—

Mrs. Campbell: We didn't say speed. It was the lack of it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: All right, the lack of it, then is what was expressed. I think that the honourable members opposite really do understand that when dealing with an undertaking of the magnitude—

Mr. McClellan: Sort of like property tax reform—it takes time.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —that we have undertaken—and I say “we,” because I fully recognize that although the initiative was a government initiative, it is something that can only see fruition with the support of the whole House. I realize that I and the government, if we are to see the changes in terms of children's services in this province through, must depend upon that support.

Mrs. Campbell: And we on yours.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would hope that the honourable members opposite would also realize, as I indicated almost a year ago now, or perhaps even a little more than a year ago, that the kinds of major changes or complete restructuring that they may wish to see at this point in time, I really do believe take very careful planning and forethought. As I indicated a year ago, I do not see that there would be interim amendments, and we have already begun work on the development of the omnibus legislation which will take a longer period of time.

I think it's important that we bear in mind that original commitment and the fact that so far we are still essentially on schedule in terms of the commitments that I made to this House. I would hope that I could rely upon the honourable members opposite—

Mr. McClellan: You keep changing the schedule.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—to be as sincere in their commitment that they have expressed to the restructuring of the children's services system in this province. If they should think that it is something that can be totally restructured in the course of a few weeks of a committee sitting, then I would urge them to take the—

Mr. McClellan: Don't be silly.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well, there were certainly suggestions made tonight that the restructuring would take place in the course of the committee deliberations.

[10:00]

Mr. Cooke: It would probably take a new government.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think it is important to realize that what we have before us tonight is not something which was hatched and grew up in an ivory tower.

Mr. McClellan: Don't set up straw men.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is based upon proposals brought forward—

Mr. McClellan: Don't set up straw men; you're beating your gums for nothing.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It resulted in at least 126 briefs, in many cases very comprehensive ones, coming from people involved in children's services across this whole province—the very agencies you refer to, and in some cases individuals. Those were carefully analysed, digested and responded to and gave rise to the very changes that some of the honourable members in their comments tonight have observed between the green paper and the form of the legislation.

The consultation process so far has been very successful. I think it is one of the most important things that we have undertaken, certainly in the time that I have been a member of the Legislature—which is not a very long period of time I must admit. It is a very important undertaking and it is a larger undertaking than most other jurisdictions in the western world have undertaken with respect to children's services.

Mr. McClellan: Rubbish. That's just rubbish.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have looked and my staff have looked at the experience of other jurisdictions. I would urge opposition members to do so as well, because more jurisdictions have failed than have succeeded in the kinds of undertaking that we have made. I really do believe very sincerely in the question of the timing and the opportunity to involve—

Mr. McClellan: If you only do what you were going to do, it would not matter how long it took.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—the persons upon whom we ultimately are dependent for the execution and the carrying out of children's services throughout this province. It cannot all be done centrally by members opposite and I and others.

Mrs. Campbell: You were right when you said execution. We like to think of it as implementation.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I say execution in the best sense of the word.

I do think members have to bear in mind the sensitivity of this whole process in terms of contemplating amendments. It is when the member for Bellwoods talks about a radical restructuring that I take some solace in the more moderate approach of his colleague from Windsor-Riverside, who doesn't refer to radical restructuring. I would hope that we be careful that—

Mr. McClellan: Does "radical" terrify you? Does it give you palpitations?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perhaps that word in his mind means something different from what it means in mine.

Mr. McClellan: I hope we didn't scare you too badly.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am prepared to accept radical change, but I think that the important counterbalance to that is that it be change that takes place within a context of planning and forethought, that really is sensitive to the delivery of this service across the province, not the kind the thing that one sitting in a committee or in an ivory tower somewhere decides, with a stroke of a pen, that they are going to do to restructure the whole thing; that's just not realistic.

I urge members to work co-operatively with us to see this through. I am open to constructive suggestions with respect to amendments. I think there are a variety of things which we realistically must bear in mind in terms of the rate with which the change can take place. I hope that before it goes to committee to have an opportunity to speak to members more fully on the concerns that I have in that area.

Mr. McClellan: Sounds like a threat for Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Certainly the amendments that the member for Bellwoods referred to, well reasoned amendments that would strengthen this legislation, I would welcome.

The other thing I would welcome—and there have been a number of references tonight to the absence of any legislative framework for prevention—I would implore members that if they have or can develop proposals for a legislative framework for prevention, please present them to me if they can before committee so that we can give them very careful consideration. I assure the House that if there is any way in which we can act more effectively in the area of prevention, and I think that it requires far more than simply legislative framework—

Mr. McClellan: Oh we will.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If there is any way in which we can do more tell us. There was repeated reference to absence of a framework in the legislation, so if members have proposals please present them to us at the earliest date so that we can give them careful consideration. I do wish to be co-operative in this process. I do hope that members are sincerely intending to reciprocate.

I won't get into the discussion that arose at times. For a moment I thought we were dealing with our estimates in the estimates debate when we got talking about home-makers' services and nursing services and started to go through that whole process.

Mr. McClellan: They are preventive services in case the minister doesn't know.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I agree, of course they are; and I am not denying that. I would only ask the member for Bellwoods, when he issues these outrageous press releases also to take the time to read the press response, because each of the things on which he had, uncharacteristically, superficially drawn conclusions, I did have an opportunity to respond to. It was one of those rare occasions where the press actually presented both of our arguments quite faithfully.

Mr. McClellan: The press always does that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Obviously the member for Bellwoods did not read the responses, even as presented in the press, because he still is labouring under the same misapprehensions that somehow I magically returned $44 million to the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough).

Mr. Makarchuk: Your response comes from the Treasurer. It doesn't come from you.

Hon. Mr. Norton: No, my response comes right from me.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, it doesn't; it comes from over there. You pick up the crumbs.

Mr. McClellan: You are simply a puppet.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I can assure members that I will leave those matters for the estimates debate.

Mr. Makarchuk: You dangle at the end of a slender string. You are a puppet on the end of a string.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I very much regret I have only had one day of estimates during this session. I was looking forward to them very much.

Mr. Speaker: Order. All members of this House have had an opportunity to discuss this bill on second reading. Show some courtesy and allow the honourable minister to reply uninterrupted.

Hon. Mr. Norton: My last comment was simply that I had been looking forward very much to the estimates debate, which unfortunately will be very brief this session I gather.

Mr. McClellan: I hope the minister is going to be brief.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I just point out that in terms of specific responses to the honourable members opposite, as I say I simply haven't time to go through all of them. With respect to the best interest test—and I believe it was the member for Bellwoods who expressed concern about the absence of any specific reference to risk—I would think that risk is one of the primary concerns; and perhaps that is why it was not expressly provided, because it is assumed that would be the primary concern under those circumstances.

Mr. McClellan: Yes, but that is not what happens.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The reference here, if one looks at it, is suggesting that it is in the best interest of the child in the circumstances, having regard, to all other relevant considerations. It then lists some seven considerations. It is not in any way exhaustive; it is simply to offer some guidelines. As the member for St. George has suggested, it may be of as much value to the societies as to the judges. I hope those are the kinds of things we can discuss reasonably in committee and go into in more detail than we have tonight.

On the concerns that are expressed on the proposals for care by agreement, a continuation with slight modifications from previous provisions, I am certainly willing to consider the concerns the honourable members opposite have expressed. My feeling is the provision for an involvement on the part of a child after a certain age is a recognition of the rights of that child to a degree that some reasonable involvement is important. One of the concerns I had in practising in the law courts in the province was that at times there was too little consideration given to the child and the child's concerns.

Mrs. Campbell: Precisely.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The point that the member for St. George has made tonight relating to the opportunity, at least for the child and the judge to have some exchange, whether it is in the context of the full court hearing or not, is an important consideration. I don't believe there is anything at the present time to prevent that, but if some express provision would help, then that certainly is something I would support. But we must not fall into the trap of forgetting, whether we are social workers, lawyers, legislators or whatever, that sometimes it is amazing at what tender years a child can have very valid concerns to express.

Surely if we are concerned about children's rights, it has to extend at least to the right of the child to be heard and to understand, to the fullest of his capacity at his age, what the proceedings are about. I think we have only to look at some of the early history of the juvenile courts to understand some of the travesties that took place in the interests of the child, if you wish—at least, that would be the opinion of those who participated.

Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to go on at great length. Perhaps one final thing I would comment upon—again, I'm willing to discuss this with the honourable members in committee—is the question of crown wardship and the concern that there might be an undermining of the security of crown wardship. In fact, the reverse was the intention; that is, where a child might end up in limbo, where there was a lack of a clear plan for the child, where the child had become a ward and no planning had been made for placement in an adoptive home, or perhaps no concrete or specific plans were worked out in a period of two years, I would think it would be reasonable under those circumstances to review that, so there is some degree of accountability as to what in fact is being done with a child who has become a ward, who has not been placed for adoption. I'm not suggesting that if there has been an adoption the child be brought back for a review, not that kind of uncertainty, but to ensure that something constructive has been done on behalf of that child.

Mr. McClellan: That wasn't my understanding of it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Perhaps, again, we can clarify that in further discussions. We certainly have no intention of bringing adopted children back to be reviewed.

Mr. McClellan: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is to ensure that something constructive is done and that there are not long periods during which the child may sit in limbo, if you wish.

Mr. Speaker, I will terminate my comments at this point.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for the standing social development committee.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH CENTRES ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 115, An Act to revise the Children's Mental Health Centres Act.

Mrs. Campbell: Surely the minister has an explanation of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have any opening comments?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I hadn't intended to make any.

Mrs. Campbell: We invite them.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wonder if the honourable member could point specifically to what areas she would like me to discuss.

Mrs. Campbell: No, I'd like the minister to explain this bill.

Hon. Mr. Norton: One of the concerns that has been expressed by the members opposite relates to funding.

Mr. McClellan: Don't anticipate. Why doesn't the minister let me make my remarks before he responds to them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I had suggested that I would. Mr. Speaker, I don't believe there is any requirement that I go through the bill first.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to this bill on second reading?

The honourable member for Sarnia.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly pleased to see An Act to revise the Children's Mental Health Centres Act. I know that in this area there certainly is great room for improvement over what now exists. There are certain items in this act, that if they had been in force in previous years might have prevented some of the difficulties that have been encountered with certain groups or centres in the past. It is hoped that this bill will provide for proper supervision and regulation, and the minister will have the prerogative to step in to look after any situation that is not being handled in the best way for handling children's mental disabilities by the centres that care for them.

I'm very interested to hear what the minister has to say about this bill. I want to see it given second reading and referred to committee, of course, so that at that time we will be able to study it in depth.

That is all I have to say about this bill at this time, Mr. Speaker.

[10:15]

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I'll be mercifully brief. I appreciate the indulgence of the House during my last speech, which I appreciate was boring in the extreme.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I wasn't here.

Mr. McClellan: Do you want me to give it again?

Mrs. Campbell: No!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I promise to read it in Hansard.

Mr. Makarchuk: I want that in writing.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Bellwoods said he would be brief.

Mr. McClellan: I'm rising to oppose Bill 115. I'd like to set out very briefly the reasons for doing so.

In the first place, I have a minor but important objection which I think refutes the remarks of the member for Sarnia that this bill will redress the abuses which have taken place in the past.

The green paper proposed that children's mental health centres be non-profit corporations. Unfortunately, "non-profit" has been removed from Bill 115 and they have simply to be corporations, profit or non-profit. I feel that the green paper was correct in the first instance, that children's mental health centres ought to be non-profit corporations. Should this bill pass on second reading, as I guess it will, we will move in committee that "non-profit" be reinserted in section 5 where it originally was. The policy and the principle have been stated on numerous occasions—on both sides, I think, but quite clearly in this party at any rate—that these kinds of services ought to be provided on a non-profit basis, period.

The major objection I have to the bill has to do with the funding provisions, which are really the central part of this bill. There's no mistake about it. What this bill does is to remove funding for children's mental health centres under the Mental Health Act, through which they have always been funded, and to place the funding provision in the regulations with no indication whatsoever how children's mental health centres are to be funded in the future. All it will do is place the funding mechanism in the regulations, and we are asked to pass the bill and to rely again on the good intentions of the minister—

Mrs. Campbell: It's like a blank cheque.

Mr. McClellan:—blank cheque, as the member for St. George rightly describes it—to come up with a funding proposal that is fair, just and equitable. I'm sorry, that's not good enough. I know what the funding sections of the interministry committee on residential services had to say about funding residential services. They talked about the dichotomy between services like children's mental health services which were funded under Health on an insurance principle, on a universal basis, and, on the other hand, services within Community and Social Services which were financed on the welfare principle.

I am not prepared to see any children's services moved from the insurance principle, from the universal principle, to a welfare principle. What welfarization of services means is that services become available on the basis of means testing, or needs testing, or income testing, and the history of funding within the Ministry of Social and Community Services on the welfare basis is mean and nasty. There is no other way to describe it.

Their record is mean and punitive. They like to provide services on the basis of humiliating and discriminatory tests applied to individuals as a condition of eligibility. They like to provide funding to groups, organizations and municipalities on the basis of inadequate cost-sharing provisions. Their record is one of meanness and cheapness.

We are not prepared to see this happen to the one program in the children's services field which has up to now been funded on the basis of adequacy and on the basis of 100 per cent funding without any screening, without any humiliation and without any demeaning means tests or income tests. We are not prepared to take the chance that the Ministry of Community and Social Services will standardize the funding mechanism on the basis of its mean and punitive penchant for means testing or income testing.

That may or may not be the minister's intention, but I have no intention of giving carte blanche to that ministry with its record. If the minister has a proposal to standardize funding, he has to tell me what it is before I will vote for it.

Mrs. Campbell: I invited the minister to address the assembly on this bill because I had some very deep reservations. They have been expressed in part by the member for Bellwoods. There is another aspect to the bill itself which really seems to feed in to the uncertainties of funding. If one looks at sections 5 or 6, we seem to be dealing with whether or not a corporation is financially capable and so on. There is nothing addressed to the quality of care, there are no criteria in this area.

Ever since I have come into the House we have complained about the fact that in so many of these cases the standard seems to be the physical standard and the physical plant and not the type of program or the kind of care which in our view is very important and fundamental to the care of children in this area.

I see that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) is with us. I'm sure he will recollect that kind of debate which took place year after year in his estimates as we concerned ourselves—not in this case because it was otherwise constituted—about areas where we felt there was more emphasis on the physical plant than there was on the care and the program within the institution or within the framework of it.

Mr. Haggerty: The honourable minister had great understanding of the problems.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, he had indeed. One certainly regrets that his concerns, which were real concerns which everyone recognized as such, were not shared by other members of the government at the time when he bore the responsibility for this ministry.

There is no question, as I see it, that the minister must be prepared to spell out in this statute in very clear terms the type of criteria for funding and the basis for the funding so that we may be assured that there is stability in the funding and that it relates both to the physical plant and also to programs to be conducted within the plant. I am not going to, and my colleague, speaking for the Liberal caucus, has said we are not going to refuse this bill at this time. But the minister must be absolutely certain that he must meet these very real concerns as the bill goes to committee or I believe that we can all assure him of a very rough passage in that particular field. If he wants our co-operation, I have to point out that we too need to have his co-operation in meeting our concerns in this area.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other honourable member wish to speak to this bill? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, I think I can probably do it in three minutes.

Mrs. Campbell: Good. The amendments are all ready.

Hon. Mr. Norton: First of all, addressing the issue of funding. I am not sure if the honourable members are aware that there is no change in the provisions of this legislation in funding procedures from either the Children's Mental Health Centres Act or the Mental Health Act.

The concern the member for Bellwoods addressed himself to, if I understood it correctly, does not represent any change in authority as far as funding is concerned. Precisely the same provision exists in both of the other acts. If he felt that somehow this act was giving to me or to my ministry greater discretion, then I would be prepared to show to him the provisions in the other legislation which are identical to that. It is not a change in terms of the present funding for Children's Mental Health Centres or the provisions under the Mental Health Act.

As to the concerns expressed by the member for St. George relating to standards and so on, I can assure her it is my intention that if this bill does not go to committee until—I don't think there is a firm schedule yet, but I've heard suggested some time in September, perhaps—

Mrs. Campbell: Or October.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Well, whichever. I hope it is before the House resumes. And I hope the committee will soon tell me so I can plan my summer. We hope by then to have standards available for consideration, which could be looked at by the committee as well at that time.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of second reading of Bill 115 will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Call in the members.

Some hon. members: No, stack it.

Mr. Speaker: Is there an understanding?

Hon. Mr. Welch: The understanding was to stack this until the completion of all of the minister's bills.

Mr. Martel: It's what they call a one-shot vote.

UNIFIED FAMILY COURT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 116, An Act to amend the Unified Family Court Act, 1976.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for the standing social development committee.

CHILDREN'S INSTITUTIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Norton moved second reading of Bill 117, An Act to revise the Children's Institutions Act.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have some remarks to make on Bill 117.

On motion by Mr. McClellan, the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, it was my undertaking that we would keep members advised on a daily basis.

Tomorrow afternoon when the orders of the day are called, we will start with the 13th order, which is Bill 112. Once second reading of this bill is completed—that is going out to standing committee—we will return to the Minister of Community and Social Services for the balance of his legislative package, Bills 117, 118, 119 and 120.

Following that we will go to second reading of Bill 124, Bill 126 and, hopefully, have time to complete Bill 35 in committee of the whole.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, have we in fact directed Bill 115 to the social development committee?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JUNE 20, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

CHILD ABUSE

Hon. Mr. Norton: In February I announced the appointment of a task force chaired by Dean Ralph Garber of the Faculty of Social Work, University of Toronto, to examine the services provided by Ontario's children's aid societies with regard to the management of child abuse cases.

The task force was appointed because we recognized that there were problems in the handling of child abuse in Ontario. The mandate was to inquire into the management of child abuse cases by the 50 children's aid societies and into the services offered to abused children and their families.

In fulfilling this function the task force commissioned research to provide it with necessary information. In addition, opinions, viewpoints, and submissions were invited from children's aid societies, community groups, staff associations, interested citizens and professionals throughout Ontario.

I am pleased to table the report of that task force today. It is one which my ministry is considering very seriously. We are analysing the recommendations and their implications and we will act promptly on them wherever possible.

At this time I would like to thank Dean Garber and the other members of the task force on child abuse, all of whom volunteered their time, for having undertaken a great deal of work and for having produced a comprehensive report in a short period of time.

I would also like to thank all those people and groups who submitted their views to the task force. I particularly would like to thank the children's aid societies for their co-operation throughout. Without their thoughtful and sincere contribution, the work of the task force and the report—copies of which are being distributed today—would not have been possible.

I want to draw the attention of members to the first paragraph in the summary of recommendations, since it appears not only to raise concerns about the present arrangement of services but to find them completely wanting in their ability to protect children.

While my ministry can see merit in the recommendations, I cannot, as minister, accept the blanket nature of the summary's first sentence. I think we have to recognize that a great deal of good work has been done over the years by the children's aid societies. I am confident that a very great number of children have been and are being well protected.

I want to stress as well, however, that I am very concerned about the substantial variations in the levels of service among the societies, and the fact that many societies have not developed guidelines to assist in critical decision-making. Both of these areas are identified in the report.

The need is identified for greater supervision of societies by the province and for my ministry to develop guidelines and standards of service. Historically, our role has been to support and to assist the children's aid societies rather than to direct or to require. This is the approach taken with other quasi-private agencies.

Recent developments have led me to the conclusion that greater ministry involvement is called for. To make this possible, I have authorized additional staff for the child welfare branch. Active recruiting has been taking place over the past one-and-a-half to two years and staff has been augmented. We now have eight full-time professional staff appointed to the supervision of the children's aid societies. In addition to this, the child abuse program increased its capability to five full-time professional staff. I accept the principle of an increased ministry role and recognize that this is a departure from past policy, but one which is warranted.

The task force developed 21 specific recommendations to improve the situation. As I have noted, these will be given careful and urgent consideration. Already we are taking action in the direction proposed by the task force.

Several recommendations place responsibility on my ministry for the development of guidelines and standards of service for all aspects of child protection practices of children's aid societies, and for more intensive monitoring and supervision of the societies. I am pleased to note that standards development in all aspects of children's services is one of our priorities.

The children's services division has appointed a standards development advisory committee which is at work on the development of standards. A consultation paper on residential care standards will be released this summer.

The child welfare branch recently circulated a memorandum of guidelines respecting child abuse cases. These are necessary steps, and the task force has identified additional areas where standards development is required.

Certain recommendations have implications for other ministries—for instance, in the development and operations of interdisciplinary teams and in incorporating child abuse training into the curricula of various educational institutions. I assure the Legislature I will bring these matters to the attention of my colleagues in government and to the inter-ministerial committee on children's services which has been designated by the government to carry responsibility for the inter-ministerial aspects of child abuse, and which has a child abuse subcommittee.

The report recommends further child abuse training for professionals in the field and the establishment of interdisciplinary teams to advise on the management of child abuse cases. Over the past two years my ministry has been encouraging and funding local inter-professional seminars on child abuse, and providing active consultation to assist communities to establish planning committees and interdisciplinary teams. In order to promote this work an additional $460,000 has been allocated to the child abuse program this fiscal year.

At the present time at least 30 interdisciplinary teams have been established in Ontario. In addition, a minimum of 20 hospital-based teams have been established to advise on the treatment of the abused child and the abusing family. We are pleased with the progress that has been made so far and will be continuing to support these necessary additional efforts.

The report recommends that more attention be paid to services in the north and to native children. We have previously identified this as one of our priorities in 1978 and we have had a group studying the needs of northern areas of the province where there are disproportionate numbers of native children in care.

Several of the recommendations call for legislative changes and I am pleased to report that most of these, such as legal representation for children in protection hearings and authority for the child abuse registry, are included in the bill to revise the Child Welfare Act which I introduced two weeks ago and which received second reading last night.

The task force recommendations are extremely helpful to my ministry and they convince me we have much work to do. Both the report itself and summarized research highlight the urgent need for action. Staff of the ministry are studying the report with care and will formulate proposals for action which we will discuss with the children's aid societies this summer.

In addition to working with children's aid societies to improve the handling of cases of known or suspected child abuse, we are also as a ministry focusing our attention on prevention strategies so that we can deal with the roots of the problem.

We have commissioned the chief of child psychiatry at War Memorial Hospital of Western Ontario, Dr. Naomi Rae-Grant, to undertake a project to develop prevention strategies for application within the children's services division of my ministry.

Mr. McClellan: You've changed your tune since last night.

Hon. Mr. Norton: A flexible new proposal has been presented to children's aid societies to encourage the reallocation of money for child care into prevention initiatives. I will, of course, keep the House and the public informed about progress.

COST REDUCTIONS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce that my ministry has reduced energy consumption by approximately 25 per cent over the past two years. This reduction, which exceeds by five per cent our goal for this 24-month period, has resulted in a cost avoidance totalling $685,000.

In addition to my ministry's commitment to reduce energy consumption by a further seven per cent during the fiscal year, I have set targets for reductions in food, clothing, and other supplies. There will be no reduction in the size of portions of food served to inmates, but efforts will be stepped up to ensure there is no wastage of food. Stricter regulations will also be applied to the issuance of clothing, linen, and the cleaning and maintenance supplies. This year's cost avoidance target for these resources I have mentioned will be $679,000.

I am sure that honourable members will be pleased to learn that one of our correctional facilities, the Ontario Correctional Institute in Brampton, is involved in a project aimed at making it more self-sufficient through the use of solar energy. Through the experimental use of solar collector panels, the institute hopes to meet most of its hot water needs. This experiment is being conducted in co-operation with the Ministry of Energy, Ontario Hydro, and the Ministry of Government Services.

Efforts to conserve resources can only be successful if staff participate fully, and I am very pleased with the work performed to achieve our goals by staff at all institutions and field offices.

In summary, if we achieve our cost avoidance targets for this year—and I am confident that we will—this will represent a total savings to the taxpayer over three years of more than $1.3 million.

OIL AND GAS PRICES

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House on the Ontario government's position concerning the announced crude oil price increase of $1 per barrel scheduled for July 1 which, after a 60-day price freeze to use up existing stocks, could result in an increase of approximately 3.5 cents per gallon in the cost of gasoline on September 1. Home heating oil would increase by about three cents per gallon.

Yesterday, the Canadian Press reported that the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources had announced that the price increase results from an agreement negotiated last spring wherein the federal and provincial governments plan to continue to gradually move domestic oil prices towards world price.

Mr. Bradley: That's your friends in Alberta.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Contrary to that report, the Ontario government strongly opposed any such agreement last year and continues to do so.

Mr. Deans: That's shameful. You got us into this mess four years ago.

Mr. Ruston: Tell your friend Peter Loughheed.

Mr. Haggerty: What did you do about Ontario Hydro's increase?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: For the recollection of the House, I'm tabling a copy of Ontario's position taken at the federal-provincial conference last year.

Mr. Deans: You got us into this at the first ministers' conference. You agreed to this nonsense.

Mr. Ruston: Blame it on Loughheed, your buddy.

Hon. B. Stephenson: We did not agree to it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In essence, we stated a price increase was not justified at that time for a number of reasons. Today, those reasons are even more valid than ever.

Mr. Mancini: You are kissing cousins.

Mr. Nixon: Send the money to Alberta.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I might also say that it seems very strange to me that the federal government would in early May of this year urge the OPEC nations to maintain a freeze on world prices because the western economies were just recovering from the sharp increases of 1973, and then turn around one month later and impose such an increase on Canadian consumers.

Mr. Deans: You are just as bad.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I should like to advise the members that during the past few weeks I have had discussions with the Minister of Energy for Alberta and with the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about the proposed price increases of crude oil for July 1 and for proposed increases in the price of natural gas.

Mr. Kerrio: Darcy understands that kind of management.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Those discussions have been followed up by my officials. At these meetings we have made strong representation against any price increase at this time while the Canadian economy is soft and unemployment is high, and when inflation is still not under control.

Mr. Haggerty: What are you doing about it?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would like to assure the members of this House that I will continue to press Ontario's case with Mr. Gillespie. Even though Mr. Gillespie has already taken unilateral action on this increase, there is yet another increase proposed for next January 1, and it would help considerably if members on the other side of this House would support the government in its efforts to prevent still a further increase.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, go away.

Mr. Breithaupt: What's Joe Clark's position?

An hon. member: Look after our dear friends from Alberta.

Mr. Samis: Always passing the buck.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Now is not the time to increase the price of crude oil or natural gas. [2:15]

Mr. MacDonald: You have made your bed, now you've got to lie on it.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Such a price increase is not needed to increase the supply of either energy source and can only further undermine the economy.

Ms. Gigantes: The minister finally figured it out.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Ontario has many times been accused of taking a narrow view with respect to energy pricing. Such is not the case. It is as much in the consumers' interest as it is in the producers' interest to ensure supply. Price and supply go hand in hand.

Mr. Roy: No they don't.

Mr. S. Smith: It is our view of respective politics.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I am very confident that we don't need an additional price increase to encourage further exploration and development.

Mr. Makarchuk: This is a lot of bunk.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Exploration and development are already happening at an unprecedented level. As a result of my recent visit to Alberta, I was impressed by the optimism displayed about this country's ability to meet its future domestic crude oil and gas requirements.

Mr. Deans: Talk about flip-flopping.

Mr. Nixon: They can't wait for you to send them money.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: My discussions with the Canadian Petroleum Association, the Independent Petroleum Association and the Canadian Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors—

Mr. Nixon: That's a Conservative government out there, isn't it?

Mr. Breithaupt: Keep Alberta green.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—indicate that 1977 was a record year for activity, and projections suggest that 1978 will be even better. Indications of the growth in activity in Canada in 1977 over 1976 are that—

Mr. Deans: They have lied to us for years.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—the availability of drilling rigs peaked at 336, for an increase of approximately 10 per cent; the number of exploration and development wells drilled totalled 5,381, for an increase of approximately 11 per cent; and the footage drilled totalled approximately 18 million feet, for about a 12 per cent increase.

Mr. S. Smith: That's because the price went up.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: New reserves of crude oil and natural gas have been found and every effort is now being directed to prove up these findings so that they can be connected to transportation systems and made available to markets.

Mr. S. Smith: Will the Treasurer tell him the realities?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Although recent findings of crude oil are potentially significant, at best they might reduce our dependency on offshore supplies and not replace it. High exploration activity for conventional crude oil must, therefore, be maintained—

Mr. Swart: That was all in the paper two weeks ago.

Mr. Samis: Support Joe Clark.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—and must be supplemented by the development of synthetic crude oil from the oil sands and heavy oil deposits.

Mr. S. Smith: That's expensive oil, for heaven's sake. That is only going to go on stream if the price goes up. Will the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) explain it to him?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: It will take a concerted national effort for Canada to become self-sufficient in crude oil.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us about uranium now.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Without such self-sufficiency, Canada could be subjected to considerable inconvenience and hardship should another oil embargo on imported oil occur.

In February 1977, the National Energy Board reported that the remaining reserves of conventional crude oil in Canada totalled approximately 6.5 billion barrels, for a decrease of about six per cent over the previous year.

Mr. Deans: Their figures aren't accurate either.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We hope the growth in exploration and development activity will reverse this downward trend, but even if the trend is reversed it will become increasingly necessary to develop synthetic supplies. Present Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board estimates show that some 26 billion barrels of synthetic crude oil, or four times our known reserves of conventional crude oil, could be recovered by surface mining of the oil sands, as is being done by the Great Canadian Oil Sands and Syncrude projects.

Mr. Samis: Is that last week's figure or this week's?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Members will recall that Ontario has a five per cent investment in the Syncrude project through the Ontario Energy Corporation. It will be going into production in July and will achieve about 109,000 barrels daily by early February. For the two non-believers across the House, I am going to send them a sample from the oil sands that I picked up in Alberta last week.

Mr. Cunningham: Is this a credit course?

Mr. Nixon: What did they give you, dark glasses?

Mr. Breithaupt: They only gave you a candle and a sweater.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The Cold Lake and similar heavy oil deposits must be developed using in-situ schemes, rather than the Syncrude mining approach. These have an estimated potential of 15 billion to 30 billion barrels of synthetic crude oil.

Mr. Nixon: What an impact this is making.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: My discussions in the past few weeks also suggest that Canadians have an opportunity to benefit significantly from this industrial activity which would produce an investment of $8 billion in such projects. As members know, a major portion of that investment would be spent right here in Ontario to purchase equipment, material and services.

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you start all over again?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Ontario, therefore, has a major stake in the development of Canada's oil reserves and we must take every advantage of the opportunities which are available. In this regard, I have met with the Honourable Don Getty, Minister of Energy and Natural Resources for Alberta—

Mr. Conway: Not even the Argonauts wanted him.

Hon. Mr. Baetz:—and discussed in considerable detail the status of proposed oil sand and heavy oil projects. Mr. Getty was most encouraging about the prospects for Ontario industry and how favourably placed it is to compete for business.

Mr. Sargent: Sure he would when you gave him $100 million.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I have discussed Mr. Getty's comments and suggestions with my colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Rhodes) and I am confident that Ontario's industrial interests will continue to be vigorously pursued. We have heard much in the past few years of an energy crisis.

Mr. Roy: What a soft touch you are!

Mr. Samis: What did you say to Getty?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In my view, we have no shortage in western Canada of crude oil reserves, nor are we limited by technology.

Mr. Conway: Who wrote that for you?

Mr. Ruston: Did Joe Clark write that for you?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In our view, price is not the key issue at this time to ensure our future supplies, but rather there appears to be a serious lack of will and commitment frustrating the timely development of those reserves.

I should add, as members know, that the National Energy Board is currently conducting hearings into Canada's energy supply and demand, with particular emphasis on crude oil. Yesterday my officials presented the government of Ontario's submission to the National Energy Board. At the appropriate time later this afternoon I shall table a copy of that submission for the information of the House.

Mr. Makarchuk: Where do you stand on exports?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In line with what I mentioned earlier, one of the principal recommendations in our submission is the need for Canada to become self-sufficient in crude oil no later than by 1995, and we believe this to be a realistic goal. Our submission also stressed the need for a new process for addressing and solving energy supply, demand, transport and price problems in Canada, a process based on collaborative planning amongst the provinces and the federal government.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are you supporting exports or not?

Mr. Sargent: Are you planning a price increase?

Mr. Nixon: Boy, you should have heard McKeough when he delivered those statements. We all listened in, eh, Darcy?

CITY OF HAZELDEAN-MARCH

Mr. Roy: Darcy, are you going backwards today?

Mr. Bradley: Blow the bugles of retreat.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that later today I will introduce an Act to establish the new city of Hazeldean-March.

Mr. Bolan: Sounds like a swamp.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This will be a new municipality within the regional municipality of Ottawa-Carleton, composed of the former March township and portions of Goulbourn and Nepean townships which contain the western urban growth areas designated in the regional official plan.

The bill contains the following provisions: that the new municipality have the boundaries as indicated and have the status of a city for all purposes, save initially for having to maintain a local police force under the Police Act; that the council of the city be composed of the mayor elected at large and six aldermen elected by wards—

Mr. Nixon: We will deal with that next Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—that the composition of councils established or affected by the above proposal be provided through minister's orders, including such adjustments respecting wards and related matters as are necessary for the council of the city of Hazeldean-March and the township of Goulbourn; and that the name of the new city may be changed with a provision for a general vote.

The creation of the new city of Hazeldean-March has followed much discussion with the three existing municipalities involved, namely, the townships of March, Goulbourn and Nepean.

Everyone has agreed that establishing a single municipality for the suburban areas now growing together in this western part of the region is one of the soundest proposals made in the Mayo report.

Mr. Roy: Why don't you call it McKeough's folly?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The adjustments to the boundary proposals originally made in the Mayo report result from practical considerations, and with the understanding that future changes can be made after further study and when appropriate. This understanding applies, for example, to the northern portion of March township about whose ultimate boundaries there is not yet a consensus.

Substantial financial assistance can and will be made available under existing policy to the municipalities affected by this restructuring proposal to ensure that no municipality is left in difficulty by the fact of restructuring itself. Goulbourn township has been especially concerned about this. The council of Goulbourn has indicated by a resolution adopted on Monday, June 12, that it favours the proposal subject to the financial understandings that had been reached as of that date. The new city itself will be on a sound financial footing, assisted by the start-up and transitional moneys to which it will be entitled.

With the above in mind, the government agrees with local views that it would be well to end uncertainties and establish the new municipality now. We wish the new city of Hazeldean-March well, and we are confident the city can become one of Ontario's best-governed urban municipalities within its appropriate boundaries and scope of responsibility.

I would like to re-emphasize that the planning process in the areas affected by this bill should proceed as usual and that this legislation not become a reason for delaying plans now pending approval. I am sure that other amendments to this act and to the Ottawa-Carleton Act may be necessary but they can be dealt with at the fall session.

Mr. Conway: Next Tuesday. That's a phoney war if ever there was one.

Mr. Roy: You really don't know what you are doing.

Mr. Conway: Are you going to make Hazeldean-March part of Gatineau?

WASTE DISPOSAL

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, on June 1 the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) asked a question which has a fairly long answer which I will give as a statement rather than using question period time. I would like to answer those questions and attempt to settle some of the apparent confusion on this important issue.

The development and operation of waste management facilities have traditionally been a municipal responsibility, and it should remain so. The province's job is to see that municipal collection and disposal of garbage is conducted safely and without environmental damage. Our future responsibility is to provide guidance and to co-ordinate the efforts of municipalities in the development of shared waste management systems when required.

Mr. Deans: Are you reading this for the first time?

Ms. Gigantes: We can't hear the minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you would keep quiet over there, you would be able to hear him.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: If we had a little more quiet it would be much easier to hear.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why didn't I say that?

Mr. Peterson: The Dennis Timbrell school of mumbling.

Hon. Mr. McCague: In determining these roles we have established clear provincial objectives. Simply stated, we want less garbage and we want to recover more from the waste we produce.

An hon. member: Get rid of the Tories if you want less garbage.

Hon. Mr. McCague: We want to reduce our dependence on landfill and we want to effect all of these changes by the most efficient and economic means, and with minimum displacement of the work force.

Mr. Nixon: Go on; it's good stuff.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It gets better.

Mr. Roy: Don't be shy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will never get out of here on Friday if you don't cut it out.

Hon. Mr. McCague: The major means of achieving these objectives is reclamation, which is the basis of my ministry's resource recovery program. We have a number of projects now under way in the Toronto area which are intended to prove the viability of reclamation and to open the door to the construction of major resource recovery facilities which ultimately will lessen our dependence on landfill as a means of disposal.

Under development in Metro Toronto is the Watts from Waste project, which has reached the final design stage with construction expected to begin this year. Its purpose is to recover the energy value from about a quarter of a million tons of garbage each year by using refuse-derived fuel as a partial replacement for coal at the Lakeview generating station. This facility will have a capacity to handle approximately 1,200 tons of waste per day, and approximately 80 per cent of this flow will be recovered for energy purposes.

The glass gobler program of the Glass Container Council is now in operation in Metro Toronto. During May 260 tons of glass were recycled. Currently, collections are made at 90 commercial establishments in Toronto, and this program will be extended to Mississauga as equipment becomes available.

In addition, plans are proceeding in connection with the Toronto district heating scheme, which is based on using approximately 1,200 tons of refuse per day to produce energy. My ministry's resource recovery plant, now in full operation, can process 600 tons of waste per day and reclaim approximately 90 per cent of this flow for reuse in one form or another. At 150,000 tons per year, the percentage recovered would be 7.5 per cent of Metro's total solid waste. In addition, a large quantity of commercial wastes, such as corrugated cardboard, is recycled directly by the private sector.

We have concentrated a number of resource recovery projects in the Metro area. We believe it is expedient that Metro lead the way for other municipalities in moving away from landfill as a principal disposal method.

Of the approximately two million tons of waste produced each year in Metro, about three quarters of one per cent was recycled in 1977, the figure to which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) referred. About one half of this is made up of newspapers recovered through collection in the city of Toronto and the boroughs of Etobicoke and Scarborough; the other half comes from cans reclaimed from the ash at the Commissioner Street incinerator.

That total of less than one per cent for Metro Toronto is a long way from ideal, I agree. But the current state of resource recovery is far from ideal, not only in Ontario but in North America. Resource recovery is an undertaking which requires huge initial capital investment. At a time of economic instability, municipal governments are hesitant to make major long-term commitments involving large expenditures, despite my ministry's 50 per cent subsidy program which Ontario has offered to municipalities for the construction of resource recovery plants.

Because resource recovery is so critically dependent upon reliable markets for reclaimed material, the current economic constraints are also hindering the establishment of these markets. While resource recovery is a proven philosophy, the technology for efficient, comprehensive recycling remains unproven. A lot of work has to be done.

[2:30]

At a conference I recently attended in the United States, the technical director of the National Solid Wastes Management Association summarized the situation by saying of existing resource recovery facilities: "The results of the first generation of projects indicate that the best of them can be characterized as limited successes, while others have proven to be outright failures."

Of about 40 resource recovery facilities in the US and Canada, more than two thirds are less than fully operational today. Even the well-publicized system in the city of Milwaukee has experienced some difficulty.

The fact is that resource recovery is not an instant solution to our waste management problems in this province. We have never regarded it as such, although we do believe that resource recovery, when fully developed, will be an integral part of the efficient solid waste management system of the future.

There is a danger in looking to resource recovery as an immediate panacea and rushing into widescale construction of resource recovery plants based on the soundness of the philosophy alone. What we must do now is to test and develop workable technology and work at the development of marketable products, and the markets themselves which are required for a viable resource recycling industry. We are making progress in this direction through the ministry's experimental plant in Downsview and through our involvement in several other projects.

Mr. Samis: Jimmy Auld has met his match.

Hon. Mr. McCague: In addition to the projects in the Metro area, which I have already mentioned, today I am pleased to announce that through partial ministry funding, a study in the region of Peel is being undertaken to examine the feasibility of generating steam and energy from domestic garbage and waste paper to fuel a manufacturing plant, and to generate additional energy in the form of electricity.

Though markets for this form of energy are well established, the technology under study is unique in North America. It is highly complex, which is why we are anxious to have a detailed engineering study of the process to explore the potential that it holds for Peel, and later for other municipalities in dealing with their problems.

As we develop resource recovery, there will be a continuing need for landfill capacity in Ontario, including Metro, to accommodate waste which cannot be recycled or which has no energy value. This landfill capacity will have to be obtained in co-operation with Metro's neighbouring municipalities, and the sites must be environmentally acceptable. We have established a working committee involving Metro Toronto, York, Durham, Peel and Halton regions with the objective of developing an effective and integrated waste management plan for the greater Metro area.

With respect to regional waste disposal studies, we offer a 50 per cent subsidy for area planning studies so that municipalities can determine the most effective means of waste disposal for their unique circumstances.

Regarding the recent proposal by Crawford Allied Industries Limited to erect a recycling plant at the Maple pit, the firm's proposal was conditional upon approval of the Maple pit landfill site application.

Mr. Sargent: Time, George.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Quiet.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Since this was not approved, the firm will not be proceeding with construction of the reclamation plant.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. S. Smith: I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. I take it that the minister is explaining the discrepancy in the comments he made earlier in the House when he estimated that about 10 per cent of Metro's waste was not being recycled; he then lowered that estimate in a private communication to 7.5 per cent. I take it that what he is saying now is that it was, in fact, only three-quarters of one per cent last year, but that with the Downsview resource recovery plant he expects that it will be 7.5 per cent this year. I take it that's what he's saying.

May I therefore ask the minister to confirm that as of the end of last week—from January 1 to the end of last week—the input to the Downsview plant has been 69,239 tons; and of that, 67,448 tons went to landfill sites, with a small amount to incineration? Isn't it a fact that the Downsview station is virtually a transfer station, and that in point of fact since the loss of moisture accounts for about 1,000 tons it's really up from 0.75 per cent to 0.8 per cent and nowhere near the 10 times that amount the minister is suggesting?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The honourable member is correct in that up until the end of 1977 it was 0.75, as he suggested in a statement made on June 1 in the House. The fact is that the capability of Downsview does increase that to the 7.5 per cent. I admitted at the time that I was not sure of the 10 per cent figure and within three or four minutes I did send across to him the figure of 7.5 per cent.

Mr. S. Smith: That's true.

Hon. Mr. McCague: I said in my statement that the resource recovery plants are not the ideal solution at this point in time. He will well recognize that our plant in Downsview is an experimental one. It does have the capacity, as the statement said, to handle 600 tons of garbage per day on a two-shift basis; and yes, a good deal of it is going to landfill sites on a much compacted basis. If five truckloads come in, it goes out in one.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, would the minister not accept that, compacted or not compacted, in point of fact waste recovery recycling is virtually minimal at Downsview and that 67,500 out of 69,000 tons has gone, compacted or not, into landfill sites and therefore can hardly be held up as 7.5 per cent? Would he please check with the people in his ministry and make sure they are informing him correctly?

May I just ask in passing as well, does the minister not think that the time has come, instead of just having co-ordinating committees of Halton and Peel and all that, for the province to take responsibility for obtaining those landfill sites that are necessary?

Mr. Hennessy: We'll let the Leader of the Opposition take care of it.

Hon. Mr. McCague: That was a long statement, and a quick answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Regarding resource recovery, which we were talking about, could the minister give us the name of the firm in the Peel region which is to be assisted in the development of experimental technology to generate steam and energy for manufacturing purposes from garbage and waste paper, and also the amount of the funding from the ministry and whether there will be any rights to any patents that are developed from this new technology?

Hon. Mr. McCague: What was the latter part of the question, Mr. Speaker—will there be any patents?

Ms. Bryden: I understood the minister said it would be a new and experimental technology that he was assisting this manufacturing firm in developing. If any patents arise from that will the province of Ontario have any right to a share in the patents or proceeds?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, it's a co-operative study between Peel region, the government of Ontario and Reed Limited. Our contribution towards the cost is $300,000 and the designs will be ours on completion.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister could tell the House why on earth his ministry has been so limiting itself to the technology studies when we know, for instance, that there are open-grate garbage burners that generate steam and electricity that have been operating successfully for 30 years? What's the big holdup about this whole business of resource recovery, or energy recovery? The technology has been in Europe, it's been all over the world; and Ontario is the last place to get it.

Hon. W. Newman: You're a real expert, aren't you? We know all about it. You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. J. Reed: They've been doing it in Europe for years.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. All of the interjections add nothing at all to the question period.

Mr. Kerrio: Neither do the answers.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with that statement.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could tell us what the province gets for the $300,000 which it is going to pay to the Reed paper company for developing what appears to be, as my colleague from the Liberal Party said, a project that has already been proved in many areas on how to use garbage for steam and energy?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge the technology for the reclamation of fibre as a form of energy is not developed. It will be to not only do the design, but it will also be to assess the needs as they affect Peel region.

OIL AND GAS PRICES

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, who has sent over a few packages of crude material.

Mr. Nixon: Is that his statement?

Mr. S. Smith: This is apparently the dividend to the people of Ontario for our investment in Syncrude. I might just say parenthetically that since to bring it on stream—

Mr. Roy: Can't tell which was his statement.

Mr. S. Smith: —is going to cost $21 a barrel, I wonder how the far-sighted policy of the minister is going to bring this stuff on stream.

Mr. Nixon: He's got $200 million sunk into this.

Mr. S. Smith: But may I ask the minister—

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are disappointed that Syncrude is working, aren't you?

Mr. Peterson: Not at all.

Mr. S. Smith: It won't if you freeze the price, you know that; you know that very well.

Hon. Mr. Davis: "If" it is going to be successful the taxpayers will be the beneficiary. You people are all wrong.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask the minister whether Ontario, in view of the surplus that appears to be developing in natural gas as opposed to oil, is now proposing to unhinge or change the level at which the price of natural gas is hinged to the price of oil. Is the government making any proposals, apart from the political statement the minister made today, to separate the price of oil and natural gas and allow natural gas to fall a little closer to a market price in view of the surplus that seems to be developing in Alberta?

Hon. Mr. Davis: World market price.

Mr. Conway: Check with Joe Greene first.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We have on a number of occasions, in as forceful a way as we can, proposed to the federal government and the government of Alberta that the price of natural gas and oil should no longer continue in locked step, to loosen it up, but so far with no success whatsoever—deaf ears, just stonewalling.

Mr. S. Smith: May I, by way of supplementary—

Mr. Roy: That sounds like the leadership you have been giving.

Mr. S. Smith: I am pleased that such initiatives have been taken, and could I ask by way of supplementary—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Come on, you people were all in favour of the increase at world price two years ago.

Mr. S. Smith: I should allow the Premier the right to interrupt with a few interjections—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am just speaking to my friend.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Look at your comments on world prices two years ago May.

Mr. S. Smith: It's been a long day and there are a lot of pressures on the job.

Mr. Ruston: What is Joe Clark's position on this, Bill?

Mr. S. Smith: Could the minister table some of Ontario's interventions in this regard so the Legislature can see them? And will Ontario be intervening before the National Energy Board with regard to oil prices, and also with regard to the application that is expected from the province of Alberta to export so-called surpluses of natural gas to the United States? Will Ontario be taking a strong position against Alberta's desire to export to the United States? Will Ontario suggest instead a lower price for natural gas, so that we as a consuming province will be able to benefit from the natural gas that exists in our country rather than have it sent to the United States of America for higher prices by the province of Alberta?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will continue to do everything within our power to protect the consumer of Ontario as well as the well-being of all Canadians; to try to keep the price of natural gases down; and also certainly to prevent any kind of short-term exports, the benefits of which would accrue only to a very small segment of our society. That's been our stance; that will continue to be our stance.

Mr. Deans: Are you intervening?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: And incidentally, since the Leader of the Opposition skated a little bit on the first question, I would like to skate a little bit in reply. The fact is—

Mr. Roy: You are always skating—backwards!

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —Syncrude is coming in, and coming in extremely well. The Ontario government's very small investment is paying off very handsomely so don't be sceptical about it. We could sell our small share any time. It's going to be a huge success.

Mr. S. Smith: But at a high price.

Mr. Nixon: They have used heavy water up there.

[2:45]

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary to the minister—and I hope also he would tell us whether or not he does intend to intervene, but further to that: In view of the minister's vociferous and rather passionate opposition to the price increase as he articulated it today—and the minister seems to agree with this party that the present price is adequate to guarantee future supplies—is he prepared to implement a price freeze on gasoline across Ontario at this time?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We indicated our position on that subject some weeks ago when there was a private member's bill before this House. We frankly don't think that kind of an artificial—

Mr. Peterson: You never did it before, did you, Reuben?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —very small price freeze would help the broader problem at all.

Mr. Peterson: If we had an election would you do it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If there was an election would you still be in favour of world price?

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary to the minister: If he is going to keep on whacking us with increases every six months on the price of oil—

Mr. Yakabuski: Trudeau.

Mr. Sargent: —why doesn't he pull out the $100 million from Syncrude and get his money back?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is your leader's policy.

Mr. Roy: What does Joe Clark say?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, can the minister answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't hear that question, I'm sorry. There was a little noise back here.

Mr. Speaker: The question was are you going to take your money out of Syncrude?

Hon. Mr. Davis: A great investment.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will take that under consideration.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can say, just to show how wrong members were across the House, we could probably sell that $100 million investment in Syncrude for $140 million or $150 million right now. How's that for performance?

Mr. Roy: Just a lot of talk. Tell it like it is, Reuben, you are just going to talk a lot.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would care to elaborate on his statement that the government to which he is related is prepared to do everything in its power to protect the consumer in Ontario against unjustified increases. Given he has said he believes the petroleum industry does have sufficient cash flow and profit to meet the 1995 objectives of self-sufficiency; and given that the only thing left to him is to protect the consumer at the consumer level, what is it that he intends to do?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I think we are going to have to continue to negotiate with the federal government.

Some hon. members: And Alberta.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We hope in due course they will begin to see the wisdom of our ways.

Mr. Deans: Negotiate? Negotiate what?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Further, we will have to negotiate with the producing provinces, particularly Alberta—

Mr. Deans: That's just idle rhetoric.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: There are some leverages available to us on that score, which I frankly wouldn't want to reveal at this time. I think there are constitutional constraints that have been placed upon us here, but within that we will certainly continue our efforts to protect the consumers of Ontario.

Mr. Deans: What the minister means is there is nothing he can do. He is talking a lot of political bull.

Mr. Breithaupt: Will the Minister of Energy encourage his federal leader to make some statement on this subject so that we will have the benefit of his intervention?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will certainly—

Mr. S. Smith: Sign a letter.

Mr. M. Davidson: You are not going to get off the hook that easily.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The interjections are completely irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: We will certainly do our share to talk to our party in Ottawa, but I would hope that members opposite would do more than they have done in the past to talk to theirs—

Mr. S. Smith: Table the results.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —because for a short period at least they will still form the government. They had better convince them they should take some enlightened action.

Mr. Roy: Are you embarrassed by Joe Clark, Bill?

PROVINCIAL FINANCES

Mr. Laughren: I have a question of the Treasurer. I wonder if in the three months and some time that has passed since he introduced his budget, the Treasurer has had an opportunity to review the performance of the economy in relation to the budget he laid before us? Could he say whether, in view of the fact that the economy is not performing along the lines of some of the assumptions in the budget, he intends to lay before this chamber a new set of budgetary policies in September or early October?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have no such present plans.

Mr. Laughren: By way of supplementary: Has the Treasurer taken a look at some of the specific revenue figures and growth projections which have been made? If so, is he aware, to be specific, that the mining tax revenues which he projected at $33 million are going to be substantially reduced to $19 or $20 million; that corporation taxes will be down over $100 million, probably $150 million; that growth projections by independent forecasting bodies such as the Conference Board in Canada have been reduced since the time he brought down his budget—and they already were lower than the Treasurer's; that his deficit is going to be considerably higher than he had predicted; and further, that he is going to have some public borrowing which he indicated he would not have to do when he brought down his budget? Does he not think it is time that he laid before this chamber in late September or early October a new set of figures so that we know that the economy is being directed on a set of accurate figures?

Mr. Peterson: Will he be here in September?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Will you?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, no. I can only repeat, I see no such reason at this moment. I would take issue with the member. In the next few days we shall receive reports on the first quarter, but the economy generally is performing along the lines forecast in the budget. It is true that the conference board have lowered their forecast somewhat and their forecasts now tally with our forecasts, which is interesting. My own view at the moment is that the economy, other than the serious problems of unemployment and the still continuing problems of inflation, prompted for the most part by food prices—

Mr. S. Smith: Apart from that everything is fine.

Mr. Breithaupt: Other than those two things.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The target, the forecast figures, are pretty well, with some variation, as we had laid out in the budget. But there are two substantial differences. Members are aware that from the time of the budget until the end of the fiscal year there was, as I reported, a further drop off in our revenues, which has somewhat lowered the base on the corporate side, and a small reduction, as I recall at the moment, in the retail sales tax side. In addition, there were changes, of course, brought about by the decisions with respect to health-care financing; and there is also a large change, of course, brought about by our paralleling the federal move with respect to the retail sales tax to the extent of $143 million which necessitated—and I announced that night that we would run up the treasury bills for the time being, perhaps not for the whole year—

Mr. Sargent: And the $600,000 you gave Toronto, too.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —but for at least part of the year, to finance that run-down in revenues. But I see no reason at the moment to contemplate a change of policies.

Mr. S. Smith: Change of government would be more like it.

Mr. Laughren: A supplementary: I wonder if, when the Treasurer is talking about his projections, he could tell us as well why it was, when he tabled his report on the Ontario Youth Employment Program, he used a different set of projected employment figures for the next 10 years than those laid out by the Ontario Economic Council; where did he obtain those figures and on what basis he arrived at those numbers?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will have to get an answer to that for the member. I am not sure which figures he is using from the economic council, but I would be glad to take a look at them.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member with his second question.

AUTO PACT

Mr. Laughren: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism. In view of the answer which was tabled yesterday from the ministry in response to a question from my colleague the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) concerning the submissions which his ministry might have made to the federal government concerning the Canada-United States Automotive Trade Pact, and in view of the fact that in that answer which was tabled the ministry indicated there had been no formal proposals by the federal government to this government, and no response made by this government to the incentives proposed by the federal government; and further, that not since 1975, when the sector analysis was done by his ministry on the automotive sector, has there been any studies or any commissions conducted to look into the whole question of the fair share which Ontario should be receiving in the automobile sector?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I heard the statement, which I assume is a fact, but what is the question?

Mr. Laughren: Let me rephrase it. How is it the minister can respond to a question, indicating that absolutely nothing has been done by his ministry to look into the problem of the auto pact, and how does he justify that kind of abysmal inactivity on the part of the officials of his ministry?

Mr. Breaght: Did the minister get the question this time?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: As I recall, the question placed on the order paper was to submit the information we had submitted to the federal government. That was done. That's what was provided.

As the honourable member has pointed out, that document indicates we had had no response from the federal government. He's quite correct, as we have indicated, that we have not responded to the incentives program of the federal government because, quite frankly, there hasn't been one. There has not been an incentive program. The only incentive program we are aware of—and I think we're correct—is the Department of Regional Economic Expansion funding that is available for incentives to companies to locate in Canada. The federal government does not have an incentive program.

Mr. Laughren: In view of the fact that there are problems, as evidenced by the announcement by the federal government of the appointment of the Reisman commission and the announcement by General Motors to delay the decision on the new facility, is the minister really surprised, given the difference of opinion between himself and the Treasurer, that this kind of activity is going on both in the private sector and at the federal level? Further, is he going to make a presentation to the Reisman commission? If so, which position is going to be presented—his or the Treasurer's (Mr. McKeough)?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I don't think the member will find any great difference between my position and that of the Treasurer. As far as a submission to the Reisman commission is concerned, we will have to wait and see whether the gentleman wants to hear from us. I understand part of his responsibility is to talk to all the areas involved in the automotive industry, including the industry itself and the provinces with their positions. Obviously, he'll be discussing the matter with us.

I don't understand what the honourable member is referring to when he talks about a difference of opinion between the Treasurer and me. I don't think there is anything of any great consequence.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mr. Laughren: Is the Minister of Industry and Tourism telling us he's in agreement with the Treasurer that we should be entitled to our fair share without having to buy it and without jumping into bed with Jack Horner and going along with the sell-out he's announced?

Is the minister fully aware of the TEIGA document, which indicated there were 25,000 jobs at stake and further, that there's as much as $60 billion in investment going to be made in the auto industry between now and 1985? Does he really think Ontario or Canada is going to get its fair share if he and the Treasurer can't come to a general agreement as to what position should be put to the industry and to the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I think the honourable member is imagining certain things. The Treasurer and I, along with other of our colleagues, have met with the industry. We have not been presenting opposite views. We think there is more than one way to approach this particular problem.

I certainly wouldn't be jumping in and out of bed with Jack Horner because I'm not too sure what bed Horner is in most of the time.

Mr. Peterson: That's it. Get personal.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Breaugh: You are trying to get Horner.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: I will certainly bow to the expertise of the member for Oshawa, who's more familiar with beds than I am.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is that true?

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Concerning the other part of the question, as far as the sellout Mr. Horner has announced, unless the member was referring to the establishment of the recent commission, there haven't been any real statements made by Mr. Horner.

Mr. Laughren: Only on incentives.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: As I understand it, Mr. Horner has not made any announcement on incentives. I've had a number of discussions with him.

Mr. Cooke: A million dollars to Ford.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: We've discussed with his staff about what possible incentives might be involved, but no decision has been made in that area at all. There's been no announcement by the federal government relating to incentives. The only incentive we have heard of was the possibility of funds being made available to General Motors through the DREE program if they locate a plant in a designated area.

[3:00]

Mr. Breaugh: Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: The other one was the possibility of some funds being made available on an ad hoc basis to Ford Motor Company if a plant were to be located in Ontario. In either one of those particular cases there was no involvement of the province of Ontario. Certainly we would not be involved in an incentive program for a plant going into Quebec.

Mr. Laughren: It's not a spectator sport.

Hon. Mr. Rhodes: Secondly, there was no request of the province of Ontario to give funds towards the development of a plant by Ford. If and when such a suggestion is made to us, then a decision can be made.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the minister gets an opportunity to further discuss this matter with the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, would he indicate to him the information that he has been given from the industry
